DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the seller after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED.

£50 Given in Prizes this Year.

All societies using over 20 lbs. to have a beautiful special. Read this startling proof—"The only proof." I don't need to lecture to you. Use Royal Red and it will prove you need no lectures or papers on colour feeding. (Have on view 10 tons.)

Supplied last season: Mr. Godley 56lbs. Royal Red, Mr. Hodder 45 lbs. Royal Red. At last 1909 Crystal Palace Show, in the eight champion Norwich classes, the whole eight first prize winners were moulted on Royal Red. The eight exhibitors who won them all used about 50lbs. each Royal Red. Is there any more proof than this as to who claims the premier colour-feed? Mr. J. W. Rennie, big southern winner of 1st clear yellow, 1st yellow bens, Crystal Palace, writes: "May 3rd, 1909. All my winning Norwich were fed solely on your colour-feed, and I intend to use no other on them this year." Also supplied last season: Mr. E. Baker 200lbs. Royal Red, Sam Cook, Norwich Plainhead cup winner, 60lbs., Mr. Grey, big N.N.P.C. silver bowl winner, 30lbs., Judge Vardy 212lbs., Mr. Midgley, winner two first open Norwich at last Palace, 20lbs., Mr. Dobinson, another fist winner at last Palace, 20lbs., T. Irons 70lbs., W. Booth, birds hottest in England, 30lbs., A. Hirst 30lbs., J. Wilcock 70lbs., R. Halliday 20lbs., Cleminson and Taylor 100lbs., W. Morris 60lbs., W. Whetstone 30lbs., W. R. Miles 50lbs., J. Howard 200lbs., W. Spillman 20lbs., W. Collings 20lbs., Dr. Herd 20lbs., Tams and Sons 30lbs., W. Dormer 60lbs., G. Harland 30lbs., Mr. Hope 60lbs., J. C. Barnes 120lbs., Judge Battye 160lbs. I could fill this paper with successful exhibitors' names supplied by me last year, not with 1 or 2lbs., so as to be able to compete for specials. Anyone who saw any of above gentlemen's birds last season will admit they were the hottest out.

BIRD-OX.

It is a well-known fact that egg and bread is a dangerous mixture (given by itself) to young birds. This being so, and keeping a valuable stock myself, I have experimented for over 15 years and am certain I have reached the goal of my ambition, that is, to keep my young birds when I have hatched them, by using Bird Ox. When it is considered that only one-and-half table spoonsful is required to one egg and bread it is cheap enough for the small pocket. I have sixty grand youngsters now reared by its use. Instructions with each order. 1lb. 1/6, 2lb. 2/3, 6lb. 5/6.—R. Taylor, 288, Aqueduct-street Preston, or Cleminson and Taylor, champion Norwich breeders, Elmsley-street, Preston.

Buy Your Seed Direct From

Read the following letter, out of hundreds received:—46, Ripon-street, Attercliffe, Sheffield, May 7th, 1909.—Dear Sir,—Will you kindly send 1 cwt. of finest Spanish seed, "as per advt. in CAGE BIRDS"? I may say that the previous seed I had from you was unsurpassable in quality, and I had many of my birdy friends praising it, and asking me where I got it, and I hope that through seeing this seed supplied by you that you may obtain many new customers.—Yours truly, R. Stuart.—134, Westgate, Bradford.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE C.B.S.

Mr. Gilhespy on the Norwich Plainhead.

At the meeting held on May 6th, Mr. John Gilhespy read the following paper: Having been invited to explain for the benefit of the novices, the way in which I have worked up my strains of Norwich Plainheads, it give me great pleasure to do so. First allow me to state what is my ideal type of a Norwich bird. Get a bird as near the type of a Bullfinch as possible: which means a nice, short, thick bill, with a round head, a well filled-in neck, broad and well filled-in back, with a pair of evenly-braced wings, and short tail, with a good, broad chest clean cut away under; length not to exceed 6½ inches, carriage bold, and a good, natural colour; yellow to be silky-feathered, and the buffs nicely mealed or frosted. Second, I believe the hen to be the foundation of type and quality. I advise you to go to a breeder who has a winning strain, buy from him three hens related to each other, full of colour, type, and quality, either small or not above medium size. I prefer the little models. The reason I advise you to get them related to each other is that inbreeding has been the secret of all my success. Having the hens related saves you one year in working up a strain, which will, or should, breed you year by year birds true to type and quality. Third, you must then try to find cocks as near to type and quality. At any rate get them good in colour with grand beads and even braced wings. If they are paired up this way, I don't see any reason why your birds should not be amongst the prizes the first year. Fourth, I believe in putting a yellow cock bird to a buff hen, and a buff cock bird to a yellow hen. Of course, this includes clear, ticked or variegated.

Fifth, suppose you pair up three pairs, and you succeed in breeding young from them, carefully select those nearest to the type you are aiming at, and take the cocks from the No. 1 pair and put them to the hens from the No. 2 pair; the cocks from No. 2 pair to the hens from the No. 3 pairs and the cocks from the No. 3 pair to the hens from the No.1 or No. 2 pairs. You can even go farther and cross some of the old cocks with some of the young hens. Sixth, you will have fixed or worked up a strain in two years; now, by carefully pairing up each year, this strain should last you from 5 to 7 years. Should you wish at any time to introduce new blood into your strain, do it from the hen's side. Be certain that she is good in colour, type, and quality. Seventh, don't breed from birds with the following faults: A thin bill and narrow head, or a flat head, or long sidedness, with wings like scissors, or a hinged tail, or crouching. You may go on from year to year and not be able to breed out the above faults. I hope some of you may find something in this paper to help you to breed a few champions in the future. At some future meeting I will give you a paper on the feeding, caging, and breeding of the Norwich Plainhead.

The Chairman then invited a discussion.—Mr. Curry: Do you believe in either breeding double-yellows or double-buffs?—I do not approve of it; more especially in the case of yellows, as I have found it results in long, slim birds.

Mr. Macdonald: Do you believe that inbreeding is beneficial in other varieties?—Yes, if you are careful in selecting birds that are of strong constitution and true to type—old cocks to young hens, daughters preferred. I at one time paid 5s. 6d. for a marked bird, from which I bred an even-marked, which was in the money at its first show, where it was claimed; but I managed to keep some good green-marked birds of the same strain. I have no objections to pairing young cock birds to their mothers if their properties are good.

Mr. Macdonald: By inbreeding, do you not lose size?—No, certainly not.—Mr. Macdonald: Do you prefer the Norwich bird of to-day to the bird of a few years ago?—Give me the good mealy, chubby bird before the long birds of to-day.

Mr. T. Robson: Do you prefer buff cock to yellow hen or vice versa?—I prefer a yellow cock bird to a good buff hen at first, and then buff cocks to the young yellow hens bred off above-named pair.

Mr. Macdonald: How would you propose to get size?—Get a cock bred the third cross from the Lancashire, with good head and neck; pair him up to a nice type hen, a little model, as type comes from the hen.

Mr. Currah: Do sib. bred birds loose size and colour?—I never had difficulty that way, I always used ticked or variegated birds.—Mr. Robson: How do you like the third cross Lancs. bred?—Get the Norwich in twice.—Mr. Curry: Do you think it necessary to have a green bird in your room?—Yes, but a variegated one will do as well.

Mr. Robson: What is your opinion of this "invisible ticked question"?—They should pass as clears.—Mr. Curry: How many days do you wash your birds before a show?—Never less than 3, 5 if possible.—Mr. Robson: Do you prefer to colour-feed in cages or flights?—I prefer large flights. Slightly darken your room, and give plenty of fresh air. Don't cover your cages up with brown paper.—Mr. Mackenzie proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Gilhespy. It was supported by Messrs. Robson, Hutchinson, MacPartling, Macdonald and many others.—CURRY and HUTCHINSON, Hon. Secs.

Please accept my best wishes for the success of CAGE BIRDS.—I have been a subscriber from the first issue.—ARTHUR BULLOCK (Longton).

I and my son, E. Rink, have been readers of CAGE BIRDS for many years, writes Mr. A. B. Rink (Blackburn), and certainly consider it far and away the best published for fanciers.

CAGE BIRDS is a treat to read. I am never without it, and have taken it for the last six years. It is a grand guide for novices. I wish it every success.—CHAS. QUIRM (Donnybrook, Co. Dublin).

Under the White Rose.

THE meeting called for Saturday last by the promoters of the proposed "Green Marked Yorkshire Canary Club," was well attended, and the hopes of the most sanguine were fully realised, the "chicken" being duly hatched out. It moreover received plenty of nourishment in the shape of two valuable trophies at £5 5s. and £2 2s. respectively, and the enlistment of fifty-one members in its ranks The opening speech was made by Mr. W. H. Shackleton, who racily dealt with the need of a club for this variety, as in his opinion they did not receive the support and classes they deserved, and more particularly so in regard to the hens, which in many breeders' homes are termed "bacca brass," on the supposition that when sold you only get sufficient to buy a little "bacca," and as "bacca" has now gone up we shall have to do something to get the "bacca brass" up also. The speaker also stated that he expected the club would receive a lot of support from outside the county of broad acres—particularly Liverpool way—as the marked bird is a general favourite all over the country. Next it was proposed, seconded, and carried unanimously, that a club be formed to look after the advancement and interests of the Green Marked Yorkshire Canary, to provide competitions, and to secure classification for it at shows.

NEXT business was the election of a president, and for this office Mr. W. H. Shackleton received the solid support of all, as also did Mr. F. Armstrong for the secretarial duties. I can only say that in Mr. Armstrong we have secured a great enthusiast. There is only one thing he likes better than a green marked bird, and that is "two green marked 'uns." Next it was proposed that a committee of seven be elected to draw up rules and prepare suggestions as to routine, competitions, subscriptions, etc., not forgetting the novices. The committee meet to-day (Saturday), so things will not be long before they are in working order. Mr. W. H. Shackleton promises a £5 5s. trophy, and Messrs. Ogden Bros. a £2 2s. trophy for a commencement, and there was a statement made on Saturday that the membership will top the C.M.Y.C.C. in very little time, and they are going strong at present.

YORKSHIRE Union held a delegates' meeting on Saturday last, and the secretary will now be putting the year book into print, and all that wish to utilise its pages for advertisement had better send the matter on at once, or it will be too late. Also a wish for a working arrangement between the Y.U. and the Federated London Societies (from the latter society) was brought forward, and there is every probability of an amicable arrangement being arrived at quite early. This reminds one that the hand of friendship between the Y.U. and the C.B.U. is still wanting to be extended, the C.B.U. members at present being debarred from competing for the valuable trophies offered by the various specialist clubs at Y.U. shows. Now ye C.B.U. members, don't you think something could be done? What could be fairer than the terms offered you? Here they are, just to keep them before your memory: "That the members of each society be allowed to show at each other's shows, without fee or license." "That each society recognise each other's disqualifications and suspensions." This is practically all that is required. An amicable arrangement is certainly required.

"STRAIGHT-'UN."

Starling Burnt to Death.

A slight fire occurred in Beverley on May 1st, says a Hull contemporary. Under the eaves of the house of Mr. Bennett, in York Terrace, there was a nest occupied by Starlings. The hen bird was sitting on her eggs when a spark from a neighbouring chimney blew on the nest. The nest caught fire, and as the mother-bird would not leave her eggs, she was burnt to death. The flames from the nest ignited the dry woodwork of the eaves, which were quickly burning furiously. The fire brigade was quickly on the scene, and the fire was extinguished before much damage was done. A pathetic feature was the distress of the male Starling when he returned. He was away at the time, probably gathering food, and when he got back to find his home and mate destroyed his actions were very touching. He flew around the place where the nest had been, and perched on the roof of the house with mournful and bewildered twitterings till darkness hid him from curious eyes.

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

*A Mother Thrush's Affection.

Last March I was walking through Richmond Park when a young Thrush fell off a tree almost at my feet. I took it home and put it in a cage which I placed in a summer-house at the bottom of the garden. Next morning to my surprise I saw a Thrush going in and out of the summer-house and feeding the young Thrush. It fed it for nearly a fortnight, and then I let it go, when they both flew off merrily towards the Park. I think the mother Thrush must have followed me home.—Sent by F. Freeman (age 13), 66, Wyndham Road, Kingston Hill, Surrey.

Found Out!

Once, when I was out for a walk in the fields, I found a little Sparrow which could not fly. I took it home and put in a cage near the window. For a day or two it was quite contented in its new home. Two or three days afterwards I was amazed to see the mother bird fly in through the open window and commence feeding the young bird. This was repeated for several days, till about a fortnight later, seeing the little bird was able to fly, I let it out, and it flew away with the mother bird, which had been perched on a tree in the garden.—Sent by Mabel Dunn (age 14), 17, Stanley Street, Darlington.

*A Talking Canary.

A lady who kept a pet Canary one day heard it speak. It was heard to repeat what it had uttered, and it was not long before its vocabulary was considerably increased, the words being distinctly articulated in the midst of its song. There appeared to have been no teaching of the bird: its power of imitation was spontaneously exercised. At the time the lady heard it, it distinctly uttered the words "Mary," "Dicky, dear," "O pretty dicky, dear," and "Pretty queen." Five hundred guineas were said to have been offered for the Canary. But in a few weeks it was dead.—Sent by Walter Lord, 67, Little Clegg Road, Smithy Bridge, near Rochdale.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Council Meeting.

Council meeting held at Market Tavern on May 22nd, Mr. R. Halliday, president, in the chair. Hoyland and district made application to hold an open show this year, and this was granted unanimously, the date fixed being January 22nd, with Mr. J. N. Harrison as judge, providing he is open to accept the engagement; if not, the next reserve judge will be called upon. I feel sure each and every member of the Union will join with me in wishing every success to the Hoyland Society, in this their first show under the rules of the Yorkshire Union, and may I plead on their behalf for practical support when the opportunity comes to give it, thereby letting the Fancy in general see that our motto is a sincere one, that union is strength. The next item for the delegates to consider was the letter from the London Federation of C.B.S. re upholding each other's disqualifications, and combining together in order to try and get reduced railway charges. The council passed a unanimous resolution that the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. would acknowledge all suspensions made by the London Federation, the Council feeling that this would prove beneficial to all concerned. With regard to the proposal for reduced railway charges, a lot of discussion took place, as was only to be expected after the many attempts which the Yorkshiremen have made in this direction, they having left no stone unturned in the past. However, the feeling was unanimous that if the Federation was successful in getting the Cage Bird Union to join hands along with us, the three bodies combined ought to be able to make some impression on the railway companies, and thereby bring a long heped-for alleviation of unjust grievances. They therefore passed a resolution joining hands with the Federation, and in the event of the C.B.U. amalgamating along with us, the Council would bear its equal share of the expense incurred. The secretary of the Union was instructed to forward to the London Federation our decision, along with a few suggestions which the Council thought would be of help in the proposed scheme. Another important item was the consideration of the tenders for printing. Seven firms sent in tenders. Previous to their being opened a proposition was made that the lowest tender be accepted, but this was defeated. After they had been opened and their respective prices quoted, the Council voted on them, and "Fur and Feather" was selected. The Council decided to give them a month's time in order to print same from the date on which the copy was handed in to them. This brought the business to a close. I should esteem it a favour if all those who intend having advertisements in the Union handbook will forward them on to me in the course of the next few days, as I am now completing copy to hand in to the printer. The last day for advertisements will be June 7th.—H. HILL, secretary.

To Keep Watercress, etc., Fresh and Crisp.

Sent by A. Freestone, 3, Clarendon Street, Leicester.

The way I keep my watercress and other green food fresh and sweet during hot weather is: Get a large flower pot (a 10in. pot will do nicely), and plug the hole up with a cork. Then get a small jar and place the green food in it, with water. Stand this on the kitchen floor and place the flower-pot over it. With changing the water daily you will find you are able to keep the green food fresh and firm for a considerable time. Fanciers using this method will find they greatly benefit by it.—A. FREESTONE.

To Fix an Egg Drawer Between Wires.

Sent by W. F. Kent, 32, Russell Road, Wallasey, Cheshire.

I am sending an idea on how to fix an egg drawer between the cage wires. If you have an egg drawer, and it does not fit the wire front, you need not spoil the woodwork of the cage by cutting out a square. Just place the egg drawer inside the cage, with the knob through the wires. Then obtain a piece of cage wire, and twist it round the knob. To take the egg drawer out, turn the wire to right angles with the cage bottom.—W. F. KENT.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Hints on Hybrid Breeding . . with Bullfinch Hens.

By THOMAS SMITH.

The Canary-Bullfinch.

That what was considered impossible is possible now is proved in the case of the crossing of the Canary and the Bullfinch, for until receutly breeders generally thought the Canary would not breed with the affectionate Bullie hen. In fact, during the last two years quite a number of this cross have appeared on the show-bench at the various exhibitions. To obtain this cross the cock Canary is preferred. He should be strong and vigorous, as nearly as possible of the same shape as the Bullfinch hen; a yellow piebald, of a strong green, and a deep yellow. He should be large and in the pink of condition. The hen should be a large Siberian Bullfinch, firm and vigorous.

The pair having been selected, they should be put into a commodious cage, and wintered, and kept together until the breeding time comes round, say, the end of May, or the beginning of June. The Canary takes up readily with the hen, the first sign being his feeding her. By-and-bye she will be seen to rush through the cage with building material in her beak and to soon commence to build in real earnest. For finishing purposes fine grass (which can be picked up anywhere in the country) should be placed in the cage; it is a capital thing to have the bottom of the cage covered with it in case the hen should drop the eggs from the perch. Most Bullfinch hens lay in the nest alright, however. I have had both classes of hens and have seldom lost an egg. My most successful season with a Bullfinch hen was, in fact, from eggs which were dropped on to the grass. The eggs should be placed under foster parents and dummy eggs given to her to encourage her to sit. It also helps to husband her resources for future years. A Bullfinch hen which will not sit lays clutch after clutch; rarely more than a week intervenes between each clutch. Such is of necessity a severe strain upon her and entails the keeping of a large stock of foster parents to hatch the eggs and rear any young.

In the event of young being got from this important cross, the parents are a valuable asset. A proved pair are the most likely to breed during the following season. Further, should the owner wish to dispose of the pair he will find a ready market for them.

Fanciers do occasionally take a nest of Cauaries from the cock before putting him with the Bullfinch. But that course, I think, spoils him for taking up with the Bullfinch hen, and frustrates all chances of obtaining fertile eggs. Bullfinch hens have likes and dislikes. If she makes up her mind to have nothing to do with a certain mate she will stick to it tenaciously; on the other hand, should she take up with a husband she becomes so devotedly attached to him that she will not look at another mate. In the height of the season on the death of the male bird, I introduced other males, only to see them maltreated by the Bullfinch. The remainder of that season was a failure with this good hen. She died in the autumn.

With the cock Canary and Bullfinch hen hopes are raised to the highest; but the difficulty is to secure fertile eggs. Once they are secured the greatest care should be taken to have them properly hatched and the young reared. Once the young get over the eighth day there is little fear of their thriving.

The next concern is the sex. Wiseacres will readily give a decision, but they are often wide of the mark. Whistling and the moult are the real tests. Both male and female display red feathers shortly after the start of the moult, but it is when they are well through the moult that doubt is removed; the hen is then a dun colour and the cock a bright red. Size has misled many a breeder, it not being generally known that the female Hybrid is larger than the male.

For an exhibition winner colour-feeding is indispensable. A pound of tasteless pepper mixed with a quarter of a pound of hot pepper, I have found do all that is required, given in the usual egg mixture. The young bird after a day or two takes to it quite freely. The colour and egg-mixture should be started when the bird is seven weeks old, and should be continued daily without intermission until it is right through the moult. In the case of a female, so soon as the sex has been definitely determined, the colour-feeding may be dropped as it is of no use. A properly colour-fed Canary-Bullfinch male is a brilliant exhibit and easily kept in condition provided health is maintained. As it is liable to chills and the ills which follow therefrom, it should be kept in as even a temperature as possible, and out of all draughts, both in the bird-room and at shows.

The food for rearing should consist of egg and biscuit mixture with dandelion heads and chick-weed in their season. The green-food should be discontinued whenever the young are able to do for themselves.

The Linnet and Bullfinch.

A favourite Hybrid used to be the Grey (or Heather) Linnet and Bullfinch. It is easily obtained, but with the iucreasing number of Greenfinch-Bullfinch, Redpoll-Bullfinch, Goldfinch-Bullfinch, and Canary-Bullfinch Hybrids, it has declined in exhibition merit. It is, however, a very fine exhibit. It is somewhat paler in colour than some of the others, but it is a charming bird, the characteristics of both parents being visible. It is of a mild nature, and there is no difficulty in keeping it in order.

The cock Linnet is naturally an affectionate bird, and mates very readily with the Bullfinch hen. It seems to be an easier matter to get fertile eggs from the use of the Linnet than from that of the other husbands of the Bullfinch hen; and this is a consideration, especially with the beginner in the Fancy. For a start in Hybrid breeding the Linnet and the Bullfinch hen make a very suitable pair. They usually start to breed in June, and continue up to about the end of August. This cross is as easily reared in its earliest infancy as any other cage bird. When it gets a grip of life in a healthy nursery it grows very speedily, and can forage for itself at an early age. It passes through the moult quickly and while quite young is ready for the show bench.

Colour-feeding is often resorted to, but it is questionable if it improves him. Certainly the colour will not come out in "a blaze." To keep it in good condition, the bird should have a free use of the bath. It is very fond of a "plunge," but should not be allowed to remain too long in the water. The young Hybrid is not of the strongest, and if it gets chilled, it is not an easy matter to restore him to a full measure of health. The Linnet-Bullfinch Hybrid is not demonstrative, and may be confined in an open cage; but I recommend a box cage.

This Hybrid can be fed on the same diet as Canaries; that is it should get the ordinary fare supplied to other inmates of the aviary.

ORNITHOLOGICAL ODDMENTS.

Author of "The World's Birds."

Mealworm Minutiæ.

Mealworms are so closely bound up with the welfare of our birds that I make no excuse for mentioning them here, as I see some information about them is wanted. The mealworm beetles do have wings, and are liable to fly away; that is, no doubt, how they have been distributed from place to place, in addition to being accidentally carried about in flour and biscuit sacks. There are apparently no mealworms to be had in Australia, however, nor in India, which seems curious, considering that these insects thrive in warmth. It is not generally known that there is another species of mealworm besides that generally seen, which is, as everyone knows, of a light yellow ochre colour. The other kind is a dark, blackish-brown, of very much the same shade as that assumed by some common ones when they die. This dark hue is quite normal for this second species of mealworm, which is more active, and inclined to frequent the backs of corn-bins in stables, etc., rather than places where flour is kept. The beetles produced by the two are much alike, but one is more glossy.

Food for Sacred Kingfishers.

Speaking of mealworms, I was very much surprised to find that when the Rev. Mr. Farrar found his Sacred Kingfishers were bidding fair to quite ruin him in mealworms, he proceeded to get them on to a soft-bill's mixture. Why ever did he not try raw meat? Or is the res angusta domi, of which we hear so much in connection with the clergy, so insistent a fact at Micklefield that the vicar is in the position of the unfortunate undergraduate in the Oxford Limerick?

"There was a young scholar of Queen's,
Who lived on potatoes and beans;
When they said "Take to meat,"
He replied "Such a treat
We never indulge in at Queen's."

I can vouch for it that Sacred Kingfishers will do well on meat, for several have been thriving on it at the Zoo ever since Mr. Seth Smith brought them home from Australia last year. Indeed, they prefer it to fish, on which this species of Kingfisher does not feed, at any rate normally. At the same time, I would rather give such birds small fish than meat, on the general principle that a whole small animal is better diet for a carnivorous creature than bits of the meat of a large beast, which are heavy feeding, and only suitable for carrion-eaters.

Emergency Foods.

It is a matter of considerable importance to know what foods can be safely substituted for the natural diet of a bird, especially if one is travelling abroad, or if one gets hold of a bird of whose diet one knows nothing. Fish will keep a meat-eater, and meat will keep a fish-eater; but in the latter case it is likely to kill if continued too long. Egg and bread-crumbs or bread and milk is a safe diet for any mixed feeder for a time, until one can find out more about its real diet, and get its food properly balanced, and condensed milk is a good food for any honey-sucking bird. The outcry against egg has, I think, been productive of a considerable amount of harm. Any amount of birds die from an insufficiently animalised diet, and one can get eggs almost anywhere, while dried "ants' eggs" and "flies," game-meal, and other egg-substitutes, are not procurable except in certain favoured spots of the earth's surface, such as this happy country, and not everywhere there.

The Problem of Transit.

Another foe to imported birds, besides low feeding, is dirt. I don't mean so much the septic effects, but the mechanical clogging of feathers and feet, so pitiably noticeable in imported soft-bills especially. Nothing is more uncomfortable or deadly to birds than this; and yet it is so easily avoided. It is useless to expect that travelling cages are going to be cleaned out every day on board ship or anything like it; and yet they are generally arranged in accordance with such an idea. The proper way to make a travelling cage is with a barred floor above the draw-tray, as John Chinaman does, and his exports are the best in condition of any I have ever seen; there are no travelling and stock-cages so good as those he makes out of split bamboo, beautifully put together, and yet without a single nail in the whole concern. The Calcutta bird dealers in my time habitually kept their stock in these; the usual size of the large ones for a number of small birds was about two feet long and one high and broad; and, in spite of the hot climate, their birds kept in far better condition than they do in our dealers' solid-floored cages, as nearly all the dirt falls through, and whenever the birds have a bath they incidentally wash the grated floor.

Life Without Grit.

Grit is never given to cage birds in India, except, incidentally, to Partridges and Larks, to which sand is supplied; yet they do well and keep in fine condition. Of course, this is no argument against its use, which is expedient, inasmuch as birds habitually eat and crave for it; but it can evidently be dispensed with. In all such cases it is well to exercise caution in getting birds on to it, as it is very easy to kill a bird by indulging it fully in an article of consumption to which it has long been a stranger. It is in this way that the idea has arisen that water is bad for Parrots; so it is, if you let them have an unlimited supply when they have been without it for a long time; it is as unwholesome then as a sudden full meal is well known to be to a starving man.

The Personal Equation.

Male Globose Curassow.

One hears a great deal about certain birds not breeding well in captivity, although they are "good livers." Now, here is a case which may throw some light upon this. Every visitor to the Zoo knows the Curassows—big handsome crested birds, something like turkeys. Now, the old male Globose Curassow, the gentleman with the yellow knob on his nose, although he had the choice of two or three attractive ladies fell in love with a hen Heck's Curassow, and is now nesting for the third time with her. Curassows have always been regarded as bad breeders, and it has been possible to know them to breed in this case simply by the fact that his sweetheart could be identified. If she had happened to be one of his own kind, it would not have been easy to tell the favoured fair one where all were alike, and he might easily have been put up with the wrong one, and there would have been no result. The moral obviously is to allow all shy breeders a choice of partners, and I may mention that in breeding our Partridges in captivity they must be allowed to select their own mates, and cannot be matched anyhow.

Order your 1909 ANNUAL AT ONCE. It is NOW ON SALE; "Better than ever this year," is the verdict.

Allow me to say how much pleasure I derive from CAGE BIRDS, writes Mrs. W. H. Read (Cambridge). It is entirely due to reading this paper that I took up this delightful hobby, viz., foreign bird keeping. My husband's (Rev. W. H. Read's) bobby is carpentry, which comes in most handy for me, as he is able to build the most delightful aviaries.

We have engaged the following gentlemen to judge at our open show on November 27th and 29th, writes Mr. T. Smith, hon. secretary Ilkeston and Dis. O.S.: Mr. J. C. Barnes (Sheffield) for Norwich and Yorkshire, Mr. M. Norwood (Sutton-in-Ashfield), for Crest and Crestbreds, and Mr. C. Houlton (St. Helens) for British Mules, and foreign birds.

The City of Bradford O.S. have issued a list of members' shows for the 1909 season—two first feather and four old bird shows—to be held at the "Flying Dutchman Hotel," Leeds Road, Bradford. Novices are catered for to the extent of 7 classes at the former shows and 10 at the latter. The secretary is Mr. F. Rhodes, 112, Fitzroy Road, Bradford Moor, Bradford.

Will secretaries when making application for the National British Bird and Mule Club's support kindly give the following particulars:—Name of judge (who must be a member), and date of show and number of classes in Hybrid and British section. By doing so they will save much time and needless correspondence. All applications to be sent in before July 22nd. —PLUMRIDGE AND CARR, hon. secretaries.

The Poplar and Dis. C.B.S. have just issued an up-to-date manual for 1909-10. It not only gives the list of fixtures for the year, the rules and regulations of the society, and the members' names and addresses, but also a number of serviceable diary particulars such as a calendar, "Things to remember," a "General Insurance coupon ticket," etc. The secretary is Mr. H. W. Cook, 4a, St. Dunstan's Alley, Gt. Tower Street, London, E.C.

As a proof of the circulation of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, you will see from the enclosed letter that I am this week sending some of my "Secure" breeding husks for Budgerigars to Italy, writes Mr. T. Harper (Wolverhampton).

The following well-known gentlemen have been appointed to judge at the Leith O. S. Show on October 23rd, writes Mr. G. Brown, the sec.:—For Scotch Fancies, Messrs. D. Brown (Edinburgh) and J. We are giving silver cups to each section for the best bird bred 1909 by a member residing within 10 miles of Frome, and shall be pleased to hear from any fanciers within this radius desirous of joining. The subscription has been reduced to 2s. 6d.

The judges appointed for our show on November 26th and 27th, writes Mr. Alex Miller, secretary and treasurer of the City of Dundee and Dis. C.B.S., are as follows: For Crests, Mr. C. Campbell (Glasgow); for Plainheads, Mr. A. Malcolmson (Glasgow); for Borders, Mr. D. Hamilton (Hamilton); for Scotch Fancies, Messrs. D. Black (Govan) and G. Fulton (Partick); and for Mules, and British and foreign birds, Mr. J. Livingstone (Bathgate).

Through an accident some months ago, which has unfortunately deprived him of the use of one of his eyes, disabling him for bis usual employment, Mr. Jas. Irlam (the well-known and respected secretary of the Sale Open O.S.), has decided to open a bird, seed, and fanciers' appliance stores at 97, Cross Street, Sale, writes Mr. H. Whitney (Sale). I am sure he has the sympathy of his friends (and they are many), who join with me in wishing him every success in his new venture.

The City and Suburban Society's annual outing, writes Mr. V. Wynn, the secretary, takes place next Saturday, May 29th, to Great Missenden, by the 1.30 p.m. train from Marylebone (Great Central Railway). "The Commonsense of Poultry Culture" is the title of a booklet by Mr. C. P. Telling. Those interested in the subject of poultry-keeping should not fail to obtain a copy, price 3½d., post free from the author, at 102, Thornleigh Road, Horfield, Bristol. Among his "hints" will be found the suggestion that cage-bird fanciers should keep bantam hens, which would be found to supply all the egg-food necessary for their birds. In turn, he says, the waste-seed and sweepings from the bird-room and the house-scraps would be almost sufficient to keep the bantams. The main points of poultry culture are dealt with by Mr. Telling in a very practical manner.

"CAGE BIRDS." 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

A curious sight is to be seen in Mr. Hadfield's garden in the Gleadless Road allotments, Heeley, Sheffield, writes Mr. G. W. Hukin (Sheffield). A Thrush having found its way through a pane of glass into a greenhouse, has laid four eggs in a tree-pot.

Many thanks for the copy of "House's Norwich Canary Handbook," which I received. It is a very useful book, and full of valuable information. I hope you will have a quick and ready sale for it, which it deserves.—T. and W. NISBET (Musselburgh).

I find CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. D. Roger Rowlands (Birkenhead) most valuable; so much so, that I cut the "continued" articles and paste them in book form, indexing same for ready reference. I would not mind having to pay 2d. every Friday for my copy.

We have received a copy of the Leeds syllabus for 1909. The programme includes several very interesting addresses and members' shows, and a washing exhibition. There is an excellent list of special prizes offered by the tradesmen of Leeds for competition. The secretary is Mr. W. Tose, 7, Park Street, Leeds.

"British Birds" for May (one shilling, Witherby and Co.), contains in addition to the usual instalments on "British Ornithologists and their Works," and "Additions to our Knowledge of British Birds since 1899." an article by Mr. Norman Gilroy, M.B.O.U., on "The Nesting of the Goosander." The "Notes," too, this month, include contributions on the subjects of the eggs of the Cuckoo, Red Grouse, and Black Grouse Hybrids, the nesting records of the Kittiwake in the Isle of Wight, etc. The issue is beautifully illustrated, and is very readable.

I have received your last Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. T. Scott, of South Canterbury, New Zealand, and I think the coloured plates are just excellent, especially the "two wee gems," which I don't think anyone could better. I think Mr. Norman must have spent some time getting them up to their high standard. I must also congratulate the breeder of them. My father is one of the oldest breeders of Borders in Chirnside. He has bred them for the last sixteen years or more. He procured his first stock from Mr. Edminson, of Carlisle, a noted breeder in his day. He was in partnership with Mr. Hugh Connerton, who is still "on the boards." My hearty good wishes to the Editor and staff, and good old CAGE BIRDS.

What Do Nightingales Sing?

In Dr. G. H. Vos's latest handbook on "Birds and Their Nests and Eggs," it is recorded that a Frenchman has put the song of the Nightingale into words, the English translation being as follows: "The good God has given me a wife whom I have beaten so much, so much, so much, but if He gives me another I will not beat her any more, any more, only a little, only a little, only a little."

Starlings in Post Boxes.

For several years past, says a Hereford contemporary, Starlings have been making a persistent raid on the private letter box of Mr. Lewis, Wyecliffe, Breinton, for nesting purposes, and this year they have again returned to their old quarters. The box is cleared of letters every day, and on numerous occasions the nest itself has been removed with the hope of driving the intruders away; but they remain as persistently as ever; and, it may be added, are not above tricks of mischievousness. Last year a boy picked up a letter in the vicinity of the box, and the wonder was how, after being properly posted, it could be discovered on the road. One day a postcard was also found 20 or 30 yards away from the box. This had, too, been duly posted. The birds, of course, must have carried the contents out of the box, which shows that post boxes which become the visiting places of such birds as these should be carefully watched.

The Open Norwich P.C.

The vice-presidents of the Open Norwich Plainhead Club, recently elected, writes Mr. O. Mitchell, the hon. secretary, are Mrs. C. M. Sunderland and Messrs. F. Carl, C. Hepleston, J. C. Shields, C. J. Whitcley, and Harry Virr. With regard to the formation of the club, and the reasons given on page 438 of our recent Spring Supplement, Mr. Mitchell remarks: It may be argued that these reasons are more applicable to the forming of a club merely for the Yorkshire districts, or that, if pressure or persuasion had been brought to bear upon the club already in existence (the N.P.C.), such reforms or alterations of procedure might have been brought about as would have met the requirements which it was intended the new club should fulfil. Whatever were the original intentions of the promoters, the future policy, scope, and radius of the new club were quickly and effectively settled by the action of the existing club joining the Cage Bird Union. By so doing, almost the entire body of Yorkshire members (as were many others) were compelled to resign their membership, as by retaining same they would confine themselves to exhibiting at shows affiliated to, or having a license from, the said Union, and, in districts where such control is almost unknown (West Yorkshire, for instance), the necessity of always exhibiting at places far distant, and having entirely to ignore shows in their own districts, such coercive policy had very little chance of success. Hence, the decision to thrown open to the world the membership of the newly-formed club, with no restrictions as to where or when the members should exhibit. The objects of the club are: (1) The maintenance of the standard points of all varieties of Norwich Plainhead Canaries; (2) The suppression of fraud and dishonourable conduct therein: (3) The advancement and protection of the interests of breeders and exhibitors of these varieties.

The Breeding and Rearing of Crests and Crestbreds.

By D. BROWNING.

A paper read recently before the Exeter and District C.B.S.

Over thirty members put in an appearance at the Oddfellows' Hall, under the chairmanship of Mr. G. Down, to hear Mr. Dan Browning, the most popular judge and exhibitor of the Crest, tell of his thirty years' experience. It was evident from the hearty reception he received that the members were not going to be sent away disappointed. Mr. Browning said:—

In this paper I shall tell you little that is new about the Crested Canaries, but must, of course, go over the same ground that a great many have done before. To breed first-class Crests and Crest-breds is a most difficult matter, even to the old hand; how much more so, then, to the novice, who, having purchased two or three pairs of birds, paying a long price for them, at the end of the first breeding season finds he has not a bird fit to look at? To such I would say: Don't give up, but try again.

When Starting a Strain.

In starting to breed Crests and Crest-breds, the purchaser of two pairs should begin with a Crested cock and a Crest-bred hen, a Crest-bred cock and a Crested hen—all buffs, for they are easier to breed, and you are more likely to get larger Crests from them. A good Crest and a good Crest-bred do not come off the same parents. Each one must be bred separately, and to succeed your birds must be paired up to produce each independently.

If you are intending to start in the breeding of Crests, I would recommend you to purchase off a successful breeder, a Crest cock bird that has a good-shaped, round, drooping Crest, dark and broad, and not hairy or fine in feather. See that it has a good, well-formed Crest at the back of head. It should have plenty of size, as it is the cock bird that gives size to the progeny. Get a Crest-bred hen with a good, stout, Norwich-type body, with short beak and a nice cushion-shaped head covered with long, broad, veiny feathers which should, when turned over, reach to the end of the beak. The Crest-bred cock should have a high, round head, with an abundance of feather on it, and especially long in entrance feather; that is, directly over the beak, which it is as difficult for one to get as is a good Crest. I do not mind a thin, narrow head if it is properly bred, as such generally carries a lot of head feather, and gives a grand droop to the Crest. A small head will carry a large Crest, and show it to perfection. Pair only one cock to a hen, and not to two hens, as better results are got, and you do not weaken your birds.

How and What to Pair.

If your Crested cock bird is evenly marked, you must pair him with a clear or lightly-marked or ticked hen. If he is heavily variegated or a green, pair him with a clear or lightly-ticked hen. In the production of first-class stock, a pedigree must be built up, and every breeder who wants to do well on the show bench must from the first establish a strain of birds for himself. To do this a certain amount of in-breeding is essential.

In in-breeding use only the strongest and most healthy birds. There are several crosses which suggest themselves—that of father to daughter and of mother to son and that of cousin to cousin. You will thus have a great part of the strain you want to establish.

Double Crest Breeding.

The pairing of two Crests together sometimes results in a good Crest. If this is tried, it must only be done with the largest and most perfect Crest. The Crest-breds from this cross are valuable, and, paired to Crested birds bred in the usual way, often produce good youngsters.

If you breed nothing but buffs for three or four years you will find the feathers getting courser. Now is the time to introduce the yellow. The yellow mated to a buff not only refines the feather, but also gives it more gloss. The buffs so got should be mated the following year with a buff, to keep up the size of your birds.

The Lancashire Coppy Cross.

This cross has been largely used to produce many of the Crests and Crest-breds which you find on the show bench to-day. If you breed from this cross, you must get a large, thick-set, broad-skulled Lancashire Plainhead cock. Pair him to a good Norwich-type Crested hen, heavy and broad front and back Crest, the hen being nearest the type you intend breeding. A great many fanciers go so far as to say that you cannot get a good show Crest without this cross.

The Crested birds may be classed under five headings, viz.: 1, Evenly-marked dark Crest; 2, clear body with dark Crest; 3, variegated or green Crest; 4, clear body with grey Crest; 5, clear body with clear Crest (yellows or buffs).

When to Begin to Pair.

Towards the latter end of March or beginning of April is soon enough to put your birds together. A fortnight before the time I put the cock bird in the next compartment to the hen. Through this they can see each other, so that when you open the partition and let the cock bird through, there is not much trouble in mating them. For a month or six weeks before pairing your birds must go through a course of generous feeding to get them up in condition. Especial attention must be given to the cocks, for as a rule the hens are more easily brought into that state known as "ready," a little extra egg food being all that is needed.

The Feeding of Young Birds.

In feeding your young birds, see that the hen has fresh egg-food three times a day. I make my egg food as follows: Rub a thick slice of bread and one egg through a wire sieve. The bread should be three days old before it is given to the young birds. Give the first feed early in the morning, so that the youngsters begin the day with their crops full. At each time of feeding remove all stale food, and give a good supply of green food, either dandelion or lettuce or watercress. This should always be young and fresh.

Every time you go into your bird room, look about the cage bottoms, as sometimes the hen, in getting off the nest, may drag a young one with her. If ever such has happened, don't think that because the young one is cold and stiff it is therefore dead, as I myself have been mistaken many times. Take it in your hands, and place the hands together and breathe on the young bird; in nineteen out of twenty cases you will soon feel it trying to move in your hands. Put it back in the nest, and in a few hours it will be as well as ever.

TICKED YELLOW BORDER FANCY CANARY.

Fourth Prize at Gateshead Show for Mr. H. Whittaker (North Shields.)

One great difficulty in breeding Crests is the fact that many of the hens are bad feeders. My advice to all who intend breeding Crests is to secure a reliable lot of feeders before you start. Some Crests and Crest-bred hens are alright, but the majority are very untrustworthy. To be on the safe side, it is as well to have a stock of feeders The little Germans or Common cross-bred hens are very good.

For the nest I give them plenty of good, clean moss, and well-cured cowhair, and let them build their own nest. You must watch closely, and when your hen lays her first egg take it away and give her a dummy. Take all of them away, and put them back again in the nest when she lays her third egg, then you will have them hatch out almost at once, instead of their coming out in succession, as would be the case if they were left in the nest as the hen laid them. The later ones in that case come in for a poor chance of the food, through the older birds being able to reach farther for it from the mother.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

The Lizard Canary & Its General Management.

By J. HAMPSHIRE.

If the young have been well fed, you will find that they are ready for being taken away from the parents at about twenty-three days old, as by this time they are able to eat egg-food. But should some of them not be eating so well, you might put them in a nursery cage, in front of the breeding cage for a few days. Be mindful, however, not to allow the youngsters to get "plucked." It is a great drawback to an exhibition Lizard, if plucking has been done, for as a rule the new feathers come with white tips on them.

However, in some cases, plucking may prove beneficial, and is done purposely in other varieties. Supposing you have got a bird with what I term a grizzled tail or wings, that is, one which is grey in wings, or tail; by tailing or flighting it, if it is a bird that carries good black, it may possibly, if you pluck out the grey feathers, grow the new ones without the white tippings, when it is, say, about five or six weeks old. At the same time, also begin to give a little colour-feed. I have known such birds to turn out prize winners.

Moulting and Colour-feeding.

We now come to the moulting and colour feeding. In the first place, I wish to impress upon you to keep all the best birds in separate cages, if possible. I begin to give the early-bred ones a little colour-food when they are eight weeks old; the others I commence giving the food to when they are six weeks old, as I always find that the early hatched birds do not begin to moult as soon as the later nests.

The colour-food I use is as follows: One lb. of hot, to four lbs. of tasteless pepper. I begin with a teaspoonful, increasing it a little at a time, until I get to five teaspoonfuls to two eggs and bread, or according to the number of birds to be fed; so that they get an average spoonful per bird per day. This I continue until they are nearly finished moulting. Then I gradually knock it off by degrees. I also give them a little linseed two or three times per week, as it helps to put on the gloss or sheen when they are finishing the moult. It is advisable to keep the birds covered up during moulting, as it shades the strong light off them a little, and also keeps the birds a deal cleaner.

Some Final Considerations.

I am not a great believer in so many kinds of medicines, but I generally have Parrish's chemical food, Epsom salts, and Turkey rhubarb, which can all be given in the drinking water, a few drops at once. As regards showing, if you intend to become a successful exhibitor, you should teach your birds to run into show cages, and also put them down in the pink of condition. See that both the bird and the cage are perfectly clean, as bad staging may lose you the place of honour. If you are not successful at first, try again, as there is nothing like trying for gaining successes.

I think the Lizard is the prettiest Canary we have, and it is a bird which is fast coming to the front. Some people used to think that because Lizards were termed only one-year show birds, new beginners would not have any chance against the older fanciers of this variety. However, both old and young fanciers are beginning to see that it is just the bird to start with to be on an equal footing with other exhibitors, as both the novice and champion have to breed fresh show birds every season, and by having to do so, we are all at one starting point.

In conclusion, I beg to thank you, one and all, for the hearing you have given me. Should the few hints I have given you be of service to the younger fanciers, I shall feel highly satisfied for the trouble I have taken.

Questions were then asked, some of which are appended. Mr. Norris asked how the spangling of the Lizard was kept up?—Experience, said Mr. Hampshire, has taught me that to keep up good spangling it is necessary to put the best birds for rowing together, that is, birds which carry plenty of large dark spots, and those on which the rowing is as near as possible in parallel lines down the back. I may say that there is what I term the "mooned," also the "creeled" Lizard. The "creeled" as a rule is very linable; the spots are inclined to be v-shaped and rather small. But the "mooned" bird with spangling or spots, is rounder and much larger.

Mr. Jones: Why does the lecturer use Turkey rhubarb?—Because I find that if you buy it in the root and grate it and give, say, enough to cover a sixpence, mixing it with the drinking water, it is a medicine which will soothe the birds as well as remove costiveness, etc.

Mr. Odell: Why do you prefer bread to biscuits?—The reason why I use bread—loaf bread, about two days old—is because my hens feed better, and I have reared more youngsters on it.

Mr. Norris said he was highly satisfied and wished to propose that the best thanks be given to Mr. Hampshire for his able lecture. Mr. Odell seconded the proposition, which was supported by Messrs. Clark, Kenyon, Balshaw, and others. The chairman, Mr. Balshaw, in support of the proposition, said that he had heard a great number of lectures in his time, but this one had been the most instructive and straightforward of all he could remember, and he felt sure every one present had benefited by it. This brought the meeting to a close.

Difficulties of the . . . . . Breeding Season.

By T. C. CRAWHALL.

A Paper read before the members of the Gateshead and District C.B.S. on April 28.

When your secretary asked me to give you a lecture I tried to excuse myself, for it is not so long ago that I almost bored you to death with a list of medicines as long as from here to the top of Grey's monument. However, he would take no excuse, so I thought the most seasonable thing to talk about would be the difficulties we encounter during the course of the season we are now in the midst of.

There are difficulties many and varied, which none of us have yet thoroughly fathomed, and which it will take many years of very careful study to remedy; but with care and watchfulness and the help of numerous societies and the Fancy Press these difficulties will in time be overcome, though I hardly dare to hope that anyone will be able to breed Canaries and hybrids as freely as they do chickens and ducks. How often we notice that a certain fancier has a run of good luck, averaging 6, 7, 8, or 9 young per hen; this good fortune continues for two, three, or four years, and then suddenly, without any apparent cause, he has two or three years of most unfortunate results, hardly rearing a single youngster. His methods of feeding are the same as during his successful years; he is just as careful in his regularity of feeding, in the making of his egg food, and in his methods of cleanliness. There is apparently nothing to account for it. Yet there the fact is. He starts with the same or equal stock; works on the same principles; yet how different the results.

The Necessity of Healthy Stock.

The first, and, I think, the most important factor towards securing a successful season, so far as results in the number of young are concerned, is that the stock should all be healthy and in vigorous condition. It is useless breeding with birds that are out of health.

Your efforts are doomed to failure if you do not commence the season with healthy stock, no matter what the variety. I like to see my hens lively and hopping about the cage from perch to perch, flapping their wings, and calling frequently, with an occasional hop and flap which is so much like a somersault. The cocks should be in full song. I like to see them before pairing "feeding the perch" or some object in the cage with regurgitated food. Only healthy cocks full of vigour do this. A bird that is not in the height of condition will not feed his feet or the wires of his cage.

If you pair together birds which are in this condition, you are in a better way towards a successful season than if your birds are sitting dull on the perch with their tails wagging behind them like little Bo-peep's famous sheep. Birds that sit dull may, and often do, lay, but you will very rarely find them able to rear a nest of youngsters to maturity; they generally fail about the third or fourth day—the weight of maternal responsibility is too great, and they sit on their young and brood them to death. What their thoughts are, if they have any, I dare not think. I am afraid that if the same thing happened in human affairs the R.S.P.C.C. would be making enquiries. I have heard of some fanciers who, when they have had hens of this description, have taken the law into their own hands and given the final touch to the offender.

But was it altogether the hen's fault or the fancier's? If he had used his eyes and senses before pairing, and noted the bird's condition, he would not have blamed her for not rearing her young, but would have seen that she was not fit for the arduous task of feeding. Such a bird had better be discarded altogether, or, at least, not used until quite late in the season, when the warm weather has made its influence felt.

Beware of the Nervous Hens.

Having commenced, then, with healthy birds in good condition, all generally goes smoothly for a while. Mate takes to mate; the cocks feed the hens, and all looks rosy. The fancier, consequently, is congratulating himself, and looking forward to the end of the season to having his flights filled with young. Now is the time to curb your desires to look at the eggs every day. Leave the birds severely alone; interfere as little as possible, and let your movements in the room be as quiet as possible. Sometimes when men come into my room they go straight up to a sitting hen and peer closely through the wires at her. I always feel as though I should like to take them by the coat tails and pull them away.

When a hen begins to incubate her eggs a period of nervousness sets in which she never displays at other time. You may see hens sitting on their eggs with their mouths agape through nervousness; yet out of the breeding season they are as quiet as possible. And if they are interfered with or frightened they may possibly leave their nests altogether.

So that the first lesson to learn in order to ensure a successful season is to restrain your curiosity, and leave the birds to themselves as much as possible, only doing the necessary duties of feeding, watering and cleaning as expeditiously as possible .

The Food for Sitting Hens.

The question of food for a sitting hen is an oft-discussed one. Some breeders recommend a very plain diet of Canary seed alone. Others consider that to have the hen in a suitable condition to rear her young it is necessary to give nourishing food every day during incubation. I think that it is necessary to keep a hen in such a condition that she will not only commence to feed her young when they hatch, but will be able to continue feeding them until they are matured. Nature has provided birds with the instinct to feed their offspring in the same way as she has provided the young with the instinct to hold up their heads to be fed; and if the hen is in good health she ought to feed her young frequently.

There are a few unnatural mothers, as in the human family, who only consider their own wants and neglect those of their family, but these are very few. Others become so through illness or improper feeding.

If you will add a third part of German rape seed to your Canary seed from the time of pairing and onwards throughout the breeding season, you will find it tends to keep the hens in better condition through the season than if Canary seed alone were given. I look upon rape as a kind of green food, because the plant embryo is in the form of miniature leaves. But the embryo in Canary seed is like wheat, barley, and oats—full of starch. In addition to this mixture of Canary and rape, you will find it of advantage to give a little of the usual mixture (rape, inga, gold of pleasure, linseed, hemp, etc.), twice or three times during the fortnight. Egg food made not too rich should be given not more than twice while the hen sits, and not every day, as some people advise.

If you feed thus you will have the hen in good condition—neither too fat nor too weak, and ready to take up her maternal duties when the chicks appear. If you feed too generously while they are sitting you will find they will either give up feeding, and forsake the young ones altogether, or else brood them too much, and become what is generally termed "sweating hens."

The Difficulty of Non-feeding Hens.

I am convinced that there are two chief reasons for non-feeding hens; the one is that the hens are in too poor a state of health to do their duty, the other is that they have been having too much of a good thing amongst the "flesh-pots of Egypt"—in their case the egg drawers. The middle course is the best to adopt—be neither too generous nor yet too stingy with your tit-bits.

But with all your care you will find this difficulty of non-feeding hens will crop up in every room; if not in one season, in another. When it does come, I would suggest the giving of a purgative of some sort. There are many; e.g., castor oil, olive oil, and syrup of buckthorn. What I prefer most is either syrup of rhubarb or Epsom salts, given in the drinking water. Soak all the seeds—two parts Canary, one hemp, and one rape. Give a small piece of milk sop in the afternoon instead of egg food, with a sprinkling of maw seed. If this does not answer, together with some green food, I do not know what will.

"CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Seeds and Their Properties.

By F. BOWMAN.

A Paper read recently before the Glasgow and West of Scotland N.M.B. and F.B.C.

At our last meeting held in the Good Templars' Halls, 122, Ingram Street, Glasgow, Mr. Fred Bowman (Secretary of the Scottish Y.C.C.) favoured us with a paper on "Seeds and their Properties." The turn out was not so good as the officials would have liked, but those who were present spent a most enjoyable and profitable evening. The chairman was Mr. R. B. Jarvie, and in calling upon Mr. Bowman, he said that he needed no introduction, being one of our own office bearers.

Mr. Bowman spoke as follows: This paper is intended chiefly to demonstrate the properties of the various seeds used by most fanciers. I am sorry to say that my list is anything but complete as regards the number of seeds in use, but to the average fancier these will be all he may require. To my mind seeds occupy a far more prominent place in our hobby than most admit. For instance you will hear one man swear by one seed, where another man will swear at it. If you ask either of these men why, ten to one they will find it impossible to give you a satisfactory answer, simply because they have never gone to the trouble to find out. Now my object in giving this paper is to try and prove to you that every seed has its proper place as a food for our birds, and if fanciers would only blame themselves, and not the seeds, for any harm done, they would be nearer the mark.

Careful Selection of Seeds.

We should all try to remember that a bird is simply a machine that consumes food and gives its best in return, according to the correct quantity and quality of the food given. Every action of a bird burns up a certain amount of heat and energy, and as heat and energy are the chief things that keep our birds in a perfect state of health, it should be the object of every fancier to see that his birds get seeds containing the necessary properties to replace this loss.

Before taking the seeds individually, it is necessary to divide them into three classes. The first is nitrogenous or albuminous, the second carbonaceous (such as saccharine, or starch), and the third vegetable fat. As it is impossible to find a single seed containing these properties in a correct proportion, it is necessary to use a quantity of different seeds, each one in itself containing either too little or too much of these properties, and so blend them together as to form a perfect food.

Of course, you will understand that what suits one bird will not suit another, so that you require to study your birds equally as much as the seeds. Temperature, too, plays a very prominent part in the selection of the proper proportion of seeds to give; it makes no difference if a bird be kept in a cold or a heated room—the temperature of the bird's body must remain the same if you wish to keep it in perfect health. Birds kept in a cold room require a greater amount of carbonaceous food than birds that are kept in a heated room. A bird that is moved from a warm room to a cold one invariably goes wrong; in most cases it is because its owner never thinks to counteract the change by giving a greater proportion of heat-forming seeds.

The Three Great Objects of Food.

It will thus be seen that the three great objects of food are: first, to furnish heat; second, to produce force; and third, to build up the waste tissues. An excess of nitrogenous or albuminous food causes the blood to become sluggish and induces disease of the kidneys. An undue proportion of carbonaceous food causes fatness and liver disease; a plentiful supply of green food is the finest preventive of this as all green food contains a very large percentage of natural salts, which makes it the finest blood purifier it is possible to give.

As this brings me to the subject of this paper —"Seeds and their Properties," it will be necessary to take each seed separately. The first is Canary seed, this being universally used wherever the cage-bird hobby is to be found.

Canary and Rape Seeds.

Canary seed, as is known, has an outside shell or covering, commonly called the husk, this being practically of no use as a food. This husk contains a large amount of mineral matter such as phosphates, iron, etc., some of which must pass into the stomachs of the birds and will certainly act as a blood tonic. Below the husk is a thin layer of cells containing most if not all the nitrogen of which this seed is composed. The seed itself is a starchy kernel, rich in carbonaceous matter from which most of the heating and feeding properties of this seed are obtained. So you will see the reason why birds keep in a perfect state of health when fed on this seed alone; it is because it contains more of the principal properties of the necessary food than can be found in any other single seed.

The next seed is rape seed. This combined with Canary seed, is the one advocated throughout the Fancy, as necessary in the formation of a staple food. Rape seed is something like Canary seed in its properties, but it contains far more nitrogen, in fact too much to allow it to be used as freely as Canary seed. It is also composed of less carbonaceous matter, and is richer in oil, containing about one-third of fatty matter, which makes it a very dangerous seed if used in large quantities. It is best as a food for young birds, the excess of nitrogen being specially adapted as a bone and muscle former.

This seed is very much improved as a food if it is boiled for a few minutes and then run through several changes of cold water, this method taking out most of the mineral properties and leaving only the vegetable.

Hemp Seed.

Most fanciers are great believers in hemp seed, and rightly so, if it is used in the proper season. This seed is probably the greatest factor in the realisation of a successful breeding season, and it easily holds pride of place in bringing backward birds into breeding condition. It is possessed of great stimulating properties, and if used in large quantities has the tendency to an enlargement of the liver, which is chiefly owing to the excess of carbonaceous matter it contains. Its heating and stimulating properties make it possible for one to successfully rear young birds, even without the use of egg food.

The greatest evils of hemp seed are caused through its being used too freely. This is specially noticeable among Norwich Canaries. Many a bird with a good front simply carries too much fat through having been fed too liberally on hemp throughout the winter months. In almost all cases birds overfed in this way fail to be successful in the breeding cage; and whether they will gain the longed-for object on the show bench is very doubtful. Mr. Craig in his lecture on British birds mentioned another great fault of this seed, and that is, its tendency to darken the feather of birds fed on it during the moult; this is owing to the excess of oil it contains. Most seeds rich in oil have the same failing, if it may be termed as such.

Linseed and Niger Seeds.

Most fanciers know that linseed is advocated throughout the fancy chiefly for the oil which it contains, and it certainly helps the birds to produce that fine silky sheen we all like to see on their new feathers. The oil of this seed is unlike the oil of hemp seed, as its action on the bird's bowels is of a more soothing nature; and the seeds given during the moulting season are very valuable in helping the birds to get rid of the excess of useless matter gained during the breeding season. Another property of linseed, and one that you very rarely hear spoken of, is its richness in albumen and nitrogen. Linseed contains a higher percentage of this property than any other seed, making it a very dangerous one if used too freely. But at the same time it is a valuable pick-me-up for all birds that are down in condition. A little given once or twice a week during the show season, will help the birds to quickly regain the extra loss of tissue which is unavoidable during the exhibition season.

Niger, or inga, has probably caused more "chewing the rag" (as the saying goes) than all other seeds put together. As a regular article of diet, it should be avoided. It is given chiefly for its oil, that, in the opinion of most fanciers, acting as a preventative of egg binding; which to some extent must be right, as all hens need something of a stimulating nature, to help them through the constant strain when laying a clutch of egg. And niger, or inga, is probably the greatest stimulating seed it is possible to give, owing to the great amount of oil, and the very little of the other properties, it contains. But like most stimulants, it acts more as an irritant than a food, if given in large quantities.

CONVINCING TESTIMONY.

MR. W. VARDY, of Hucknall Huthwaite, in conversation with our representative at the Crystal Palace Show, stated that our Food was in every way an excellent preparation. He had found, after experiments, that it would keep sweet in the cage for days, which is a great advantage over the home-made egg food. It afforded him pleasure to give permission for every publicity to be given to this statement.

MR. W. H. VALE, of 8, Park Place, Clapham, writes as follows:—"I have given your food a thorough test and can safely say it is an excellent food for canaries and a boon to those who can spare but little time for their pets. Being so easily prepared, and always at hand, it should command a ready sale."

MR. F. CHERRY, of 4, Peel Street, Luton, writes as follows:—"I have tried your Egg and Biscuit Food, and find it very satisfactory, the birds eating it with avidity. I am sure you have done the fancy a good turn by placing same on the market, and I strongly induce fanciers to try it and judge for themselves."

MR. R. J. PRETTY, of 6, Old Burlington Street, W., writes as follows:—"I have given your Egg and Biscuit a thorough trial, and am very pleased with the result, as I notice none of those ill effects which occur through the use of the ordinary egg. I shall have no hesitation in using it for rearing young birds. The birds eat it readily and it keeps them in good condition. I can recommend it to the Fancy, and am sure if once tried will be always used, as it is cheap and reliable."

MR. ALBERT ONIONS, of Earlestown, Lancs., writes as follows:—"I have given the sample tin of Egg and Biscuit a fair trial and have pleasure in informing you that I have found it a most excellent food and much preferable to some other much advertised foods. It is handy, easily mixed, and much liked by the birds themselves."

MR. H. E. HEDGES, of 46, Greys Road, Old Town, Eastbourne, writes:—"I had a shilling tin of Egg and Biscuit about a fortnight ago as a trial, and I think that it will about meet the difficulties of boiling eggs and preparing them with biscuit or bread crumbs. My canaries seem to like it very much and it smells just about the same as fresh boiled egg and biscuit."

Originals can be seen at our offices with hundreds of others. Never has any commodity met with such universal appreciation, and the many difficulties of the egg diet have been successfully overcome by our "Egg & Biscuit."

EDINBURGH NORTHERN O.S.

Montbly meeting held in Gow's Coffee Rooms, Rose-street. The Secretary intimated that they had secured another hall for their show, to be held on November 6th. The following gentlemen have consented to judge: Messrs. Muirhead (Bonnyhridge) and G. Hope (Edinburgh) for Scotch Fancy, and Mr. Winter (Edinburgh) for Norwich and Borders.—C. PURDIE, Sec.

POPLAR AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Usual meeting held on May 20th. Then followed a lecture given by Mr. J. Robson on the Norwich Canary, which was listened to with marked attention. At the close the lecturer invited questions which called forth enquiries from nearly all. He was kept busy for just over an hour. The Chairman then proposed a vote of thanks, which was supported by Messrs. Cook and Reeves.—H. W. COOK, Hon. Sec.

LUTTERWORTH AND DIS. C.B.S.

A lecture was held at the Angel Inn, on May 22nd, when the president of the Leicester Hand-in-Hand Society presided, and in his opening remarks commented on the points of a cage bird society generally, and also made a good speech, followed by some excellent advice to leave self interest, etc., out of all matters concerning members. A grand speech by that well-known fancier, Mr. Walton (of Walton and Noakes) was listened to with interest. Questions having been invited, several were asked, and were answered in a true fancier's spirit. Other short speeches followed by Messrs. Mann (Coventry), Tyler, Needham, Hulse, and Allen (Leicester). A vote of thanks having been passed to the visitors, the chairman briefly responded, referring to his society's readiness to come over at any time and give a lecture. One new member was made, which brought a pleasant evening to a close.—C. BROOKS, Sec.

YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

Annual general meeting held May 15th, at Market Tavern, Godwin-street, Bradford. There was a very good attendance. Mr. Shackleton occupied the chair. The balance-sheet was adopted. It showed a balance in hand of £1 17s. 9d. The Chairman then gave the result of the voting for list of officers for 1909-10: Chairman, Mr. F. Armstrong; Vice-Chairman, Mr. R. Halliday; Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. John Greaves, 279, Hollings-road, Bradford; Assistant Secretary, Mr. W. Crabtree; Auditors, Messrs. R. W. Alderson and T. Clegg; Scrutineers, Messrs. T. Ogden and F. Hammond; Committee (outside Yorkshire), Messrs. A. Ambler, G. W. Cuthbertson, A. Hirst, A. E. Pattrick and J. W. Ramsden; (inside Yorkshire) Messrs. M. Broadley, J. Bailey, H. W. Battye, W. A. Cowgill, A. Cooper, S. Dean, F. Hammond, R. Sutcliffe, H. H. Towers, and J. Wilcock. Total number of voting papers returned, 82. Mr. Armstrong then took the chair. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the retiring officers, also to the subscribers and donors of special prizes After a long discussion it was decided that the Outside Yorkshire Committee remain constituted as before, viz., five members, and that the Inside Yorkshire Committee be extended to 20; and on the motion of Mr. R. Halliday, seconded by Mr. Chittenden, the following gentlemen were co-opted thereto: Messrs. H. W. Walsh (Halifax), E. Radley (Skelmanthorp), C. T. Parkes (Wakefield), A. Livesey (Bingley), J. Shackleton (Keighley), J. Thomas (Otley) C. Stokoe (Leeds), A. Spencer (Doncaster), L. Lane (Barnoldswick), and W. H. Shackleton (retiring President). It is hoped that by the aid of these gentlemen there will be a large increase in membership. The Outside Yorkshire Competition was then dealt with. This, in the opinion of many, should be dropped, there being so few competitors. Finally, it was carried that the club at five shows outside Yorkshire give a silver medal to be won outright at each show. One medal only can be won each year by the same member residing outside Yorkshire, and there must be five competitors or the medal will be withheld. The challenge cup competition having been won by Mr. J. Bailey, this gentleman generously promised a trophy value 7 guineas for next year's competition, which was gratefully accepted (to be won twice before becoming the property of a member). Next came the method of counting points gained in the different competitions, and after a long discussion it was decided, on the motion of Mr. J. Hartley, seconded by Mr. F. Hammond, that in future a member may show as many birds as he likes, but three only to count, which must be starred by the exhibitor, also first bird to count 7 points, the second 6, and downwards to commended 1 point; in cases where there are less than seven entries, the lowest award to count one point, and so on upwards. It was also decided to insert trade advertisements and breeders' cards in the club's Year Book, terms on application to the Secretary. The following new members were accepted: Messrs. T. C. Crawhall (Newcastle), F. Easterling (London), W. Beaumont (Skelmanthorp), P. Parker (Wakefield), C. T. and E. Parkes (Wakefield), A. Gill, J. Lane (Bradford), and A. Livesey (Bingley). Applications for the club's patronage have been received from the following societies, and will be dealt with by the Committee in due course, viz., City of Bradford, Leicester C.B.A., Huddersfield, Shipley, Dulwich O.S., Burnley, Queensbury, Gateshead, Eccleshill, Harrogate, Manchester, Sunderland, East Bradford, Cockermouth, St. Helens, Sandy Lane, and Liverpool.—JOHN GREAVES, Sec.

NORTHERN B.B.M. AND F.B.C.

At a meeting held May 18th, in Lockhart's Cafe, 65, Grainger-street, Newcastle, correspondence was read from the following: Yarm and Dist. C.B.S.; Darlington C.B.S., Border City (Carlisle) O.S., Sunderland C.B.S., St. Helens O.S., Blaydon C.B.S., and Gateshead C.B.S. It was agreed to leave applications over till June, when club's patronage will be decided. Societies requiring club's patronage (Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland, Westmoreland radius) please state classification and judge when making application. Table show resulted as follows:—A.S. BRIT.: 1, Maddison, Twite, lovely condition, A1 colour and markings, nice size, steady as a rock; 2, Bertram and Storey, Linnet; 3, Taylor, Bramble, nice size, colour, and spangling. Mr. T. Robson judged, giving every satisfaction. At our next table show, to be held in conjunction with the Northern Y.C.C., it was decided to have three classes, to be as follows:—Class 1, A.S. Foreign, limit price not to exceed 7s. 6d., single or pairs; Class 2, A.S. British, previous winners of firsts, seconds, or thirds competing; Class 3, A.S. British, all field-moulted or newly-imported. Judge, Mr. T. Robson.—J. BERTRAM, Sec., 95, Gainsbro-grove, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

GARSTON B.B.A.

Meeting held Baptist Schoolroom, Earp-street, May 19th, when a paper was read by Mr. Alfred Wilkinson on "The Breeding and Rearing of Young Birds." The subject was dealt with in a very creditable and masterly manner. At the conclusion, an interesting discussion followed. The usual vote of thanks to the lecturer was accorded unanimously. Three new members were proposed, viz., Messrs. Molyneux (Aigburth), Seddon (Wooiton), and Walker (Liverpool).—J. F. D. ALEXANDER, Hon. Sec.

BUCKHAVEN AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held May 15th, Mr. Allan Peters (president) in the chair. A lecture was given by Mr. D. Baird on "The Rearing and Breeding of Canaries," which was listened to with keenest interest by those present. At the finish several questions were asked, and were answered in a most satisfactory manner. It was decided to hold a table show for British birds (hard-billed) at the next monthly meeting to be held June 12th. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.—JOHN LAWRIE, Sec.

YORK C.B.S.

Whist drive held at headquarters, "All Saints' Church Room, North Street, on May 10th. Seventy-six members and friends took part. The committee had arranged four prizes for ladies and four for gentlemen. Considering the season for whist drives is getting well advanced, the committee thought this number very satisfactory. Mr. A. Waud (Secretary) had all the arrangements well in hand, and gave his usual smart attention. The M.C.'s were Messrs. T. Wright, H. Watson, and H. Thompson, to whom our thanks are due for the painstaking way they looked after everybody. At the close the Chairman (Mr. A. Richardson) presented the prizes to the successful winners. Ladies: 1, Miss Sumpton, score 120 (lady's satchell); 2, Miss Shackleton, score 113 (lady's umbrella); sealed, Mrs. Fairburn, score 103 (lady's purse); and booby, Mrs. Alderson, score 79 (flower vase). Gentlemen: 1, S. Campling, score 113 (gent.'s brush and comb); 2, H. W. Watson, score 111 (gent.'s pocket knife); sealed, C. Warriner, score 103 (silver-mounted pipe); booby, H. Dixon, score 77 (gent.'s stick).

Twenty-two members and friends made up a party which left York on May 23rd by the 9.57 train for Strinsall. On arrival at Strinsall the party was met by Mr. Hatfield, who ably acted as guide. All necessary arrangements had been made for a really good day in the country, after being closed up all the week. A start was made for Flaxton. Out in the distance could be seen the beautiful old castle at Gilling. Making our way back across the common we saw some beautiful birds, and heard their lovely song. Our dear old friend, the Very Rev. the Dean of York, said, on opening our annual exhibition of Cage Birds, that birds were the lords of creation, and were sent to brighten the lives of poor citizens. And this they did to its fullest extent on this occasion. The first to take our attention was the Linnet, singing so splendidly that it made you feel you were pleased you had taken the trouble to journey seven miles to hear him. We also came across the Greater Whitethroat, Lark, Whinchat, Song Thrush, Siskin, and Yellowhammer. Also we heard the Cuckoo. Getting back to Strinsall Village (passing wild strawberries in abundance), light refreshment was provided by Mrs. Sutcliffe and Mrs. Wilson. The party keeping to the fields on the banks of the Foss, then wended its way back to York, which was reached at about 4.30, all having spent a very pleasant day and enjoying the beautiful walk home. Thanks were given to Mr. Hatfield for taking so much trouble to map out our route and helping to make the walk so pleasant and enjoyable. The following friends expressed the pleasure it gave them to have been able to join the party: Messrs. H. Hopper, C. Young, G. Sawdon, E. Boyes, J. Brain, Mrs. Wilson, Miss Boyes, and Master E. Waud. The committee and members in reply said it always gave them pleasure in seeing and making friends, and especially those who took an interest in birds and Nature, Mr. A. Waud, the Secretary, was thanked for carrying out the arrangements to everybody's satisfaction.—A. RICHARDSON, Chairman.

UNITED METROPOLITAN SHOW.

A meeting of delegates representing the Carshalton F.A., the Civil Service F.A., and the South Metropolitan F.A. took place on May 4th for the purpose of framing a set of rules to govern the above-named show. It was agreed that rules adopted by this meeting be submitted to the various London and Suburban societies for their consideration. It is hoped secretaries will bring the matter before their members at the earliest possible date so that no time may be lost in calling a meeting to elect officers and make arrangements for the 1909 show.

Synopsis of Governing Rules.

That the show be called The Grand United Metropolitan Show, its objects being to promote a grand annual show, open only to members of affiliated societies, thereby creating keener competition amongst the members, poultry, pigeons, rabbits, cavies, Cage Birds, and fancy mice being the varieties catered for. The show shall consist of an unlimited number of societies, and for the present residing within an unlimited area. That the show be under the direction and management of the following officers, viz., Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Treasurer, Secretary (honorary or otherwise, as may be deemed necessary), Assistant Secretary and Committee. That the Secretary and Treasurer each shall be bonded to the amount of £25, the show bearing the expense of such bond. That four members be elected as committeemen. That the annual show be held within a radius of 3 miles from St. Paul's Cathedral. Any profit or loss incurred at an annual show shall be divided or made up by the whole of the societies supporting the Grand United Metropolitan Show, such societies to receive or pay their share in proportion to the number of entries made by each Society. Note: By affiliating to the above show it is not meant to infer that societies joining should not hold a further open or members' show on their own account, or to in any way interfere with existing rules or regulations of any Society. The show already has one challenge cup.—A. WATSON, Hon. Sec. pro tem

Correspondence.

The Rook and the Crow.

SIR,—Would you kindly allow me to settle an argument through the correspondence column of CAGE BIRDS? It is this: Is the Rook and the Crow one and the same species? If not, what is the difference? I should be pleased to have any information your readers can give me on the subject. Wishing your valuable paper every success.

Remarkable Egg Laying.

SIR,—Amongst our stock we have a most prolific hen. She laid six eggs first round; second round she laid seven, so thinking she had finished, sat her on five eggs. Our astonishment was great on looking into her nest a week later to find she had nine under her, making eleven eggs in all she had laid this round! There is no mistake, as each egg, as it is laid, is put into a cabinet with drawers numbered to correspond with the number on the cage and a careful record is kept. Being our champion pair, we were obliged to call to our assistance two foster mothers. There seems no lack of eggs this season. We have three other pairs with six under each, all going merrily. Returning to the first round, three hens had 16 eggs between them; 13 chicks were hatched, and three were dead in shell. We reckon it is the Dulwich air that stimulates them.

Green Marked Yorkshire Canary Club.

SIR,—A well-attended and enthusiastic meeting of Yorkshire fanciers assembled at the Market Tavern, Bradford, on May 22, to inaugurate this new open specialist club. Mr. W. H. Shackleton, one of our premier Yorkshire exhibitors, was prevailed upon to take the chair. He lucidly placed before the meeting the chief reasons which had led to the desire for the formation of this club. He could conscientiously assure those present, he said, that the promoters were only actuated by the highest possible motives in desiring to do justice to the green marked bird. Every breeder of repute knew the value of this bird. It was the fountain head of colour and quality. Why, then, should it be left out in the cold? The only marked birds catered for really were the Cinnamon marks. This club would supply a long-felt want. The only thing the club desired was the same facilities as were granted to other sections; then this club would soon equal the other specialist clubs. The value of the green-marked bird would increase by leaps and bounds, especially the hens, which had so far, with one or two exceptions, been entirely neglected. If a bird has value from a breeder's standpoint, surely it has value from a show point of view. Suppose for a moment, he said, a bird to be an ideal Yorkshire bird in type, size, shape and quality, but rather heavily marked, its value was infinitesimal compared with a bird of lighter marking or clear, although a much inferior bird in other respects. All the new club desired was the hearty co-operation and support of Yorkshire breeders and exhibitors; then he felt sure of the unbounded success of the new club. (Applause.) The intending members presently got to business in electing its chairman, hon. secretary, and a committee of seven pro tem. It was felt that the Committee should be voted upon later, as there would probably be many new members enrolled, and they desired it to be as representative as possible.—Mr. W. H. Shackleton was unanimously elected Chairman, Mr. F. Armstrong, 78, Pear Street, Halifax, as hon. secretary, and Messrs. Ogden Bros., H. W. Walsh, S. Dean, W. Crabtree, F. Hammond, H. Hill, and J. Wilcock as Committee pro tem. The club seems assured of a glorious success. We have already enrolled nearly 60 members, including gentlemen in the North, Midlands, and Lancashire, and prominent Yorkshire exhibitors. Mr. Shackleton has promised a five-guinea trophy, Messrs. Ogden Bros. one of two guineas, and others. Intending members will thus see that the club is on a sound basis. Rally round us, fanciers! give us your support please, and this will rank as one of the strongest specialist clubs. The Committee meet May 29, Market Tavern, Bradford, 6.30 p.m. Business: Drawing up of rules and regulations.

A Question for Mealworm Breeders.

SIR,—That the beetles of the mealworm have well-developed wings your correspondent, F. Vincent, might easily have discovered for himself by taking a dead beetle and carefully removing the blackish, horny wing case—to use an utterly unscientific term for the sake of clearness—on the back, when the transparent gauzy fly-like real wings will be found elaborately folded and packed away beneath. Or by holding a live beetle, a little gentle persuasion with the end of a match stick or similar article at the end of the wing case will probably cause it to unfurl its wings in a very convincing manner. The beetles are certainly quite capable of flight, but those who attempt mealworm breeding do not, as a rule, give them the chance to fly away. The boxes or other receptacles are, or should be, always kept covered. As regards the worms eating the eggs, I would not venture to express an opinion; but this I do know, that there are few things which either the beetles or worms will not gnaw away and damage, including such delicacies as cardboard, paper, linen, woollen, and wood. Whether they really eat all they gnaw I will not say, but I am certain the beetles will eat cardboard.

Cockatiels Hatched Under Budgerigars.

SIR,—It would no doubt be of interest to your readers to know that I have two young Cockatiels (now ten days old), which were hatched under Budgerigars. They are both strong, and are doing well. As they are in a cokernut nest, I hardly know, at present, how they will get on when they are bigger. I have a very large aviary, also a smaller one. The large aviary contains a varied collection: Budgerigars, Cockatiels, Lovebirds, Rosellas, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, Greenfinches, Mandarin Ducks, and one African dove. The smaller one is reserved for Canaries, and a variety of small foreign Finches and Waxbills (I do a bit of dealing but not much). I have quite a lot of young birds and eggs, and am looking forward to a good breeding season. I have lost several very good birds through their getting drowned in the small brook which flows through the bottom end of my large aviary. Only a fortnight ago I found my hen Rosella drowned. She was just ready to lay. The cock bird has searched in every corner for her, and is even now perpetually calling her. I have covered the water over now with wire netting, leaving a small shallow place where they can drink and bathe. They all keep in splendid condition, and sleep in the open (under cover) all the winter, refusing to go into the roosting shed, which is rather dark.

H. LEWIS.

Some Interesting Foreign Birds.

SIR,—Among the most interesting birds for a novice at foreign bird-keeping to commence with are the Waxbills. They are among the smallest of birds—cheery little souls, full of life and vitality, and on the go all day long, when acclimatised and well treated. A Crystal Palace aviary in a sitting-room makes a nice home for them if placed in a good light, and in a sheltered spot where no draughts can blow through it. I prefer a roomy, box cage, say 3ft. long, 2ft. high, and 1ft. deep, which will hold eight or ten of them comfortably. If well made and enamelled pale blue inside, and holly green outside, it looks well, and is better for the birds than an all-wire cage. If the cage is made like a double breeding cage, with sliding partition in the centre, the birds can be kept in one compartment while the other is being cleaned out. Fit the cage up with perches of different sizes (natural branches are best), and hang up three or four rush nests, or cokernut shells, lined with felt nest linings for them to sleep in. White millet is the staple dict for these little birds, but they must also have Canary and spray millet. Plenty of water for drinking and bathing, also grit and cuttlefish bone must be supplied. During the spring, summer and autumn give green food regularly. The flowering and seeding heads of grass are liked best, and if covered with blight all the better. Most of these little birds go almost mad for green fly and spiders, which are very good for them, and a grand pick-me-up for fresh imported birds. During the birds' moult, or when they are down in condition, tinge the drinking water with eight or ten drops of Parrish's Chemical Food which is an excellent tonic. Beginners must not be discouraged if they lose many birds when these are bought freshly imported from the dealers. The majority of the birds are very delicate at first, but quite hardy when acclimatised. Always buy acclimatised birds, if possible. Here is the writer's experience of a few species. Cordon Bleu: A beautiful little bird. Top of head, back and wings grey-brown; face, breast, sides and tail bright blue; beak red, and bright crimson ear-patches. The hen is without the crimson ear-patches. The cock bird has a few musical phrases, but no proper song, and the hen tries to sing a little. Simply crazy they are after green fly and spiders, which they take from my fingers or from a pair of tweezers. Blue-breasted Waxbills: Almost similar to the preceding species, but with larger heads and darker (purplish) beaks. The cock bird has no crimson ear-patches. This is a rather expensive little bird, but is the best singer of the lot—we compare ours to a Lark. Lavender Finches: Chubby little birds, and the clowns of the cage. They can never keep still, but are always trying to pull a rush nest to pieces, or else are playing at tug-of-war with a piece of ribbon. One bird wil amuse itself for hours taking a piece of ribbon into a nest and pulling it in hand-over-hand, or rather beak-over-beak, and then pulling it out again. They are as fond of spiders as the Cordon Bleus, and will take them from my fingers. In colour they are of different shades of lavender-grey, with a black streak through the eye, and lovely ruby-red rumps and tails. These birds, when in condition, have a bloom on them like a peach. Common Fire Finches: Delicate little mites, brown on the top of the head, having brownish red backs and tails, and bright red breasts. These birds look best by gas-light. Their call-note is similar to a Canary's. St. Helena Waxbills: Brown birds, with wavy markings of a darker shade all over them. Coral-red beaks, red streak through eye, and rosy breasts. Very pretty birds they are, with a nice little song. Orange-Breasted Waxbills: The smallest of the lot, and the smallest foreign birds imported alive. Timid little birds, with no song but a loud call-note. They do not seem fond of green food or insects. Greenish-brown backs and orange-red breasts and rumps, red beaks and fan-shaped tails. The hen has a pale yellow breast. Avadavat: Almost as small as the preceding, and an interesting little bird. The winter plumage of the cock is brown, which turns to red with white spots in summer. This bird has a sweet song. Green Avadavat: A larger bird than the common Avadavat, and quite different. Grcenish-brown above and white with dark bars below, and red beak.

A Peterborough Tragedy.

SIR,—I think the appended account, sent to a Peterborough paper by Mr. H. Anker (of Cowgate), will interest readers of CAGE BIRDS. I was much interested, says the writer, in reading the account of the piebald Blackbird in Peterborough Park and of her life and death scrimmage with two other lady Blackbirds. But an even more interesting incident has occurred between a lady Blackbird and a lady Thrush in the Gaol gardens at Thorpe Road, Peterborough. The Thrush and the Blackbird had built nests in the Gaol garden, selecting sites very near to each other. Both had broods of young birds about the same time. The mother Thrush not only fed her own young, but also gave free meals to the young Blackbirds in the neighbouring nest, the mother of which was a little given to gallivanting and really ought to have had the Inspector of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Chicks put on her track. She intensely disliked her neighbours pushing their beaks into her affairs, however, and when, a week or so ago, she found the mother Thrush feeding the young Blackbirds, she resented it warmly and without more ado fiercely attacked the mother Thrush. A life to death struggle followed. The Blackbird and the Thrush fought as only ladies can, but victory is not always with the virtuous, and the Thrush paid for her kindness with her life. When the Blackbird had her neighbour dead on the stricken and feathery field, she satisfied her vindictive savage little soul by pecking out the Thrush's eyes.

Coalville and District Cage Bird Society.

SIR,—A meeting was held on May 15 at the Three Horse Shoes Hotel, Hugglescote, when it was definitely decided to form a society, to be called the "Coalville and District Cage Bird Society. The reason we have decided to call it that is because we thought outside fanciers might otherwise think it was the old society reformed. I can assure them that it is a new society for all interested in the welfare of cage-birds. I am pleased to say we have a good muster of cage-bird fanciers, and a very good meeting was the result. At the close we enrolled 22 members, which I think was very good. We have decided to have a nest feather show on June 19, at the above-mentioned hotel. We are open to a radius of six miles for our first attempt, and I think we shall do very well. It was decided to make the entrance fee 1s. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, J. Sidney Thompson, Esq.; John Kirby, Esq., D.C., chairman; vice-chairman, Mr. Ernest J. Holmes; Committee, Messrs. E. Taylor, F. Saunders, G. Knight, H. Toone, W. Richards, J. Bird, J. Johnson, and others. I shall be pleased if fanciers and all interested in the Fancy in the district will be kind enough to forward their names and addresses to me, and also try to be at our next meeting, which is fixed for May 29 at 7 o'clock at headquarters, the Three Horse Shoes Hotel.

A Mule Breeding Experience.

SIR,—Is my experience, which I am writing about, in any way remarkable? All my friends disbelieve me and call me a "gentleman," although I have challenged them to come and see for themselves; but they won't come, so I thought I would write you. I have a cock Goldfinch and a hen Canary, and on the 25th of March I put them side by side in separate cages. All went well, and on the 1st of April I put them together. I had seven eggs in all, one of which I broke. I set her on three, and she laid the other three afterwards. I took the cock away only when I had set the hen on the three eggs, and my friends say because she laid the three eggs afterwards that none of them would be any good. However, I took no notice of what they said, and left it to chance, and on the 30th April I found three had hatched. Then one was hatched the next day, and another the next, but the sixth egg never turned at all, so after a day or two I broke it and found it was "rotten." Now, the five youngsters are doing nicely so far; they are 20, 19, and 18 days respectively. They are getting about the cage, have a fly now and then, but do not pick seed for themselves yet. The mother feeds them well, and they are nice birds now. But my friends (all bird fanciers) will not believe me; they say it is too early for Mules. I forgot to mention that the hen had never laid an egg before, and is eight months old; that makes them disbelieve it the more. I should be glad if you could let me have your opinion in CAGE BIRDS. I may add that one friend of mine has had no fewer than 23 eggs this year—6 Goldie-Canary, and the rest Canaries, and all he has to show for them is four young Canaries; whilst another friend had six Canaries' eggs, but the hen died during setting, and all eggs were found to be bad.

A BRIGHTON BEGINNER.

(There would seem to be no ground for the scepticism displayed by the friends of "A Brighton Beginner," as many instances of Mules being bred at an earlier date have been recorded in our columns from time to time. It is quite wrong to think that eggs cannot be fertile because they are laid after the male bird has been taken away from the hen.—EDITOR).

The Challenge Cups of the Northern British Bird, Mule and Foreign Bird Club.

As a specialist body the above club is on the right road to success, writes Mr. J. Bertram, the secretary (95, Gainsbro' Grove, Newcastle-on-Tyne), as we have provided three cups for competition, viz., for British birds, Mules, and Foreign birds, which have been won for the first year by Messrs. J. W. Bruce (Coldstream), W. J. Taylor (Newcastle), and J. McKenzie (Low Fell) respectively. The interest and friendly spirit shown by the members seems to bring better gatherings to the meetings every month. Papers are read on different varieties, and the classes provided for field-moulted British birds create great interest and keen competition. Some good specimens have been staged, especially Linnets, as every fancier seems to keep one or more of these interesting songsters (they are second to none). As the cage-bird fancy is increasing with leaps and bounds in this district, I appeal to Northern fanciers to join us, and help to make this specialist club one of the best and strongest in the North. Any fancier desirous of becoming a member should please communicate with me; subscription 2s. 6d.

CANARY QUERIES.

Hen Found Wanting.

J.N.—It is your hen that is at fault in not breeding successfully. Unless she is quite a young hen, I should imagine she is past her first youth, and very likely also inclined to obesity. Feed her on plain Canary as a staple for a week, during which time give a pinch of summer rape about three times, and no other seeds or foods at all. Allow an unlimited supply of green food daily—groundsel for preference. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts every second day. At the end of the week, begin to give her a few grains of inga and gold of pleasure on alternate days, and a very little egg food twice a week. Also give dandelion instead of the groundsel for green food daily, and then try her again as soon as she begins calling with the freshest of the cocks.

Plucks Feathers & Does Not Sing

T.D.—I hardly think your Canary can be in very good health, as you say. It is probable the variable weather during the first half of May affected it, and set it off moulting, and now the moult has progressed so far I would advise you to let it follow its course, as the bird should then be quite fine and in good song just when the others will be dropping off for moulting, and will therefore be very useful to keep the young ones in training whilst the moulting season lasts. Feed as I am frequently advising for song birds; give a small quantity of egg food twice a week, and a little green food daily. Let it bathe as often as it likes and during the summer add a few drops of quassia extract to the bath. Examine cage to see if any red mite are about, as I suspect these are partly the cause. Give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and a similar quantity of chlorate of potash in the drinking water every second day for a week, and on the alternate days twenty drops of Chemical Food, continuing latter for a fortnight.

Growth on Beak.

"Strathmore."—I fear this hen is in a generally unhealthy condition, and would advise you not to attempt any further breeding with her this year. Separate and keep her in a good-sized cage or flight where she can get plenty of vigorous exercise. Prick the swelling on beak with a clean needle, press out contents; bathe it with a deep pink solution of permanganate of potash, and afterwards anoint it for a day or two with boracic ointment. Feed on a staple of plain Canary seed, and give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of egg food with two drops of cod-liver emulsion well mixed in it each time. Twice each week for the first fortnight also mix in the egg food, as much as will cover a sixpence, of two parts of flowers of sulphur to one part chlorate of potash. Twice a week give just a pinch of mixture of equal parts of hemp, inga, maw, and gold of pleasure, seeds. Give a liberal supply of green food daily—chickweed, if obtainable, in preference to any other. Allow it to bathe freely. In the drinking water give six drops of dandelion juice, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash every second day for a week, and on the alternate days give six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. In the second week give twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day. Then omit all medicines for a week, and begin again and repeat the above two weeks' course.

Result of a Shock.

F.C.B.—It is very difficult to say whether your bird will sing again. I have known similar cases in which the bird, although perfectly healthy, has not sung for many years afterwards, others may begin again in a few weeks, whilst others never sing any more. From the fact of your bird sitting moping, I should imagine it received a scratch from the cat somewhere which has not yet healed. Offer it a bath daily and twice a week add a few crystals of permanganate of potash to it. Give a small quantity of egg food or crushed sponge cake three times a week, and on each of the other days give a few grains of either hemp, inga, or gold of pleasure, not altogether, but first one and then another. In the drinking water add two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel for a day or two each week. Probably a month of this treatment will enable it to get over the shock and resume singing.

Clear Eggs and Vibration.

"Magpie."—If you had said how you feed the birds I should have been in a better position to judge the cause of your failure. I have little doubt it was due to the cocks not being in breeding condition when you mated them, and also to their position in the attic, which would probably have some very extreme fluctuations of heat when the birds were going to nest, which would account for the eggs being clear. If the cocks are not in very vigorous condition, it is quite possible for them to go through all the appearances of successful mating repeatedly and yet all the eggs prove unfertile, so you see I cannot really tell you whether you will have better luck this time after what you have seen. It all depends upon whether the cocks are now in a more forward condition or not. The vibration from heavy traffic will not affect the fertility of the birds in any way, neither is it likely to affect the hatching of the eggs, providing they are fertile.

Overgrown and Sore Beaks.

W.T.A.—I cannot tell you the reason. Some beaks grow much more rapidly than others, with no apparent reason. Health has nothing to do with it—at any rate, in some cases. Is the small sore you mention underneath the top mandible—this is inside the beak—or under the lower mandible? It may possibly have been done accidentally when cutting the beak, or it may be due to friction against a badly made water hole in the wires, or to irritation from red mite. Look into these causes and you may—if the sore is outside the beak, not otherwise—anoint it a few times with zinc ointment. To help to keep the beak in order, bind a narrow strip of fine sand-paper around one end of a perch, or put a piece of lump sugar in the wires for the bird to peck at. A piece of cuttlefish hung in the cage will also help to keep it short. You might also treat the bird for one week as advised to "Strathmore."

Not Gone Straight.

"Crooked Pair."—Are you quite certain about the sex of the cock? Personally, I should have serious doubts about it if he was, as you say, apparently quite healthy and yet so backward with a hen that is clearly in very good condition. You might give the cock a course of plain diet, abundant green food, and saline aperients for a week, as advised to "Breton," then feed him up for a week or fortnight as advised in latter part of same reply, and try again. It is quite probable he might fill a late clutch of eggs. Failing this, you might, as you suggest, try the hen with the cock Chaffinch. If any young were bred from this cross, provided you could prove beyond doubt that the cock Canary had not any access to the hen during the meantime, I can promise you that they would not only be of "some good," but would be very valuable. Indeed, you would, I believe, enjoy the distinction of breeding the first really authentic specimens of this cross. It is only fair to tell you that the cross is a very difficult one, so be prepared for failure.

A Broken Leg.

Very Anxious.—If the leg was broken near the foot in such a way that it simply hung by a bit of skin, the best thing you could have done for it was to complete the amputation with a pair of clean, sharp nail scissors, and checked any bleeding that might have occurred by touching it with a drop of Friars Balsam. However, as you have attempted to "set" it, and bandaged it up, you had better leave it quite alone now for three or four weeks, by which time the union should be well established, if it should happen that you have by a chance stroke of luck made a good job of it. The fact that the bird seems easier is certainly a hopeful sign that it is doing well so far. You may keep it in the same cage, but arrange the perches in such a way that the bird can get from one to another quite easily and without special effort. Also see it can reach its food and water quite easily without any straining. In short, arrange things so that it can do all this easily whilst using only one foot. Give a little extra green food—watercress, or groundsel—to prevent any constipation arising.

Wheezy and Sweating.

"Sträight 'Un."—The real cause of your hens' sweating their first brood is in all probability that they are not in healthy, vigorous condition. The fact of their being a bit wheezy points to this, and, as you surmise, it is also highly probable the oil stove was largely, if not solely, the cause of the wheeziness. The room facing South-West would undoubtedly be better than the one facing East, but as the latter aspect is not really a bad one, you would be well advised to let the birds remain where they are until the breeding season is over. If the wheeziness has not disappeared, add twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil to the water for a few days in all cases save where young are being reared. Give plenty of fresh pure air, but see that draughts are avoided. Let them bathe freely, and when young are hatched give them a bath in which a little common salt has been dissolved if they show any signs of sweating. Give a free supply of green food, but avoid dandelion, and in other respects feed as recommended in detail in many replies during the last month. An outdoor birdroom of wood, if well built and having double-boarded sides, should be quite as serviceable as a brick building.

A Backward Male.

W.G.A.—Although the hen could not have been quite up to the mark when she laid her eggs on alternate days, I have no doubt the backward condition of the cock was solely the cause of your failures. In the first place your feeding was not calculated to keep him in the most vigorous health, and the close confinement was all against his successful mating with a sprightly young hen in a larger cage. The little improvement you saw in him when mated the second time was simply due to the fact that he was beginning to throw off the effects of the close confinement. Treat as follows for two or three weeks, and it is quite possible he may get active enough to fill the next clutch of eggs. Keep him in a good-sized cage out of reach of draughts. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one summer rape. Twice in the first week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and two of cod liver emulsion well mixed in it. Give a free supply of chickweed or groundsel daily. In the drinking water give six drops dandelion juice, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day, and four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid on alternate days. After the first week continue same staple diet, and give half a teaspoonful of sponge cake, or egg-food, with two drops of cod liver oil as before, and a pinch of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it every second day, and on the alternate days twice a week a pinch of hemp, and on two other days a pinch of inga. Give two or three leaves of dandelion daily. In the drinking water give twenty drops chemical food for a few days. After a week of this treatment you may mate him again as soon as the hen is ready.

Canary Queriists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

A Mating Query.

A Beginner.—The hen with which you first mated the cock was not quite ready for it. The other, which starts "scrapping" when the cock is put in, is, I imagine, in a more forward condition. These little scrimmages between a pair when first put together are not always a bad sign. They really amount to nothing more serious than using "bad words" at each other, and the pair is usually very soon mutually agreed to settle down to business. If you still have the cock with the first hen, leave them together by all means; they only require a little patience. Feed as frequently described the last few weeks, and give a few leaves of dandelion daily. The hen will probably soon begin nesting now. When she has commenced sitting you may, if you wish, remove the cock and mate him with the other hen. If they commence fighting again, leave them quite alone, unless you see actual damage is being done. The latter event is not very likely, and by the following day things will be running more smoothly.

No Eggs Forthcoming.

Breton.—It is very probable the two hens are late hatched, and consequently still very young. You may leave the green St. Helena Canary with her mate, and add a pinch of Epsom salts to drinking water every second day for a week. Give also half a teaspoonful of egg-food with a pinch of gold of pleasure seeds mixed in it, every second day, and on the alternate days a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. Separate the other two hens if there are still no signs of nesting, and for one week give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and six drops of dandelion juice in the drinking water two days in every three, and during this time limit diet to a mixture of two parts Canary to one part summer rape, with a liberal supply of chickweed and dandelion. During second week reduce the staple mixture to three parts Canary to one part rape, give a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with a pinch of gold of pleasure mixed in it every second day, and on the alternate days a pinch of equal parts of hemp and inga, and two or three leaves of dandelion each daily. After this you may try mating them again.

Not Nesting.

Beginner, P.H. No. 3.—It is evident the birds are not in good breeding condition, and I am inclined to attribute this to your unskilful feeding and management, and, perhaps, partly to the fact that the birds are very young. You would be well advised to get one of our practical handbooks which you see advertised weekly. See the birds do not get any draught from the open window; keep the cage perfectly clean, well strewn with gritty sand; hang in a piece of cuttlefish and see it is quite free from any red mite colonies. Give a bath daily, but do not allow the cage to remain in a wet condition afterwards. Feed the bird on a staple diet of three parts Canary to one part summer rape mixed together. Every second day give a small teaspoonful of egg food with a pinch of gold of pleasure mixed in it, and on the alternate days give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts of hemp and inga. Give three or four leaves of dandelion daily, but if you have not been giving green food every day, do not give this quantity all at once. Begin with two leaves a day, and in the course of a week increase it to four leaves a day. Continue this feeding until the hen has gone to nest, which she may do in a short time. There is no fee for answering queries. See rules at head of column almost every week.

Brevities.

Giving Baths to Sitting Hens ("Novice").—Certainly you will be doing quite right to allow sitting hens free access to the bath, especially now there is a prospect of warmer weather coming. During the last few days of incubation in very warm weather it is most advisable to let the hens bathe freely if they desire to do so.

How to Colour Feed (J. Latham).—You cannot colour-feed your birds until the moulting season, when they are changing their plumage. The proper time to begin is just before the birds begin to cast feathers, generally about the end of August. By that time you will see lots of information in the shape of lectures and articles in our columns giving full details of the process, which is far too lengthy a subject to be dealt with fully here. If then there is anything you cannot understand, send along a query, and I will clear the point for you.

Canaries in Inside Aviary (D.H.).—Your query is rather vague, as you give no idea as to the size of the aviary, nor whether you want the birds to fly at liberty or be kept in separate pairs. In either case there is no reason whatever why they should not breed, provided the aviary is of adequate size for the purpose, and not overcrowded with specimens. If the birds are to fly loose, it would not be advisable to have the same number of each sex. One cock to every two or three hens, according to size of aviary, and the vigour of the birds is quite sufficient. An aviary containing six square feet of floor space would accommodate one cock and two hens for breeding—not more.

Young Dying (W. E. Bingham).—I suspect the cause was that the hen ceased to feed them. Had they any food in the crops? If you look up the last few issues, you will find full details for feeding from the time young are hatched. Follow up these directions next time, and do not begin to give hemp until young are eight days old. Also after the fourth day add a little crushed stale sponge cake to the egg food, and gradually increase the quantity until you are using two parts egg food to one part crushed sponge cake. Also give groundsel, chickweed or lettuce, freely, in preference to watercress. Watch hens, and if they seem to flag in feeding at once give them a bath, having previously dissolved a little common salt in it—about a heaped teaspoonful to a pint of water.

A Feathered Suffragette (Frances).—The hen has doubtless joined the new movement, and intends to throw off the yoke of mere male. There is no practical way of making such specimens submit to the orthodox rule. I can only suggest that you should put her in one side of a double breeder and a vigorous young cock in the other side, feed her plainly for a few days, and add a pinch of Epsom salts to the water for a day or two. Then she may come to her senses and accept him for better or worse.

No Results (McGinty).—The pair mated on Good Friday were in no condition for mating at all, and the weather we have had since has kept them from coming forward; hence their failing to make any attempt to nest. They seem to be just starting into condition, so I would advise you to leave them together, and treat as advised to "Breton" for the St. Helena Canary, except that you may omit the salts in water, and also give your birds two or three dandelion leaves each day. The other that laid two eggs, and has done nothing since, treat for a fortnight as advised in latter half of reply to "Breton."

Norwich Off Song (Swallow).—Your bird has probably been exposed to a draught. See that any recurrence of this cause is quite avoided, but keep it in a well-ventilated place, where the air is always pure and fresh. Feed as advised "Beginner, P.H. No. 3," but add two drops each sherry and cod liver oil emulsion to soft food each time in the first week. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, shaking it well together, two days in every three for a week, and every alternate day for another week, if necessary. Whether he will be sufficiently recovered in time to get a late brood off him depends upon the severity of his condition as well as his powers of recuperation.

Bare Round Neck (J.R.L.).—Your birds are probably getting old, if they are not really infested with red mites. You should, however, examine cages rather than the birds for evidence of red mites. In any case, you will not be able to make much improvement until they moult, when they will probably renew the feathers on the parts that are now bare. To help towards this end, as soon as the birds have done breeding give them a course of treatment for a month or so as advised to "Perplexed" in last issue. For the present you can only encourage them to bathe freely, and occasionally add a few drops of quassia essence. Give a free supply of green food, and when young are not being fed occasionally add a pinch of Epsom salts, and chlorate of potash, and six drops of lemon juice to drinking water. Just slightly anoint bare places with sulphur ointment.

Yorkshire with Cold (E. J. Quinlan).—The diet need not vary from the normal to any extent in the treatment of a bad cold. The most important point is to remove the cause and prevent a recurrence. Do not keep the bird in an overheated or variable temperature, and see it is free from draughts. As a staple, give three parts Canary to one summer rape; twice a week half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, in which well mix two drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion each time until cold has disappeared. On two other days give a pinch of inga, and twice a few grains of hemp. Give a little green food daily. In drinking water give twenty drops whiskey, ten glycerine, and two eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week, and every second day for another week after, if necessary.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Brevities.

Song of Blackbird (Curious).—I think the bird certain to sing this year, if really a male. It is not improbable that the old bird previously "sang him down"; I have heard many fanciers affirm that this kind of thing happens.

Cutting Its Tongue (Starling).—The cutting of any bird's tongue with the idea of helping it to talk, is an unnecessary cruelty, and it ought not to be practised. As a matter of fact, the Starling does not even use its tongue to talk with—its vocal organ (the syrinx) is right down in the throat. Tell your friend not to behave cruelly to his helpless birds.

A Mating Matter (Philo).—There are no hard and fast rules governing the doings of birds in aviaries, and very often the strangest things happen. The probability is, however, that if you put in a hen Bullie, the cock Bullie will withdraw his attentions from the hen Linnet—or, perhaps I had better say, ignore her advances.

A Lark's Foot (Lark, S. Wales).—If the lump is a hard one, try painting it lightly twice daily with colourless tincture of iodine. If the place appears to be full of matter (pus), it is evident you let some dirt get into the wound; then you will have to open the place and gently squeeze the matter out, afterwards well washing with the boracic solution. In any case keep the bird for a time on a clean turf only.

A Disappearance (E.E.).—Pity you do not state what other birds are in the aviary. The "Chaffinch-Linnet" cross is somewhat hard to believe in, though I should hesitate to say it could not be obtained. I have never known it. I don't think either Chaffinch or Linnet were responsible for the disappearance of the two youngsters. This was the work of mice, I should think, for they are often guilty of "child stealing" from outdoor aviaries.

Concerning a Jay (A.G.H.).—A cage 36 inches long is really too small to keep a Jay in permanently. Your bird would benefit, I should say, by a sojourn in a large outdoor place. You should let him have the opportunity of eating green foods; also vary his diet by offering a mouse frequently, or a Sparrow, or a raw egg to suck. Try for a time the effect of mixing a very small teaspoonful of flowers of sulphur amongst his soft food.

A Blue Tit (A. Wright).—Evidently you are not aware of the fact that Blue Tits are not particularly easy to keep in health for any length of time in a cage. I doubt very much whether you will succeed in moulting yours; they are very liable to go thin, waste away, and die. The stock food should be a good quality insectivorous mixture, varied with a plentiful supply of live foods, while a few seeds are eaten occasionally. Live ants' eggs (if you can get them) would assist you to keep your bird.

An Aviary Mystery (G. Morris).—Your feeding seems reasonably accurate, though now green food in plenty ought to be given every day, and you should certainly offer sunflower seed freely. My own explanation of the feather trouble would be that the birds are pestered with the grey bird-lice, and probably with red-mite as well. I certainly should not keep Bantams in my own aviaries, for fowls are notoriously liable to be troubled with lice, unless constantly looked after in this respect.

Young and Old (J. J. Nightingale).—It has been done before, and I have no doubt you can succeed, too, if you take both the old Nightingales and their young, in getting the parents to bring up the brood. You would have to provide plenty of live food, however. Live ants' eggs would bring you success, with mealworms, both alive and cut up, gentles, small blackbeetles, flies (killed by lightly baking them), and other suitable items. A large cage should be put in a quiet place, and covered over with a light material.

Two Matters (Cockie).—1. It is hard to understand the vagaries of some hen Canaries. It would seem as though your hen is no longer as young as she used to be, and is "slacking off" owing to the weight of years. Of course, my guess may be wrong. In any case, I don't see what you can do beyond wait her own good time for going to nest again. You might add two or three drops of Parrish's Chemical Food to the egg-food you give her. 2. Shepherd's-purse has been illustrated in two back numbers of CAGE BIRDS. It is a very common weed on most waste land. In has heart-shaped (flat) seed-pods running up the stem, and a bunch of very tiny white flowers at the top.

Hand-reared Nightingales.

Daulias Luscinia.—You are not the first person, by any means, to be disappointed in the song of hand-reared Nightingales. As I have often said in the past, hand-reared examples are failures from the song point of view (and this applies to more species than 'Gales). If only one could take them out into the lanes and give them a few lessons under a free-singing wild bird, then one might find matters very different. Unfortunately, this is not practicable for the majority of people. I got plenty of enjoyment out of my own hand-reared 'Gales, however, for they mimic the notes of my other birds in very acceptable manner. They have something of the fullness and beauty of voice of the wild Nightingale. I don't see how you can improve upon your feeding methods, except by adding live ants' eggs now to the menu.

Treatment of Chaffinch.

Old Kent Road.—I really seem to be asked quite once a fortnight how to feed Chaffinches. I do not agree with "back-cages" for regular use; it is true, however, that many birds seem to thrive well enough in them. As a staple seed mixture give the following: Canary and teazle four parts each, summer rape, charlock and linseed one part each. In addition give a good feed of white sunflower seed or safflower seed daily; or put one part amongst the stock mixture. Smashed walnuts (and other nuts) are greatly relished also and should be given occasionally as a special treat. A small feed of hemp can be given once a week. Give a mealworm or two every day, varying same with flies, smooth caterpillars, grubs, earwigs, spiders, aphides, gentles, wasp grubs, etc., as obtainable. Chaffinches will eat most kinds of live food. These birds are not particularly keen on green food, but will nibble a sprig of shepherd's purse, chickweed, groundsel, dandelion, etc. Radish, turnip, and summer rape seedlings, are usually eagerly devoured, however, when just sprouting, which they soon begin to do when soaked in cold water.

About a Bramblefinch.

Brambling.—I know of no established instance of a Bramblefinch having successfully mated with a hen Canary. A Bramblefinch is certainly a fine bird for exhibition purposes, if a real good specimen. At many shows a separate class is provided for it; or it competes along with Chaffinches. The bird generally steadies down alright after a moult in the house; often it does not get really tame until then, being naturally of an unsteady nature (some individuals are "kind" enough, however). A good bird ought not to need colour-feeding. If you think well to feed it, its seeds could be lightly crushed, and sweet pepped mixed with them. It should be fed in the same way as a Chaffinch (see reply to "Old Kent Road," this week). As regards the show points, the exhibition Bramble has usually a "laced" head; one with a glossy jet-black ground colour, regularly but not over-heavily spangled is the ideal. The hood requires to be cut cleanly under the beak, leaving the centre of the throat free from black, the hood finishing in sharp, well-defined (not ragged) lines on either side. The wing markings require to be very distinct (the colours not confused, or merged into one another), with a wide, rich brown bar across the shoulder. The bird wants to be as rich in colour as possible, and as big as possible, consistent with a graceful carriage, with a wide chest and bold head.

Hand-reared Goldfinches.

Non-Expert.—I have already given the method of hand-rearing Finches two or three times this season; pity readers will not refer to recent back numbers for replies to queries which are so likely to have been asked and answered before. In several recent issues I have given information on hand-feeding. I don't believe in taking any young Finches from their parents at too early an age; let them show their feathers nicely before you remove them. I would sooner have to "cram" them at first. Up to the twelfth day (from the 10th to 12th) is safe enough. The food to be used is the usual kind—that is, egg and biscuit. Crush two Osborne biscuits, and well mix with them the yolk and half the white of a hard-boiled egg, using a fork to do this with, one with thin prongs. When feeding take the required quantity of this mixture, and make it the consistency of thin paste (or of cream) with new milk. See that it is always sweet and free from the slightest taint of sourness. The egg-food must be made fresh at least once daily. Often I put in a good pinch of Plasmon powder, which I am never without in my bird-room. A few small cut-up pieces of mealworm may be dipped in milk and popped into their mouths pretty frequently; likewise any house flies you can capture should also be fed to them. As the youngsters grow, add a little soaked and just sprouting summer rape to the stock food. Steep the rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a cloth before mixing it in the food.

Points about a Hawfinch.

R.H.D.—Your questions are too lengthy to answer helpfully in the space at my disposal. You should read a good work on British birds. (Get Mr. Norman's from CAGE BIRD'S office), also get the back number of CAGE BIRDS which contained a fine article on the Hawfinch by that well-known exhibitor, Mr. Hakes. If colour-feeding, red-feed should be used (the well-known sweet pepper), and you will probably find it necessary to crush the seed and mix the pepper amongst it. Few Hawfinches, unless hand-reared, will eat soft food as a rule. With regard to its general feeding, the principal food for a caged Hawfinch is sound, plump, white sunflower seed, or mixed sunflower and safflower. Sunflower seed which is black, or striped, however, is not bad, by any means; still, I prefer white myself whenever obtainable. Given this, and a mealworm or two every day or so, the bird asks for little more. The mealworms are a great help in keeping (and getting) a bird steady. The bird also appreciates hemp, linseed, canary, oats, small wheat, and sometimes a little buckwheat, summer rape, small Indian corn, etc. His powerful beak makes short work of beechmast, suitable nuts (walnuts, etc), plum and cherry stones, hawthorn, privet, etc., berries and the like. They appreciate a little young lettuce, watercress, chickweed, shepherd's purse, also ripe apple, pear, etc., occasionally. They make no exception in favour of tender green garden peas, of which they are passionately fond, and these are especially good given in the pod. They are fond of a bath, so let him have one whenever the weather is suitable; daily, if possible. The free use of water is the finest possible thing to keep him in good condition.

Goldfinch Matters.

Dandelion.—1. Hand-feeding Finches is dealt with in another reply this week. 2. I think the hen Linnet and cock Goldfinch may commence "housekeeping" sometime during June; that is a favourite month with Hybrid couples. Your arrangements are alright, though the hen might appreciate an old Linnet nest (one of this season's), pulled to pieces for building material. She might even lay in one if it were fixed up in the bush. I give the choice of an old nest to my own birds. 3. If eggs are perfectly fresh (that is the chief point) they can be sent a distance, when well packed, without harm. 4. It is not so easy to tell at four days, as blood vessels have only just formed, but experienced eyes can detect these signs of fertility when the eggs are held up to a strong light.

Hand-rearing Skylarks.

Leicester.—Skylarks can be very successfully hand-reared on the method I recommend for Thrushes, etc. I have brought up many a one that way. Equal parts of stale bread and best ants' eggs (freed from rubbish), made very moist with new milk, would be a very fair food. To rear strong youngsters, however, I prefer to proceed as follows:—Boil a fresh egg twelve minutes, and, when cold, well mix with a fork the yolk and half of the white into two crushed Osborne biscuits; add to this a small tablespoonful of best ants' eggs (removing bits of stick and rubbish, if present), stirring all well together. Just before you feed, take the necessary portion of food and make it into a sloppy consistency with new milk. In hot weather (and at all times) be careful the food is always fresh and sweet. Feed a little at a time only, but often, from dawn to dusk; and a feed after dark is not at all a bad thing. Cut a few mealworms into pieces, also, dip them into milk, and drop them into the nestlings' mouths. As the youngsters grow, too, add now and then a pinch of small but gritty sand to the food. It seems to act as a preventative of looseness of the bowels (or diarrhœa). Give also at all times flies and like small insects; and live ants' eggs if you can get them. Very young birds want feeding once an hour (do not "stuff" them at any time) at first; every two hours or so at later stages. Cease hand-feeding when they cease to "cry" to be fed, and are picking up food for themselves. Keep warm, cosy, and scrupulously clean. Put the food well down at the back of the tongue, and always be careful not to bruise or lacerate the tender mouths of the nestlings. When they come out of the nest (they do so at an early age), a good turf "run" should be provided for them to "exercise" on; it prevents cramp, a nasty complaint.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

Naming a Parrakeet.

G.P.—Unless you give me some further information re colouration, I fear I cannot name it for you, but it appears you have got hold of either an Indian or an African ring-necked Parrakeet, and either a young bird or a hen. Diet: Seed mixture (canary, millet, wheat, oats, hemp and sunflower seeds in equal parts), ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts and a little green food (lettuce, etc.), with, if course, the usual essentials, cuttlefish, grit and water for drinking and bathing ad lib. I should certainly think it would learn to talk, at any rate a little; keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and also teach it by the constant repetition of words and short phrases, but only one at a time, and do not take up a fresh one till the first is learned.

Parrakeets Killing Young.

M.A.F.W.—I take it your birds are Quaker or grey-breasted Parrakeets, and am really at a loss what to advise. In the first place disturb them as little as possible while they are nesting, and fix up an open fronted barrel as high up as possible, in such a position that renewing food supplies, etc., will not disturb them. Supply a number of small pliable, twiggy branches, of about same length and thickness as those forming the head of a birch broom; give them a good number, as this species is one of the few species of Parrakeets that construct a nest. I should say that either some sudden fright, vermin entering nest, etc., or the young being weaklings, was responsible for the mishap last year, and I incline to the opinion it will not be repeated this, but if such should be the case, send us full particulars at once. Occasionally birds of all species will do as yours have done, and sometimes unfortunately it becomes a permanent vice.

Grey Parrot Unwell.

"Anxious One."—Milk sops and puddings will upset any Grey sooner or later, and after they have been indulged in these things for a fairly long period it is a difficult and lengthy job to undo the mischief. The yolk is just as harmful as the slops, and all must be stopped. Give Dinneford's Magnesia every other day—one teaspoonful in one ounce of water—so long as the voidings are not watery. Continue to use honey and borax; wipe it across the bird's tongue two or three times a day, using a feather or camel-hair brush—but whatever you use should be well cleansed and a fresh portion of the mixture taken for each occasion. On days when you do not give magnesia, dissolve five grains of borax in each ounce of drinking water. Diet: Seed mixture, two parts each Canary and hemp, and one part each oats, wheat, dari, and sunflower seeds; also give ripe fruit (apple, grapes, or orange), nuts, plain biscuit (which you could moisten with equal parts water and Parrish's Chemical Food), chewed bread will do no harm, though it is very unnecessary, neither will sponge cake in small quantities. You must persevere with treatment, as, after two months' illness, recovery will be somewhat slow; if there should be further developments, you had better repeat query at once with full details.

Budgerigars in Loft, etc.

C.E.L.—1, The loft will answer admirably for the purpose, though it would be the better for another light of same dimensions as the one already there, and it would certainly be worth your while to put one in. Fix up your perches and husks where the bird will be secure from draught. A few husks should be put up for winter use. 2, I should rather advise you keeping this aviary for Parrakeets, and put in say, pairs each of Rosellas, Stanleys, and Redrumps, which would make a nice series of brightly-coloured birds, and would thrive on the same diet, viz., seed mixture, fruit, green food, cuttlefish, grit, and water, with a little of such ripe fruit as they fancy. These would all breed once they had settled down. However, if this does not meet your views, repeat this portion of your query and I will supply another list.

What Parrakeet is it?

A.H.S.—You give me no indication as to the size of the birds, and I am unable to say definitely what species they are, but from your descripton they appear to be Lavender-headed or Madagascar Lovebirds, and if both have light lavender heads, then they are both cocks. Give them a mixture of canary and white millet seeds, also hang a millet spray in their cage, say twice a week, and leave them to strip it. A few oats may also be given if they will take them. Greenfood should be given regularly. Lettuce or grass in flower (seeding grass), and a piece of clear cuttlefish should be kept in the cage. If you will give me the information asked for, and say whether tail is long or short, I will definitely name it, and supply directions for breeding in next issue.

Birds for an Aviary.

F. M. Pinnock.—1, I cannot advise you to mix up in an aviary of such dimensions British and foreign birds, or Parrakeets and Finches; and again, quantity depends on whether you wish to breed or merely have a few beautiful birds as pets and for effect. Also I should advise that a shutter be prepared for the most exposed side of the open flight; even for summer weather I do not like an aviary through which the wind has free course, and I certainly advise that the most exposed side be blocked up with either boards or boards and glass; it can be put outside the netting. 2, For effect merely 30 to 40 birds. As I do not know your county, I can only suggest the hardiest species: 1st selection, Zebra, Ribbon, and Spice Finches, Java Sparrows, Norwich Canaries, and Bronzewing Mannikins—one pair of each, some of these would breed. 2nd selection, pairs each of Green and Yellow Budgerigars, Cockatiels, and Rosella Parrakeets. Read my lecture on "Some Common Foreign Birds," in our last issue, it will help you. Repeat query if your need is not met.

Crossing Grey and White Javas.

E. E. Cornwall.—You do not say where you are keeping the Java Sparrows. I should advise a box cage, not less than 24 by 18 by 18 inches, with a nest box at one end, and a husk at the other, which should be partially screened. Prepare your cage, and under existing conditions I should then put her in, with a perfectly strange cock. Disturb them as little as possible when renewing food supplies, and you should succeed. I may say I never experienced the least difficulty in inducing these varietics to cross, and cannot understand your non-success. The White Java is a free breeder, but even here a pair occasionally will turn up that will only play at breeding—produce numbers of eggs, but hatch no young. If you meet with failure again, change your hen. You should give green food at this season, lettuce, grass in flower (seeding grass), etc., otherwise your treatment is satisfactory. Why not try in one of your aviaries, say, two or three cock greys, with as many white hens?

Lavender Finches Out of Doors.

M.R.—Lavender and Fire Finches, also Cordon Bleus, arrive in this country mostly in a very debilitated, if not diseased condition, and they are certainly very fragile when they first arrive. I do not know your county, but unless it is fairly south, I cannot advise you to keep these birds, or any of those named above, out of doors during the winter. During the summer and early autumn they will do best out of doors, and will possibly breed. However, do not turn them out as soon as they arrive, but keep them indoors for say, a week, at least, to get a little established, and it is best to put the cage in the aviary, open the door, and leave the birds to find their way out for themselves. Note, when fresh birds are turned into an aviary, food should always be in some open position, both in the out and indoor portions of the aviary.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Budgerigars for Window Aviary.

T.J.W.—1, Yes, but if the weather should prove at any time exceptionally severe, it would be as well to screen the exposed portion of the aviary for the time being. You would find the green more hardy than the yellow, and therefore suit you the best. You must see the aviary is sufficiently weather-proof, that wet cannot soak through, and make the interior damp; also that your perches are so fixed that the birds will not be in a draught, this is very important. 2, All the Waxbills, Finches and Weavers you name, will do quite well indoors without artificial heat, providing they are protected against draught, and their cages are not too confined, exercise is very important. Also the bath should not be put in their cage, but such an one should be used as can be hung in front of open cage door. If your indoor aviary cage is an all wire one, you must be careful to keep it where the wind from open window cannot blow through it. The birds must, however, have fresh air without draught.

What Species?

Miss R.—I am sorry I cannot definitely name your bird, but from your description it appears to me to be either an ordinary Yellow Collar or Barnard's Parrakeet. The circumstances to which you allude do not represent the actual value of the bird, but such as are by no means uncommon, by which a fictitious value is placed upon an individual bird. However, I will look further into the matter, and insert a further reply as early as possible. Diet: Seed mixture, half the entire bulk to consist of canary and millet seed, the other half to be equal parts of hemp, wheat, oats, darl, and sunflower seeds, well mix and let this form its staple diet. Supply in addition such ripe fruit as it will eat (apple is a favourite with most species), green food, grit, cuttlefish, grit and water. Plain biscuit and a few nuts may also be given if it cares for them, but do not give slops, table scraps or animal food of any kind.

Accident to a Budgerigar.

E.G.—So far as I can gather, the bird is principally suffering from the shock of the fall, and possibly one (or both) of the legs is slightly strained. You can do but little save as far as possible to assist nature to recover from the shock. Give it three drops of Dinneford's magnesia direct to the beak. You can do this from a quill with but little trouble, and well colour its drinking water with Parrish's chemical food; once should suffice for the magnesia. Continue the chemical food till the bird is on its feet again; also supply as much of its natural food, grass in flower (seeding grass), as it will eat. Soak the legs and feet in tepid water, and after drying them, lightly anoint with Elliman's embrocation, using a camel hair brush or feather for the purpose. Also examine the breast, and if this appears bruised foment with hot water (not hot enough to cause the bird discomfort); wipe as dry as possible with a cloth, and if you can do it without making the plumage too greasy, anoint the bruised parts with the embrocation. Any sore or wound should be lightly anointed with zinc or spermaceti ointment. The bird should be caged separately, and it would be a good plan to fix half a cocoanut husk on cage bottom for it to rest in, and its food should be placed for the present within easy reach. It should soon improve unless there is some internal damage or fracture not yet apparent.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. Nortb, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Goldfinch (H. P. White).—Disease of liver, ending with apoplexy. It was a hen.

Canary (H. Clifford).—Inflammation of liver and lungs, ending with apoplexy. May be the result of "severe chill," or of infection.

Green Canary (J. Franks).—Disease of liver, consequent inflammation, involving the lungs, and ending with apoplexy. If you have any other deaths they will indicate existence of infection.

Hen Cockatiel (Northern).—Enlarged liver and inflammation, or "chill," involving lungs and bowels. The body was in good condition, and the initial development of eggs was visible. I cannot form any opinion as to whether it was acclimatised, or newly imported.

Canary (Draper).—Septicæmia, or bird fever. The infection must have been imported into your stock by a contaminated bird or cage, and although the outbreak occurred soon after cages came from a house where scarletina existed, that does not prove this infection came with them. Had there been any infection in them, it would much more likely have developed scarletina amongst the human beings in your house.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

A Peterborough Tragedy (A. Rowles).—Thanks for kindness in forwarding this item.

A Suggestion (W. R. Pike).—Thanks for your kind letter. We have had the suggestion you make under consideration, and may see our way to carry it out some time in the future.

Controversies (R. L. Bruce).—We appreciate your letter, but we are afraid that controversies and "pen and ink quarrelling" will always be with us. It seems as human to differ as it is to err. Every Fancy has its controversies, we are afraid, and those who delight to indulge in them.

A Parrot Deal (J. W. Newport).—On the statements you make, we think you have a clear case. You will have to sue through the County Court. Go and see the officials at the local County Court and issue a summons; they will explain the procedure. We advise you, however, to put the case in the hands of a solicitor.

Egg and Bread Crumbs (D. F., Midlothian).—Bread crumbs are used by a host of bird breeders to mix with the hard-boiled egg. So there is no reason why you should not use it yourself, if you wish. Many swear by it, in preference to crushed biscuit.

Rabbits and Birds (Birds Dying).—We are certainly of the opinion that the introduction of the rabbits has had a bad effect upon your birds, and that the ill-health you have experienced amongst them recently is due to their presence. We have heard of similar cases to your own.

Canary Wanted (E. Pitt).—We cannot insert a letter such as that you send us; it would open the door to the possibility of fraud. Your case may be genuine enough, but we should undoubtedly receive many requests to publish similar appeals, and could not possibly undertake to investigate the genuineness of all of them.

Shepherd's Purse (Linnet).—You will find a picture of shepherd's purse, with a full description, in the new book we have just published, entitled, "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants for Cage Birds," price 1s. 2d., post free, from this office. It is quite a common weed.

A Self-acting Fountain for Aviaries.

SIR,—In your issue of May 1st, you publish a letter, with diagram, from "A. M." on the subject of self-acting fountains for aviaries. Being a regular subscriber to CAGE BIRDS, and having a large aviary of my own, I was naturally interested in the subject of "A. M.'s" fountain. Being desirous of possessing one, I gave the diagram, and full particulars accompanying same, to a practical tinsmith in my employ, requesting him to make a fountain to the instructions given. The experiment, I regret to say (although the instructions were closely followed), resulted in failure, and my object in writing is to ask "A. M." wherein he thinks it failed, and, further, if he can inform me how to make it work successfully?

G. E. B.

(We think some constructive detail is at fault, as we ourselves in the past had an aviary fountain made on the principle explained by "A. M.," and found it act satisfactorily.—EDITOR.

A Remedy Wanted.

SIR,—May I be allowed to answer "Puzzled for a Remedy" and "Nil Desperandum"? There is one thing I notice; they don't mention sand. In the keeping of British birds and Canaries in the best of health and condition one requires to give plenty of good sand, as, in my opinion, this prevents indigestion. Some five years ago I went on my holidays to catch a few birds, as is my usual custom, but having lost a good many birds in previous years I put the cause down to the change of water from what they had been used to; so I brought home several bottles of water with me from where the birds used to drink as an experiment. But this proved a failure, as I gained nothing by that. My next trial was to give plenty of good, gritty sand. Up to this time I had given but a little sand. By the following remedy I saved 27 birds, with the exception of one. I boiled some winter rape seed for 15 minutes; I let cold water run on it, and then dried it with a cloth. I did this with the Linnets for three days, boiling the rape seed fresh every day. I saw a great improvement by this time, and I continued with it and added a little Canary seed and German rape on the fourth and following days, and as they grew strong again I added plenty of wild seed from the threshing machine, and they all fully recovered. I omitted hemp from their stock food for a few months afterwards, as the Linnet, in my opinion, is a bird that soon gets very fat. The Goldies I give plenty of Epsom salts in their water, but I had very little trouble with them, as I crushed up a lot of old mortar and good rough sand. Since that time I have not lost any British birds, as I act upon and follow this remedy, and have no cause to complain. I think this remedy may be a help to "Puzzled for a Remedy" and "Nil Desperandum," and I should be glad if they would report the results through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. BRITISH BIRD.

The Colour Feeding of Canaries.

SIR,—I was a little interested in Mr. Stewart's letter, also in the letter of Mr. Ramsden respecting colour-feeding. Last year, being away from home a lot, I was unable to give my birds their colour-food mixture as regularly as in other years, that is, a spoonful each day. I gave it to them every other day, as a rule, sometimes going into the third day. I don't advocate doing, or advise anyone to do, as I did last year, as I prefer to give it every day; but really I couldn't see any difference in my birds as compared with other years. As Mr. Ramsden says, birds full of colour naturally would come out well; perhaps that was why my birds came out alright, as I have a lot of dark blood in them. But as to not being obliged to take the seed away to make them eat their colour feed, my experience is that some of the birds won't eat much colour- food unless you do, while some will eat their share and look round for more. Some, again, will eat plenty the first year, but you are not going to get them to take it the second year quite so easily. Some fanciers are wanting to cram their birds all day with colour feed, which is quite unnecessary. I should advise fanciers to feed regularly every day one spoonful, and see they eat it.

RED HOT.

SIR,—Mr. Stewart asks me to explain how I know when a bird is teeming with natural colour. I only know this by knowing how the birds were bred. I breed for colour, and colour-feed to intensify the natural colour bred in my birds. Mr. Stewart quotes some exceptional cases of birds and colour-feeding, but when speaking or writing on such a subject one must deal with average birds, and not with the exceptions. As I said before, a bird teeming with natural colour would probably colour well if fed every other day, but the average bird would be more certain to colour well if fed daily. With reference to withholding seed, I am quite aware that many follow this practice, and if the seed box is only withdrawn for a few hours daily, no great harm is done; at the same time, I do not recognise the need to withhold the seed box at all. If the birds are fed on a good palatable food they will eat it greedily. What is a palatable food? asks Mr. Stewart. Well, a palatable food is a food that the majority of the birds will eat with avidity, even when good seed is within their reach. It must be a food that the birds really like. Some years ago I called upon Messrs. Hyde and Co., the well-known bird food specialists. Hanging up in their outside office was a caged Lark. On the cage was hung a number of food boxes. My curiosity was aroused, and I asked the reason for giving the Lark more than one food box. "Well," replied Mr. Hyde, smiling, "one hears of this and that food as being the most suitable for Larks, but what is the use of preparing such a food if the Larks themselves do not approve of it? We believe in preparing a food both suitable in itself and approved by the Larks. In those food boxes are various foods; by emptying a certain box daily the Lark has proved to us that of all the foods supplied it prefers this particular food." This was an object lesson I have never forgotten. In my desire to provide my birds with a palatable colour food I have placed before them various feeds in fact, I may say feeds of all kinds—and made careful note of the feeds they prefer. During the moulting season I make a frequent change in the composition of the feed—for birds are like human beings, they like a change of diet. Pure, tasteless pepper, free from added oil, is the colouring agent used in all the mixtures I make up. One week I use Peck Frean's tea biscuits, the next week Hovis bread and tea biscuits in equal parts, and again, white bread and thin lunch biscuits in equal parts, in each case of course, to the usual quantities of hard-boiled new-laid eggs and sugar. In this way the birds get a constant change they appreciate. The egg pans are cleared quickly, and never has there been the slightest need to move the seed box. Mr. Stewart's remarks on the testing and keeping of colour food are to the point. Good, pure, tasteless pepper will keep for years if kept in air-tight tins in a cupboard of equable temperature. Damp will spoil it, and so will any of the adulterants so often used in cheap peppers. Peppers so adulterated usually "sweat" and go mouldy, rarely keeping good from one season to the other. In conclusion, I thank Mr. Stewart for his friendly criticism, and heartily congratulate him on his luck in rearing 25 youngsters out of 28 hatched.

Does Canary Breeding Pay?

An Answer in the Affirmative.

SIR,—I should just like to give my experience just to show that Canary breeding does pay, and well, with a little trouble. My birds are the German Hartz. Last year I started with five hens and two cock birds. The hens I bred myself, and the two cocks cost me 7Os. From these I bred 38 young—23 cocks and 15 hens. One of the cocks was something like the hen depicted on the front of CAGE BIRDS the other week, and which bred all hens. I ran this bird during the season with the five hens, and he bred 21 cocks and two hens; the other 13 hens and two cocks. I sold over £8 worth of cocks, and gave to my friends four cock birds and four hens. I have now 16 hens and 11 cock birds. I am not going on as well as last year, owing, I think, to the cold weather we are experiencing. Still, I can't grumble. I have 26 young on the sticks, 13 in the nests, and three hens due to hatch in a few days. What splendid mothers these German "ladies" are! For instance, I have a German hen with a crest which I bred last year, and she is very small. The first time she laid six eggs, hatched them, and brought them up herself; they are now doing well on soaked rape and milk sop. I am an ardent angler, and all fishermen, it is said are liars; yet there are men here and at Bedford Leigh who visit my bird room regularly, and have seen her at work, who will bear me out in what I say. One of the two cock birds I bred with last year wears a crest, although he is a typical German, and I should be glad if anyone interested in the Roller would give his opinion whether these are full-bred German or not. Mine has the proper Roller song. My youngsters are being fed on dandelion, and I can't tell why this green food has got such a bad name. I give it to my hens on the same day they are due to hatch, and I think my success is largely due to its use. Of course, I have had no experience with any kind of Canaries but Germans. JOHN CANNING.

A Novel Help to Hatching Eggs.

SIR,—I noticed some inquiries in CAGE BIRDS about hatching eggs, and the sound advice given in your paper regarding the same. I hope I don't intrude by adding a little more. Being at one time troubled in the same way as many others by birds dying in the shell, I have assisted some by chipping the shell, or dipping the eggs in lukewarm water. I found such birds were always weakly, and difficult to rear. Being successful with poultry when a boy, I thought the same plan would answer for Canaries. My plan is this: I get an old preserve tin, 4ins. wide, which I find fits the nest pan. I make a hole in the side, and over this I solder a small piece of tin, as shown in the sketch. Then I have a short piece of gas-piping, to reach from the tin to the outside of the cage. (This is loose.) The end outside the cage I cut to make it wider, for the purpose of pouring in water. (See Sketch.) The tin I fill, or nearly so, with sandy soil, then the nest-pan I place on top, and by giving one or two turns, it makes a good bed in the soil. When all is in position, and the eggs all laid, I begin to pour water down the gas-pipe, about a teaspoonful each day. The water runs through the hole made in the side of the tin, and wets the soil. The heat of the sitting hen draws the moisture through the holes in ths nest-pan (to which I always add another four.) This idea I got from Nature, in watching a hen that laid away, and a hen that was set in a loft with eggs. The former brought home all her chicks, and the latter was always some short, for this simple reason: The former made her nest, as a rule, at the root of an old tree, or at the side of a river, and got the warm moisture to help the chick in the shell. The latter went on sweating as long as possible, and when nearly hatching dried up; and this, I understand, is when the chick dies in the shell. A bird each day gives the eggs a half-turn. I am using this plan for my own birds with every success, all being out on the thirteenth day. I am writing this in the hope that it may help others. You can regulate the water according to the season or position of the bird-room. ALEXANDER GORDON.

Some British Birds I Have Kept.

SIR,—Seeing you invite your readers to send in their experiences (fortunate and otherwise), I send you mine. In the first place, I am only an amateur, and this is my first attempt at keeping birds. In March, 1908, while passing through a slum street in the East end of London, in a bird-dealer's window I saw in a small cage a yellow bird priced at 8d. It looked very miserable and dirty, and thinking I could do better for it, I went in and enquired what it was, and was told that it was a Yellowhammer. I took my bird home, and put him in a clean cage, with food, sand, and a good-sized bath. How that bird did wash himself, to be sure! My next prize was a poor, half-dead Linnet, which a hawker in the street was doing his best to demonstrate to the admiring spectators that it was a cock bird by all but pulling its wings off. In the meantime, I had purchased a large cage, 4½ ft. high, 3 ft. wide. A relative of mine cleaned it and fitted it with four wide perches in such a way as to make them look like a flight of stairs. The cage also had a large revolving perch in the centre of it. The Yellowhammer and the Linnet soon began to look much better for being kept clean, and for more than a year they have given me great pleasure by their chattering and singing ways. In September last I purchased a Bramblefinch which is a picture to look at. It is a beautifully marked bird, and its feathers glisten like satin. I rescued it from the same dirty shop where I got the Yellowhammer; also two Larks, who were almost beating their lives out. They all live very comfortably together, and agree well. As I am writing the sun is shining, and the cock Lark is singing beautifully. All through the long, gloomy winter, since last December, that bird has sung. People tell me it is most uncommon to see these species all together and agreeing so well. This is how I manage them. The cage has a large drawer, divided in the centre; one side I fill with sand and broken shell, and the other side has flat tins in which I always keep fresh turfs. I managed to keep the turfs fresh in the winter in a greenhouse. On these turfs I stand a glass oval dish filled with water; and how those birds do bathe! It is amusing, too, to see them awaiting their turns. Then the Larks roll about in sand and clean themselves that way. In three little tins hanging on the bars I keep, in the first, Canary seed, in the second German rape, and in the other a collection of seeds such as I have seen mentioned in your paper from time to time. In a separate pan I mix ants' eggs, dried flies, hemp seed, potato (boiled), etc. The Larks help themselves to this; they are also fond of millet seed and cuttlefish bone. I need not say that the cage is kept clean. Kept and treated thus the birds repay one for the trouble involved. They all seem happy and sing nicely. My young daughters call it our bird orchestra. In conclusion, I may say that the cage is kept in a window on the table in my living-room. It is very pleasant and sunny for them here. On brass rods hangs a muslin curtain to shield three sides of the cage from the too admiring eyes of my two cats, who otherwise would pay them a little too much attention. I have derived much pleasure and information from the columns of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. I have always read with interest other people's views on the keeping of British birds in cages. I do not, I may say, think it is at all cruel to keep them thus, provided cages are of good size; but I think that it is one of the saddest sights to see a poor bird (a Lark, for instance) pennod up in a small cage, hanging often in blazing sun, and allowing not enough room for the inmate to turn round. Kept in this way a bird can only beat its life away. I am not one having plenty of time on my hands, but a working woman with a family and a home to look after. But I have never begrudged the time it takes me to look after my little birds. And I feel glad I was able to take them from the wretched places in which I first saw them.

ONLY A WOMAN.

The Martin, and that Rogue the Sparrow!

SIR,—In the summer when that beautiful and useful bird, the Martin, comes to us to nest, she selects a spot under the eaves of our house for her nest as soon as her mate and herself are satisfied; then begins the labour of love. Yes, Mr. Editor, it is labour. See the weight of mud used to make that nest compared with the little mites that have carried it from a wet spot in the road to the high eaves under the roof of our house. What happy chattering there is over their new home. Yes, till finished; then comes that thief, the hen Sparrow, and robs them of their home! What becomes of the clutch of eggs that the hen Martin has ready to deposit in their little nest? Why she must drop them. So it goes on year after year, and our little Martin will be exterminated, which would be a great loss to our agriculturists and fruit growers, as the Martin lives solely on insect life. So let us try and thin down the Sparrow, and give our useful friend the Martin a chance to increase. In the winter I put down some soaked bread close to my workshed, so that I can shoot the Sparrows, but along comes the Starling, looking like lord of all he surveys, and clears it all up. So I put down some oats, and along comes the Tom-tit; he only takes one at a time, but the time is very short. The way he hammers the husk off is remarkable, when he is down for another, as there are sometimes four or five at a time, not including the big Tit and the little Blackcap. (I often think it would be a wrinkle to those fanciers who keep the Tit family in confinement to try them with a few oats.) I have put down the soaked meat dog biscuits that my Thrush has left, but along comes the Chaffinch, with his shuffling walk, and soon makes clear work of this.

The Sad Case of Mr. Barwell.

An Appeal to Fanciers.

SIR,—Allow me to acknowledge the following subscriptions to the C. Barwell benefit fund, hoping to hear from others in this effort we are making to help a fellow fancier in such an affliction. Messrs. S. H. Mays, 10s.; G. W. Saunders, 2s.; J. W. Ramsden, 2s. 6d.; W. Andrews, 2s. 6d.; R. Hyde and Co., 5s.; H. E. Ogle, 1s.; and J. Robson, 2s. 6d.

JNO. NASON, Treasurer.
Foresters' Arms, Northampton.

SIR,—Might I suggest a means of getting Mr. Barwell a little money, and that is to get his friends to have a "Barwell Benefit Show," and all entrance fees to go to Mr. Barwell. Say, the entries were 1s. 6d. each, and instead of prize money a special was given for 1st, 2nd, and 3rd, these to be offered by those readers of CAGE BIRDS who feel inclined to help a fellow creature in a time of distress. I myself will give three should my suggestion be taken up. I feel certain a great number of readers of CAGE BIRDS who, like myself, only show for the honour, would be only too pleased to send their entries on. And I feel certain CAGE BIRDS would advertise such a show free of cost, as I have noticed CAGE BIRDS has always given a helping hand when it was needed. If Mr. J. Nason is the landlord of the Foresters' Arms, Northampton, why not hold the show there, and make a charge for admission, and devote the proceeds to the fund? I may mention that I don't know Mr. Barwell personally, or anyone concerned. None but those who have "landed on the rocks" know what it is to be deserted by friends (or so-called friends) in time of need. I trust my letter will not have been written in vain.

WILLIAM P. BELL.

Natural Colour Classes at] Forthcoming Shows.

SIR,—The suggestion thrown out by F. G. Smith in CAGE BIRDS, with regard to natural colour classes at the forthcoming shows, is one the different societies would do well to consider. Most of the shows held in South Wales last year had non-fed classes, and they received good support. Take, for instance, the Swansea and District C.B.S. show last year; they gave two classes (Norwich and Yorkshire) for non-fed birds. In the Norwich section they received 21 entries, and in the Yorkshire section 8. At the Welsh National Show held at Swansea, in the Norwich section were 11 entries, and in the Yorkshire 6. This made a total of 46 entries in the two shows held in that town. If fanciers will only support the non-fed classes it stands to reason classes will be provided for them by the different societies; but we cannot expect them to do so if they do not receive support. There must be a large number of fanciers who do not believe in colour-feeding, but are compelled to do so if they wish to compete at the large shows, because of the small number of non-fed classes offered. The remedy lies entirely in the hands of fanciers themselves by largely supporting the non-fed classes provided by the different societies. I am certain that if this is done we shall find the classification of the non-fed classes greatly extended. Let the "non-fed fanciers" rally round the societies that cater for their requirements, and we shall then have the same classification that is now offered to the colour-fed birds.

The Clashing of Show Dates in Scotland.

SIR,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to reply to "Club Member." When is a stop going to be put to that common but cowardly habit of some correspondents hiding under the cover of a nom de plume whilst attacking fanciers and societies? However, to the point at issue—the action of the Forfar and District C.B.I.S. in deciding to hold their open show on Oct. 23rd. Seeing I proposed that date, I may state that I was not aware that Kelty had also altered their date, although I knew Perth had, and seeing that we held our club show on Oct. 24th last year, and there were no shows near at hand, the members thought it would be a most suitable date for our open show, so that I fail to see anything to be surprised at in the decision of the Forfar Society. "Club Member" calls us selfish, but I think the following will be hard to beat. He says: "I notice the Forfar members request the Fancy to rally round them, but if that society gets its desserts its show will be a failure." If the fanciers of Scotland were all as selfish as "Club Member" there would be a few more show failures. Further on he wonders if we are too stupid to see that by our actions we will also be sufferers. I don't think we are any more stupid than our would-be adviser, when he asks such a thing, nor are we too selfish to consider the interests of others; but can assure him that we are very much awake. "Club Member" tells us that it would surely have been an easy matter for the Forfar society to have selected a more convenient date, Oct. 16, for instance, on which there is no show billed. Now, almost every fancier in Scotland knows that the City of Glasgow show is generally held on that date. If it is so convenient as "Club Member" would have us believe, why did Kelty not stick to it? Or why did he not advise Perth to fix it up. As regards Perth, does it not seem strange that they have had to alter their date (to my knowledge) three times in the last seven years? There surely is something far wrong when they have had to shift about so often. When the last Forfar society held their first show on Nov. 22nd, 1902, there were no shows north of Glasgow, on that date, but the following year, Perth, knowing quite well that Forfar were to hold their show on Nov. 21st, also took that date. But I suppose "Club Member" does not call that selfish. As to some of the more convenient dates he would have us believe are lying awaiting show promoters, here is a list of shows in the district after Broughty Ferry, on Oct. 9th: Arbroath and Dysart Oct. 30th, Brechin Nov. 6th, Glasgow and West of Scotland, Kirkcaldy and Montrose Nov. 13th, Dundee Nov. 26th and 27th, Aberdeen Dec. 17th and 18th, and Forfar (Poultry, etc.) Jan. 1st and 3rd, 1910. So it is not so easy a matter after all to get another date. I quite agree with "Club Member" when he says that Scotland could do with a Cage Bird Union if for no other reason than the arranging of show dates. And if such were founded on right lines it would see that societies stuck as near to their former dates as possible. If there is still time for Forfar to alter its date, there is also time for Perth and Kelty to alter theirs, even although they have got their judges fixed. I have no desire to figure in a discussion in the Fancy Press, but to have allowed such a letter to pass without comment would have placed the Forfar Society in a very bad light before the Fancy.

W. GREWAR,
Hon. Sec. Forfar and Dis. C.B.I.S.

The Affairs of the United Kingdom Lizard C.B.S.

SIR,—In answer to Mr. Fuller, I am at a loss to see how he read Mr. Thompson's letter in CAGE BIRDS, for he was as much in at that letter as was Mr. T. He mentions not seeing a reply from me, so I may say that I took Mr. T.'s letter for what it was worth. It is quite right that Mr. Fuller was one of those who proposed the forming of the above society, and I think the least he could do was to help it by paying his subscriptions, and during the show season by sending a few birds out. On the other hand, Mr. Thompson sent about two Lizards out, and did not pay his sub. until he saw he had nothing to beat. Now, as to the society going to the wall, I see no reason why it should do, and Mr. Fuller knows that as well as any other man. Fuller and Co. or Thompson and Co. (it is all the same) have caused all the ill-feeling so far, and I say here that what we want in the U.K.L.S. are a few men (or rather fanciers) who show a bird for what it is worth, and not for what they can make out of it. I quite agree with Mr. Fuller that there are enough Lizard fanciers to form a strong society We have at present as our president a fine old Lizard fancier, Mr. J. E. Ollerenshaw, and as our treasurer that well-known fancier, Mr. W. Lawton. Mr. C. E. Fisher, Mr. J. Hampshire, and Mr. Barker Clegg are all members. Mr. J. Dewsnap left the society through reasons known to himself, and there is where the trouble started. It stands to reason that such old fanciers as I name above will not sit down and be talked to by novices in their first season, and men who hardly know a gold from a silver. I took on the secretaryship myself, and I am only a novice; but when I saw, after trying to give satisfaction that there was nothing but dissatisfaction, I got sick of the thing. I hope Mr. Fuller's meeting on the 30th will be a success, and that he and Mr. Thompson get things a bit more their own way.

Cinnamon Border Fancies and Their Colour.

SIR,—I notice another letter on the above subject has been written by "Cinnamon Border." He has not disclosed his name as requested, and I had decided to have no further discussion on the subject. However, seeing that in his letter of May 15th he admits he is convinced there were self Cinnamon cocks previous to six years ago, I claim the point of the dispute on which I tackled him. I am rather surprised he charges me with "harping," as he terms it. "Harping" in Cumberland means "repetition." I have no idea what it is slang for in Scotland, and I mention Scotland, as I had a suspicion all along that I knew my man, and more so after giving up the fifth prize winner at Edinburgh, as an example, and one of the disputed birds. As far as the Cumberland definition of "harping" goes, no one need be afraid to harp on the truth. I was astonished to see that "Cinnamon Border" doubted the remarks in my friend's letter which I enclosed for the Editor's perusal, but I have known him for a matter of 20 years or more, and I have never had reason to suspect him of untruthfulness. I, like my friend, still think the self Cinnamons at the time we have mentioned were of better colour than they are now. "Your Reporter" was of the same opinion, and I think we should be entitled to the benefit of the doubt. Seeing that "Cinnamon Border" is satisfied there were self Cinnamon cocks 20 years ago, I have decided to go no further with the discussion, as I do not see what benefit it would be either to me or the Fancy in general.

J. DIXON.

The Border Fancy Canary in the South.

SIR,—As "Wee Macgregor" denies that he has practically admitted he is Mr. J. Robson, I would like to quote a passage from paragraph 3 in his previous letter, which was in reply to my letter wherein I spoke direct to Mr. Robson. It is as follows:—"The most amusing part of Mr. Ellwood's letter is where he addresses himself to me as if we were two familiar friends well known to each other." If "Wee Macgregor" does not consider that as practically an admission, I am certain the majority of fanciers do. There are many inaccuracies in his letter which I will not trouble to reply to, with the exception of the following: "After I pointed out that Ellwood and Smith both came from the same place, Mr. Ellwood replied, and asked, "Who spread the story in Carlisle, etc." Now, if "Wee Macgregor" will re-peruse the correspondence he will find I asked the question in my first letter. Can it be that he is intoxicated with his own verbosity? As he still suggests I am J. Smith and W. M. Thomson, I must again deny it, and ask him to either prove it or withdraw it. I will give £5 to the Fresh Air Fund if he does prove it. It seems to me that novices must not question any person's judgment without being prepared to be subjected to attacks by such as "Wee Macgregor," who has not the courage to fight in the open. To suggest, because J. Smith and I happen to live in the same parish (which has, by the way, a population of from 6,000 to 7,000), that we are in collusion, is really too paltry. I defy "Wee Macgregor" to prove that I even knew Mr. Smith was going to open the correspondence. There is one thing I do not lack, and that is the courage of my convictions. Why not suggest that Mr. J. Robson and I are in collusion because we both are natives of Carlisle? With regard to Mr. Robson's letter, I would like to say that there are others who pride themselves on their good names. Had it not been for the suggestions thrown out I should not have joined in the correspondence. Mr. Robson is in error when he states that the 1st Novice Special was originally awarded to the Cinnamon. I am prepared to state on oath, and I have a witness to prove it, that when I went to the show the card denoting the bird that had won it was affixed to the cage of the Even-mark, and the card for the second novice special was attached to the cage of Mr. Brownlie's bird, which was 4th in the class. That was the reason I spoke to the steward. I knew Mr. Brownlie could not win a novice special, and, further, even if he had been eligible, his bird being 4th could not beat my bird, which was third. As Mr. Robson goes on to say that he was informed by Mr. Hodson that all has been explained, and, as the correspondence appears to have been handed to him, I would suggest that it be published so that your readers may see who is correct. If I am mistaken I will apologise. I am not one to do anything with malicious intent, but would rather look with a lenient eye on others' mistakes. I am not so foolish as to suggest that the mere fact of an exhibitor showing under a relative proves there is anything wrong. I simply express by opinion that it is unwise, as a judge should be above suspicion. However, if this was the only occasion on which Mr. Robson has judged birds exhibited by one of his brothers, no more need be said on that point. I am surprised Mr. Robson now asks why I did not write to him, seeing he gave me the "cold shoulder" at the show when I pointed out the mistake. If Mr. Robson had not allowed "Wee Macgregor" to question the good faith of either Mr. Smith, Mr. Thomson or myself, and had denied that he was that gentleman, the correspondence would have ended so far as I am concerned. I will resist to the utmost any suggestion that I write under an assumed name or names. Mr. Robson knows perfectly well that Mr. W. M. Thomson hails from over the Border, and yet in face of this he still permits that gentleman of the wee mind and courage to repeat his statements. I asked a question which I was entitled to ask, but it yet remains unanswered; and, further, neither Mr. Robson nor "Wee Macgregor" has denied that they are one and the same person. I have no desire to twist anyone either to the right or left, but rather to see that every exhibitor has an equal chance of success. In conclusion, I would remind Mr. Robson that it is not courageous to endeavour to intimidate me by threatening me with legal proceedings.

ROBERT ELLWOOD.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Patterson, I asked him the question, "Did he think Scotland led the way in getting rid of the thick-necked birds?" because his previous letter seemed to infer as much. He does not answer the question direct, but suggests leaving the "fly on the wall." He does not even say which side of the Border the wall is on. I asked the question out of mere curiosity, because I am under the impression the English club was formed to combat the increasing size of the birds sent from Mr. Patterson's side of the Border. The stand either way of Mr. Patterson or myself will not affect the harmony of the members of the two clubs, especially seeing that the same fanciers are members of both in a large degree. I am speaking for myself alone, and from my own observations; I do not presume to speak for the English members; and I think Mr. Patterson has been told that he does not speak for Scotland. I can't make head nor tail of Mr. Patterson's paragraph beginning, "And I daresay," and ending with the word "Scotland." What is the cause to be considered? And in what are the Englishmen "lacking and behind Scotland"? Also again as regards size, Mr. Patterson says there is little doubt the English favour a larger bird than the Scotchman. This is news to me. I have always thought quite the contrary, and there is no doubt that prior to the last two or three years the Scottish birds were very much stronger in every way than the English. Now there is very little difference betwixt the two. The best of the English birds will compare favourably with the best of the Scottish birds and vice versa, if judged from the standard point of view. I attended the Scottish National Show in 1908, and looked at the Borders very carefully. There is no doubt there were some gems amongst them, one in particular I thought nearly perfection. If my memory serves me right, this bird belonged to Messrs. Richardson and Gordon, and stood cardless. I also met some "Gems" of fanciers there, men who could admit that there were good birds outside Scotland. Of course, anyone who knows anything about the subject at all, knows that there are more good birds of this variety in Scotland than there are in England, because the bird is very much more largely bred in Scotland. Re "Fads of Judges": If Mr. Patterson has persuaded himself that my disagreement with him has strengthened his positon, he is quite welcome to that belief; I am afraid he will not find many to agree with him. Mr. Patterson says the standard is a complete guide, and then goes on to advocate breeding, so as to allow for judge's fads. Of course, he does not put it in this way, but the birds have to be bred before they can be put on the bench. I do not think it will be as long as Mr. Patterson imagines before judges will be compelled to judge as near as possible to the standard. Great strides have been made in this direction in the last few years. I hope Mr. Patterson is not libelling show committees when he suggests they only vote for the judges who go for their particular birds. Surely there are numbers of show committees who are fanciers, and like to see the best birds win. And if judges only place the cards to suit the committee, how is it they get the support of the general public? In reply to R. Young, there is no difference in the standard of the two clubs—"a little over 5ins., say, 5¼in.," is very near "shall not exceed 5½ins," don't you think?

Solving the Egg Food Problem.

An Interesting Interview with an up-to-date firm of bird-food specialists.

Quite a stir—indeed, one might reasonably term it no little sensation—has been recently caused in the realm of the bird-keeper, by the advent of a new food—a food for which very high claims are made. We suppose we need hardly tell the reader of CAGE BIRDS that the article to which we refer is Fox Bros.' "Egg and Biscuit Food." This food has been brought before the notice of bird-keepers in no uncertain manner, and the striking advertisements of the proprietors, and the attention-compelling statements they have made on its behalf, must have familiarised our readers with its name, and no doubt with equal certainty have induced the thought: "What manner of commodity is this which sets out to go one better than our tried friend, egg-bread, and to oust it from our bird-room?" That the latter estimate of affairs is a correct one, is borne out by the constant stream of letters which has come our way since "Fox's Egg and Biscuit Food" was first advertised in these pages—letters asking us our views concerning it, whether it was "genuine" or not.

One of our correspondents put the matter this way: 'I am only a working man fancier, with little time on my hands (and I doubt not there are many more like me), and from what I read of this new food it would help me a lot, for hard-boiled egg and bread takes time to prepare, and wants looking after when you've got it done to see it's not sour. But it serves you well, there is that in it, and I have reared heaps of young birds on it, so I don't want to spend money on a new food (even if it saves a lot of time and trouble), if I am going to lose my young afterwards—that would be a very serious matter for me, or for anybody else. Besides, I never heard of Fox's before."

Our Representative Sets Out.

That letter decided us. It put the case in such a light that we came to the conclusion it was to the interests of our readers that we should seek out the firm of Messrs. Fox Bros. and Company, and learn whatsoever we could about "Fox's Egg and Biscuit Food," and about the firm that had introduced it to the notice of the Fancy. So it happened that on a recent bright May morning a "tried and trusted" representative of this journal found himself en route for Granville House, Arundel Street, Strand, where are situated the offices of this firm.

One's first impressions are certainly favourable, for the admirably appointed suite of offices could convey no other effect, while the bustle of the staff in the outer rooms, and the ceaseless "tap tapping" of typewriters, showed that here at least were strenuous workers with plenty of work to do. An enquiry for the head of the firm brought us prompt admission to the managerial sanctum. The statement of our business brought a business-like reply:

"Certainly; I shall be glad to afford the readers of CAGE BIRDS any information you desire. I quite see the force of the letter your correspondent has sent, and I am sure my firm are indebted to you for giving us the opportunity of explaining. Give me five minutes to finish dealing with my own letters, and you can fire away with your questions."

The Experience that Tells.

The intervening moments were spent in studying the head of the firm himself—a business man to the finger-tips, alert and keen, and with that stamp of individuality which bespeaks success.

When he again turned our way it was to say: "I expect the writer of the letter has not been alone in wondering who Fox Bros. were. Well, fanciers need have no hesitation on that score, for many of our staff have had upwards of twenty years' experience of the foods and needs of not only birds but all kinds of animals, and our staff comprises entirely practical men and fanciers. Naturally, we place great reliance on our "Egg and Biscuit Food," as we are convinced it is the food for which keepers of cage-birds have been looking for years. We only ask them to give it a really adequate trial; we are content to abide by the result. At the same time, I may tell you that we intend putting before birdy men in due course other specialities which we have no hesitation in saying are equally valuable, and which will serve to further convince them that in our case it is a case of fanciers catering for fanciers—in other words, that all Fox Bros.' specialities are prepared by men who have a real inside knowledge of the fancier's requirements."

An expression of surprise must have stolen across our countenance, for the speaker continued: "Yes; we are making a bid for the custom of the bird-keeper in all kinds of foodstuffs. And whatever we offer fanciers we intend shall be according to their ideas, and exactly to their requirements—our foods and seeds shall not be a combination of more-or-less useless and valueless ingredients."

We could only remark that such a policy was bound to command respect.

"You're right there," came the reply; "the splendid business we are doing with the "Egg and Biscuit Food" proves the worth of our policy of stating plainly exactly what it is we are offering to fanciers and seeing that they get it. Fifty per cent egg, fifty per cent. biscuit, nothing more, nothing less, has been our standard, and that the Fancy approves of clear statements and honest value the ever-rising sales of our food—to say nothing of the testimonials which reach us by every post—surely bear out. Already we have found it necessary to move from our old address, Ludgate Hill, to the more commodious offices here, and to hastily instal additional machinery at our factory in Denbigh Street. By-the-way, speaking of our factory reminds me that you must run down with Mr. Fox, our general manager, and look over the premises."

Messrs. Fox Bros.' Factory at Denbigh Street, S.W.

"It will give me pleasure to do so," our representative replied; then added: "If it is not asking too much of you, I am sure it would interest our readers to learn something of the inception of the egg and biscuit food, and how it came to be placed before the Fancy."

How it Came About.

"Well, as people interested in the bird-food business, it has been known to us for many years that a food was badly needed which combined all the advantages of the hard-boiled egg and crumbled bread (or biscuit) at present used, and which had none of its disadvantages. We knew that such a food would command a ready sale, and so we set out to perfect one—for several years we were continuously experimenting, and at last complete success rewarded us. Many attempts have been made in the past to utilise egg in a preserved form, but they have been more or less failures. You see (as no doubt you will know) those who tried could only use the yolk of the egg; the white they could not incorporate; they could only get the flaked yolk of egg, or powdered yolk of egg. Thus, such a food could not be compared with the fancier's egg-bread, because the white was missing, and everybody knows what extremely valuable nutritive matter the white is, containing all the elements which go to the making of the bone, the muscle and the flesh of the young bird's frame. It can't be dispensed with. Further, the old methods of preserving caused the feeding properties of even the yolk to deteriorate, and destroyed its solubility, hence rendered it very difficult of digestion."

"What is our method? I can tell you that, broadly speaking, it consists in submitting a fine spray of fluid egg to a current of just warm air, the result being that the moisture in it is absorbed, and a thin powder of egg is deposited. This powder, according to the analysis, has the following composition:—

|---|---|
| Protein ... ... | 53.60 |
| Fat ... ... ... | 37.40 |
| Mineral Matters ... | 3.20 |
| Moisture ... ... | 5.80 |

This establishes the fact that the protein and fat occur in our product in the same state as in the fresh egg, and to obtain this result, and the utilising of the white, has involved us in years of scientific research. Further, our process not only leaves the egg in a condition identical with its natural state; but it preserves it against change, so that it will not turn sour, and the importance of the latter fact will be readily appreciated by every bird-keeper. The egg preserved by the old methods, dried at a high temperature, was no longer in a "live" state, and its feeding value was seriously impaired."

When in Use.

"Having obtained our perfect egg preparation, the next point we had to consider was the proportion of biscuit we should add when offering it to the Fancy."

"Yes," we interpolated; "that is an important point, for some bird breeders advocate half egg and half biscuit, while others plump for as little as 25 per cent. egg in their food, and others, again, vary the proportions according to the age of the young birds."

"We realised that," was the reply, "and decided on a standard strength, viz., 50 per cent. egg and 50 per cent. biscuit, and this standard preparation the fancier can reduce to whatever strength accords with his own ideas, by adding more crushed biscuit to it. We sell a pure white granulated biscuit specially for the purpose, which can be obtained of our agents at the purely nominal price of 3d. per lb., a 3½lb. bag for 1s., or 7lbs. for 1s. 9d. (direct from us, we have, of course, to charge the postage extra). To the selection of our biscuit we have paid every attention, and a better article for the purpose cannot be obtained."

"Are there any particular points to be observed when using the food?" we asked.

"It is simplicity itself. Moistening with cold water is all that is necessary to make it ready for instant use. The only point we would impress upon fanciers—and we would impress it strongly—is the fact that our 'Egg and Biscuit Food' requires the addition of very little water, a few spots only to each teaspoonful. Egg food should be but crumbly moist to be in its best and most palatable state (old fanciers won't need telling this). 'Water-logged' (sodden) food is not relished by any birds, but will be left untouched. Fanciers must not add a lot of water, but put a few drops amongst the food, and allow this a few moments to soak through and moisten the biscuit. We may add that we recommend it to be used at full strength only until the young birds are eight to ten days old. It may also interest fanciers to know that we have large contracts for new-laid eggs, which reach the manufactory daily."

"I notice you claim for your food the very excellent property of not turning sour?"

"That is true, and we claim that this is a great advantage, because the ordinary home-made egg food, more especially in the summer, will very soon turn sour, and possibly do great injury to the birds, as there is always the fear that small particles will be left in the cage, sufficient to upset the birds. But of course we certainly advocate the food being prepared fresh daily, and old fanciers well know the advantages of mixing the food fresh for each meal if that be possible; it tempts hens to keep on feeding their young. Little and often should be the bird-breeders' motto; giving the hens a small supply of fresh food frequently helps to bring success.

An Encouraging Reception.

"What sort of a reception has the Egg and Biscuit Food had so far amongst Fanciers?"

"Splendid," came the enthusiastic answer; "we have had very hard work to convince fanciers that we have something in advance of what they have previously experimented with (some of them have had so many failures); but we are glad to say that we have succeeded in convincing even the keenest and most practical men of the genuineness of our production, and our post box every morning contains numbers of unsolicited testimonials."

"That must be very encouraging, in view of the further specialities you are placing before bird-keepers."

"Yes; our latest introduction, we think, will again revolutionise the ways of the Fancy. This is the addition of colour food to our 'Egg and Biscuit.' We have one of the very finest of colour foods, obtained, after great trouble and searching, direct from the best growing districts in Spain, and the combination makes a splendid food. Fanciers have always had a difficulty in getting the egg to assimilate with the colour food, but this difficulty has been surmounted by us. We claim that the complete food is ideal, and will moult out birds fit to compete in the hottest competition. It will also be a 'time-saver' for the fancier, being sold ready for use."

Our interview having lasted a considerable time, we rose to go, remarking that the name of "Fox" promised to become quite a household word amongst bird-keepers.

"We hope so," was the smiling response, "and intend to do our best to that end. We realise that the fanciers in general are keen and practical men, and have to be catered for in a practical manner, and this we intend to do, not looking at it from a manufacturer's point of view, but giving the article that is required, even if the cost to ourselves is somewhat higher. We have made enormous sales since the introduction of our leading speciality, the 'Egg and Biscuit Food,' and our factory has been working at full pressure for some time. In conclusion allow me to say that we are only too pleased to hear from any fancier who has any point to raise in regard to any of our specialities, as we are confident that we can satisfactorily answer him, because we know that we have the article that fanciers require in our 'Egg and Biscuit,' and we know that when once it has been given a fair trial, they will be convinced."

Leaving the Arundel Street offices, we were rapidly whirled Victoria-wards on the Underground Railway, and soon reached the Denbigh Street factory. We must candidly admit that the extensive range of premises caused us considerable astonishment. Several thousand feet of floor space is packed with goods intended for the use of fanciers, and the seeds and the ingredients of the various foods are stored in the most up-to-date manner, so as to be quite free from possible contamination by either dust or mice. The machinery for cleaning seeds, mixing and packing foods, etc., is all of the latest type, and extra machines were being rapidly added to cope with the rush of trade. A more interesting sight for a fancier could not well be imagined. Before leaving we saw a number of samples of grand quality seeds, shortly to be made up into mixtures suited to the requirements of the various species of seed-eating birds, and samples of Lark food we have never seen excelled at the price, also a fine insectivorous food for the more delicate species of soft-bills, of high feeding value, with the proteids of milk as its base.

Summing up our impressions, it is plain to see that in Messrs. Fox Bros. and Company we have a firm with a very considerable financial stake in their business as bird-food specialists, a firm which sets out to cater for the fancier as the fancier desires to be catered for, and a firm which is determined to secure his patronage on the merits of the goods it offers for sale.

ON THE TRAMP AROUND GREAT MISSENDEN.

A day in the country! What a treat for the dwellers in great cities! We know not who was the first to invent the system of "outings" in connection with bird clubs, but we mentally blessed the fellow last Sunday when, in the company of a score of boon companions, we mooched round the pleasant fields and roads of charming Bucks in the vicinity of Great Missenden. It was the summer jaunt of the London and Counties Ornithological Society, who for the purposes of the day had induced the London and Provincial to join forces in their annual search after bird life and bird's homes.

At a few minutes after 10 a.m. on the Sunday morning, our little band of enthusiasts assembled at Baker Street all in high spirits at the prospect of glorious weather. There were as usual a few laggards at the gate, who were greeted with cheers as the train steamed out of the platform. Three special carriages had been reserved for the party, and these were just comfortably filled. Nearly all the members of the expedition turned on their pipes or cigarettes, and listened to the latest funny story on ornithological record. Birdy men can tell a few when they try.

Great Missenden was reached after about an hour's run. The village lies in a beautiful vale, and is a curious old-world, two-storey, one-street affair, smelling chiefly of hostelries and antique residences.

The comparatively modern Missenden Abbey offered no attraction to our ornithological tourists, who seemed to prefer the neighbourhood of the "Green Man," or the "Red Lion," or "The George," whose archæological aspects are certainly no whit inferior. The dining apartment of the latter inn (the trampers' headquarters) was one of the oldest buildings we have ever dined in in our lives, and we understood that formerly it was the court house of the place, in which rural ruffians were formerly given exemplary sentences for robbing the local hen roosts.

After a preliminary refresher (the day certainly justified it), the promenade commenced. Cutting through the tunnel under the railway line, the party posed outside Angling Wood for the benefit of the amateur photographers of the party, Mr. Hodson using his camera with deadly effect. Mr. Crabb gallantly led the way through the woods, and opined to our representative that the older he got the younger he felt, which is indeed good to hear of. Diligently recording the name of every bird heard or seen, the worthy ex-chairman of the L. and P.O.S. soon had a formidable list of observations to his credit, 28 species in all. He has been kind enough to provide us with the complete series:—Starling, Thrush, and several nests mostly with eggs, in one case one young one out, also young ones branched, Blackbird and several nests with eggs, Sparrow, Robin, also young Robins out of nest, Lark, Chaffinch and nests of young, one out of nest, Wren and nests, Yellow Bunting before lunch, and we were clearly told we were to have a little bit of bread and no cheese; Linnets and nests, Jay, Mistle Thrush, Hedge Sparrow and six nests, Greater Spotted Woodpecker, Greenfinch and six nests, Whitethroat and three or four nests, Great Tit, Pied Wagtail and Jackdaw. We also identified Martin (House), Swallow, Swift, Rook, Peewit, Wood Pigeon, Turtle Dove, Cuckoo and Land Rail (Corncrake).

One of the most sensational discoveries of the day was made by Mr. Pearce. Under a hedge by the roadside his keen eye and alertness where food is concerned quickly perceived two luscious hen's eggs impudently betraying themselves to his gaze. With the honesty characteristic of him he promptly, though with evident regret, handed them over to their rightful owner, a little girl from the village grocer's, amidst loud applause from the onlookers.

Another interesting sight was a talking Parrot in a cage outside a wayside inn. This bird had been taught to say "Your drink will cost you more," but as the place had only a six-day's license (to Mr. Pretty's evident disgust), the Parrot's warning fell on heedless ears.

A capital lunch was provided at "The George," and after a few appropriate remarks from Mr. Crabb on behalf of the L. and P.O.S., Mr. Thorpe on behalf of the L. and C.O.S. drew attention to the fact that it was a combination of the oldest and youngest societies in London. Tributes to Mr. Tringham and Mr. Pretty and acknowledgements to the Press concluded the speechifying, which was commendably brief.

In the afternoon the most energetic members of the crowd studied bird-life under the easiest of conditions (see illustration), and time passed pleasantly until 5.30 p.m., when tea was served. Altogether a most enjoyable and successful day, finishing up about 8.45. The company included the following:—Messrs. Crabb, Thorpe, Priddis, White, Morrison, Ogle, Gilbert, Robson, Richardson, Hodson, Pretty, Hazell, Smith, Burton, Mortlock, Law, Law, jun., Oldaker, Bell, Bell, jun., Lee, Hopkins, Pearce, Carl, Morton, Dring, and H. E. Tringham.

OUR "MATCHED PAIRS" COMPETITION.

The Result.

A great number of readers seem to have been interested in the "Matched Pairs" Competiton instituted in our recent Spring Special issue, for a huge budget of coupons had to be gone through to decide upon the winner. It will be remembered that we offered a cash prize of half-a-guinea to the reader who "mated up" four Norwich Plainhead cocks and four hens depicted in one of our drawings in the same manner as one of our leading judges decided they should be "paired." This judge was Mr. C. A. House, and we append his own solutions of the mating problems, and his reasons for arriving at them.

The Judge's Opinion.

I have been asked to match up the four pairs of Norwich Canaries, with a view to the production of the best results in the way of progeny. I must confess that the task has not been an easy one, even to myself, a very old breeder, and I should say that some of the novice readers of CAGE BIRDS find it very difficult indeed, as we have portrayed birds with faults that require very serious consideration from the point of view of their being obliterated in the progeny. After long thought, I have come to the conclusion that the pairing likely to yield the most satisfactory results would be:—

No 1. hen to No. 5 cock.
No. 2 hen to No. 8 cock.
No. 3 hen to No. 6 cock.
No. 4 hen to No. 7 cock.

I will give my reasons for so pairing. To make the lesson intelligible to the youngest fancier, I shall describe each bird in the ordinary reportorial language of CAGE BIRDS, and then proceed to point out how far the defects of each are covered by the excellencies of its selected mate.

No. 1.—Sweet little hen, grand shape and style of body, beautifully shaped head, but lacking somewhat in substance and fullness of skull and neck, lovely wing carriage and neat tail.

No. 5.—Good bodied cock of nice style, stands well up, could do with just a trifle more depth of chest and more chubbiness of skull, holds wings badly, and is long behind.

No. 2.—Shapely, stylish hen, short and thick in body, good frontal, somewhat flat on top of skull, and shows signs of browing.

No. 8.—Nice shaped body, but carried too erect, very high and full in crown, but inclined to be narrow in skull and thin in neck.

No. 3.—Nice shaped skull, bit fine and thin in neck, good shape of body, but carried too erect.

No 6.—Big, shapely bird, nice substance of head and neck, but slovenly in carriage. and lacks boldness.

No. 4.—Mean-looking head, fairly good shape of body, holds body well, but crosses wings.

No. 7.—Fine bold head, if anything a little too full in crown, capital body, and well-carried flights and tail.

Reasons for Matching.

Nos. 1 and 5.—The faults in No. 1 lie in the skull being too fine and neck too thin. These are covered by the stoutness seen in the cock. No. 5 is much the more faulty bird of the two; although he has substance of skull and neck, he lacks his mate's shape. The blending of the two should correct this. His bad wing carriage and length behind are overcome by the neatness of the wings, and shortness of tail owned by the hen.

Nos. 2 and 8.—No. 2, but for her flatness of skull and browing, is a grand stamp of hen, and her faults are counterbalanced by the cock's extra height and the fullness of crown. The hen in this pair, as in our first pair, has most to do in the correcting of faults. The cock's thinness of neck is covered by the hen's shortness and stoutness of neck. His narrowness of skull is corrected by his mate's width, and his too erect pose is balanced by her ease and grace of carriage.

Nos. 3 and 6.—No. 3 is a capital type of hen, and had she but a little more substance in skull and neck she would be almost perfection. It may be said she is a bit too "cocky" in pose; possibly, but this just gives her a bit of a pull as an exhibition specimen, and is most valuable in correcting the faults in her mate. Her fineness of skull and neck are amply covered by the fullness of the cock, whilst his slovenly gait is more than balanced by the smartness and stylish carriage of the hen.

Nos. 4 and 7.—This I take to be the worst pair of the lot. No. 4 has a bad head (very bad indeed for a hen); her other fault is in her wing carriage. No. 7 is a grand-bodied bird, but he carries too much skull both in top and back. This corrects the hen's flatness of skull, while his beautiful balance of wings should counteract the tendency in the hen to bad carriage of wings. A better match for this cock would be No. 1, but No. 4 would not do as a mate for No. 5, the blending of excellencies in skull might work out right, but the wing carriage would inevitably be made much worse.

The Winner.

We find that several competitors "mated up" the eight birds in the way that Mr. House considers they should be matched. To arrive at the winner, therefore, all the correct coupons were placed in a hat and well shaken up, after which an independent person assumed the role of "Fate," by selecting one amongst them. This proved to be sent in by

MR. ROY WELCH,
Matlock Green,
Derbyshire,

to whom a cheque for 10s. 6d. will be sent in due course. Others who named the correct pairs were Messrs. L. Sherman (Willesden Junction, N.W.), W. G. Bristow (Millwall), G. W. Whitehead (Old Goole), A. Buswell (Lutterworth), W. Ellison (Winsford), W. Taylor (Farnworth), A. Franklin (Miles Platting), E. Titchmarsh (Enfield Wash), D. Weddell (Middleton), and M. Hugh (Wemyss).

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1909 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

Luck at Dulwich.

Mr. G. F. Woolhouse, after a disastrous first round (only two hatched from nine full clutches) has now nine in the second round, and more due to hatch, all Norwich. Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni have two fine Linnet-Canary Mules on the perch, doing for themselves, and 10 young Norwich, with eggs hatching daily. Mr. A. M. Rees has 10 healthy young Norwich doing well. Mr. J. Foster is having fairly good luck, having several promising young Norwich. Mr. F. H. Bussey has two nests of fertile eggs. Mr. Parker, who had his birds nicely down on fertile eggs, has now unfortunately (for the birds) to remove to Margate. Mr. P. G. Sprules tops the list in the district, having over 30 Norwich and Borders. Mr. H. Pallett has about 30 young Yorkshires, mostly on the sticks. Mr. W. Pallett has also several young Yorks.. Mr. Powles has several Norwich. Mr. Knight has several nests due to hatch, Norwich and Yorkshires. Mr. Taylor has several promising Norwich doing well. Other fanciers in the district have not yet reported, but it is understood that in most cases the first round was disappointing, though with the warmer weather the second round promises to be excellent.—D.O.S.

Wild Bird Life.

More about the Cuckoo.

It has been proved that the Cuckoo will carry her egg some distance to the selected nest, or possibly when in search of one of the right species. I once remember a bird being shot with an egg in her mouth, she having travelled the length of a field, over a quarter of a mile, her destination probably being a belt of woodland some half a mile distant. A list of the birds victimized by the Cuckoo would be rather formidable, the most common being the Meadow Pipit and Wagtail, and probably the Hedge Sparrow. They have frequently been found in the nest of the Reed Warbler, occasionally in that of a Finch or Bunting; and even the tiny Wren and Red-backed Shrike have been selected; and stranger still, the nest of the Jay and Magpie. Such might happen when the bird was unable to find more suitable foster parents. As a general rule only a single egg is found in one nest, although on several occasions two have been discovered, probably deposited by more than one bird. This might occur in a district where Cuckoos were plentiful and suitable foster parents somewhat scarce. The eggs vary considerably in colour, and persons who are interested should visit the fine collection in the Natural History Museum, where it will be seen that they most resemble the eggs of other species, although they have not all been found in the company of eggs which they most closely resemble. I have two which were found in the nests of Hedge Sparrows. Neither of them resembles in the slightest degree the beautiful blue eggs of the Hedge Sparrow so well known. One could be easily mistaken for that of the Robin, and the other for that of the Pied Wagtail. It is supposed each Cuckoo lays eggs of a certain type, and that the young inherit the tendency to produce eggs similar to those of their parent.

A Confiding Dove.

In country districts the pretty Turtle Doves are wild and wary, and it is only by accident that one can get near enough to them to watch their engaging ways. Yet the other day one settled in a wood yard in the centre of a town and commenced feeding upon the grain scattered by the horses. This bird has been in some private grounds adjoining for two or three days, and has evidently only just arrived, for as a rule these Doves are not seen before the month of May.

Falconry Still in Existence.

Falconry appears to be still an existing sport in this country, although it may be carried on in a quiet, unobtrusive manner. A few private persons continue it as a pastime, the Rooks being the quarry in the spring months, and game in the autumn. Herons, which at one time were considered to show the finest flights, are now too scarce to be hunted. It is impossible to expect the sport to ever again attain to the popularity of former years, the growth of towns and cultivation of waste ground having so changed the conditions of the country.

Blue Tits in the Orchard.

The tiny Blue Tits love the orchard, and are seen more among the branches of the fruit trees than anywhere else. They unfortunately have the reputation of injuring the crop, and yet when one considers what insect eating birds they are, and how fruit trees are infested with insect pests, it is a very doubtful point if these bright little chaps do as much damage as they are credited with. Possibly their supposed destructiveness is simply a bad reputation handed down from past generations.

BIRD-OX.

It is a well-known fact that egg and bread is a dangerous mixture (given by itself) to young birds. This being so, and keeping a valuable stock myself, I have experimented for over 15 years and am certain I have reached the goal of my ambition, that is, to keep my young birds when I have hatched them, by using Bird Ox. When it is considered that only one-and-half table spoonsful is required to one egg and bread it is cheap enough for the small pocket. I have sixty grand youngsters now reared by its use. Instructions with each order. 1lb. 1/6, 2lb. 2/3, 6lb. 5/6.—R. Taylor, 288, Aqueduct-street Preston, or Cleminson and Taylor, champion Norwich breeders, Elmsley-street, Preston.

I may say that the previous seed I had from you was unsurpassable in quality, and I had many of my birdy friends praising it, and asking me where I got it, and I hope that through seeing this seed supplied by you that you may obtain many new customers.—Yours truly, R. Stuart.—134, Westgate, Bradford.

SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED.

£50 Given in Prizes this Year.

All societies using over 20 lbs. to have a beautiful special. Read this startling proof—"The only proof." I don't need to lecture to you. Use Royal Red and it will prove you need no lectures or papers on colour feeding. (Have on view 10 tons.)

Supplied last season: Mr. Godley 56lbs. Royal Red, Mr. Hodder 45 lbs. Royal Red. At last 1909 Crystal Palace Show, in the eight champion Norwich classes, the whole eight first prize winners were moulted on Royal Red. The eight exhibitors who won them all used about 50lbs. each Royal Red. Is there any more proof than this as to who claims the premier colour-feed? Mr. J. W. Rennie, big southern winner of 1st clear yellow, 1st yellow hens, Crystal Palace, writes: "May 3rd, 1909. All my winning Norwich were fed solely on your colour-feed, and I intend to use no other on them this year." Also supplied last season: Mr. E. Baker 260lbs. Royal Red, Sam Cook, Norwich Plainhead cup winner, 60lbs., Mr. Grey, big N.N.P.C. silver bowl winner, 30lbs., Judge Vardy 212lbs., Mr. Midgley, winner two first open Norwich at last Palace, 20lbs., Mr. Dobinson, another fist winner at last Palace, 20lbs., T. Irons 70lbs., W. Booth, birds hottest in England, 30lbs., A. Hirst 30lbs., J. Wilcock 70lbs., R. Halliday 20lbs., Cleminson and Taylor 100lbs., W. Morris 60lbs., W. Whetstone 30lbs., W. R. Barnes 120lbs., Judge Battye 100lbs. I could fill this paper with successful exhibitors' names supplied by me last year, not with 1 or 2lbs., so as to be able to compete for specials. Anyone who saw any of above gentlemen's birds last season will admit they were the hottest out.

Money in Chickweed.

The vendor of chickweed in Paris is a well-known figure (says the "Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury".) The sellers are numerous, and their cry is one of the most noteworthy of those that resound in the morning in the streets of the French capital. According to the "Bulletin des Halles," there are about 100,000 Canaries in the capital, and the daily consumption of chickweed is estimated at £400. This sum looks very large, but it only allows a penny for each bird. Be that as it may, a Paris contemporary points out that a goodly portion of land between Suresnes and Courbevoie is set aside for the cultivation of the weed.

At the next monthly meeting, another Nest Feather Show will be held. Mr. Geo. Harland (Hull) will judge, and special prizes are offered Classes will be provided for British birds.—H. HARDING, Hon. Treas.

LEIGH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The first table show was held at headquarters, Railway Hotel, on May 26th. Owing to our small membership (which we should like to see greatly increased, seeing that there are so many fanciers in Leigh and district) and the bad luck members are experiencing, we arranged one class, "Any variety Cage Bird in nest feather." All the entries, nine in number, proved to be Norwich Plainheads. The President, Mr. J. Marsh, should have judged, but was unavoidably called away on business, and the lot fell to me, but I think the awards gave every satisfaction. 1, W. Gaskell (Boothstown); 2, 3, E. Clare (Leigh). Another table nest feather show, "A.V. Cage Bird," on June 23rd.—R. H. DAVIES, Sec.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

First Nest Feather Table Show held in Lockhart's Cafe, Grainger-street, Newcastle, May 26th. Though early in the season, a number of very promising young birds put in an appearance. Unfortunately, Mr. Ellwood, who should have judged, was ill in bed and could not take the duties. It was therefore decided to ask the non-exhibiting members, who were all novices, to judge, which they did with every satisfaction. The following were their awards:—CLEARS: 1, 3, Davison; 2, c, Crawhall; 4, vhc, Tindale; hc, Wigglesworth. TICKS: 1, Tindale; 2, Davison; 3, Crawhall; 4, Wigglesworth.

HARPENDEN.

Glorious indeed was the weather for this popular Hertfordshire fixture on Whit Monday, and there was a large gathering of visitors. Entries in our section were good for the time of year, showing a marked increase on last year's figures, whilst the quality was excellent. The arrangements were most excellently carried out by the committee, prominent amongst whom were Messrs. F. Willis, H. Woollott, Max Kidman, A. Smith, and R. Clark, whilst Messrs. Young and Wilkinson, the secretaries, although new to the work, made up by their courtesy and energy what they lacked in experience. Although the judge awarded third prize cards in most classes, only 1st and 2nd money will be paid in classes of less than eight, as per schedule. Mr. C. A. House judged.

BANGOR.

The first open show of the Bangor and Dis. F.S. was held at the Penrhyn Hall on May 29th. A fine display of exhibits was brought together. This Society commands splendid support from the inhabitants of the district, and the Cage Birds totalled very well for this time of the year. The attendance being also very good indeed, the show should prove a thorough success. Competition was of a high order in some of the classes. The Hon. Sec. (Mr. W. Aitken) a capable official, had everything ready in good time. A good number of specials were given in all sections. The two Crests were of a high order; Yorkshires were numerous, and as usual of good quality. Mules and Britishers, some excellent birds were shown in this section; the Foreign very fair. Mr. W. H. ## STANHOPE (Durham).

The seventh annual exhibition of the Stanhope Fanciers' Association was held in the Castle Park grounds, a delightful spot on the banks of the Wear. The field in which the show and sports are held is splendidly situated in the midst of trees. The Castle gardens and grounds (kindly lent by Sir R. P. Cooper, Bart.) were much appreciated by the numerous visitors. The cage bird section, comprising eight classes, was well filled considering the time of year. Norwich were both poor in numbers and quality, but the Yorkshires were a splendid lot; the three winning Yellows were pictures, and fit to grace any leading show. One or two good birds had to be put back because they had not been washed. We do not blame the exhibitors for not washing their birds now, as many of them are just taken out of the breeding cages for the day. Still, the washed birds have the advantage. Mr. Secretary Ridley, with a band of willing helpers, had everything in order, and we hope their efforts were crowned with financial success. Mr. T. C. Crawhall (Newcastle) judged and his awards seemed to be generally approved.

YELL.: 1, 2, 3, Bright, lovely trio, 1st eye ticked, long bird, splendid position and quality; 2nd, clear, not far behind, grand position, neat wings and tail; 3rd, nice bird, good position and length, crosses wings at times; 4, Isaac Moses, smaller bird, but excellent quality, might have stood higher if washed; vhc, hc, Elliott; c, Moses, very nervous, wants handling. BUFF: 1, Elliott, very big cinn. marked, grand stock bird, but a bit heavy for show; 2, Nattrass, nice quality bird, shorter, a bit out of condition, or might have won; 3, 4, hc, Bright, 3rd equal to any in class, but would not show when judged, quality and position A1; 4th, good quality and position, but bad wing carriage; vhc, Moses, nice hen, hard lines to meet cocks. ## *A Waiter's Mistake.

Before the introduction of the telegraph, the editor of a newspaper published in Antwerp sent a reporter to Brussels to take down the king's speech, and with him a couple of carrier pigeons to be despatched each with a copy of the document. At Brussels the reporter gave the pigeons to a waiter, called for breakfast. He was kept waiting some time, but a very delicious stew made up for the delay. After breakfast he paid his bill and asked for his carrier pigeons. "Pigeons!" exclaimed the waiter, "why you have eaten them!"—Sent by Wm. E. Purrington (age 15), 102, Eaton Mews North, Eaton Square, London, S.W.

The Tame Blue Tit.

Some time ago my father bought a Blue-Tit. He has trained it to come out of its cage at meal times and eat from his plate. About two months ago father saw a Blue-Tit in the trees at the back of our garden, so he put his in a decoy trap; presently he looked out of the window and saw a Blue Tit on the top of the trap, eating the mealworm which he had put in for bait. When he looked closer he found that it was his own Blue Tit, which had got through the wires. He ran indoors for a cage and another mealworm. When the bird had finished eating, father threw the worm into the cage, and the bird flew in and was captured once more.—Sent by Mabel Ethel Riches (aged 12), 69, Higham Street, Higham Hill, Walthamstow.

*A Parrot and a Horse.

A few years ago a Parrot that was kept near the quay in a seaport town had learned the term" with its appropriate enunciation—one used by carters in "backing" their horses so as to bring the waggon into a convenient position for loading and unloading. One day a horse and cart had been left unattended for a few moments near the water's edge and was presently spied by the mischievous Parrot, who cried in a gruff voice: "Woa back." The unsuspicious cart horse "woa backed" accordingly, and again and again as the delighted bird repeated the command, till the horse and vehicle tipped over the stone coping and the poor animal was drowned.—Sent by Frank Briars (age 10), 57, Evans Street, Belgrave, Leicester.

Under the White Rose.

THE newly-formed Green Marked Y.C.C. hold their general meeting to-day (Saturday) at headquarters, Market Tavern, Bradford, when the rules and suggestions as drawn up by the committee will be placed before the members for their confirmation or alteration, etc.: also a permanent committee will require electing, as the one selected at last meeting was only pro tem, to put things in working order.

WE have now three specialist clubs for the advancement of the Yorkshire Canary in the home county, viz., the original Y.C.C., which, by the way, we shall now have to term "The Clear and Ticked Y.C.C.," as these are now all that are left for the "old original" to cater for—the "C.M.Y.C.C." and the "G.M.Y.C.C.," and it behoves all Yorkshire fanciers to assist in the upholding of their special varieties. It is estimated that there are at least 2,000 breeders of the Yorkshire Canary within a radius of twenty miles of Bradford Town Hall, and from this multitude only a meagre 275 names are down as members of the specialist clubs. But it is hoped this number will soon increase, as no one will have as excuse that "his variety is not catered for."

THE C.M.Y.C.C. is going strong. No less than 40 new members are to be proposed at the next meeting. Members, too, are coming in strong for the Green Marked Club, 60 or over having joined already.

HAVING a few hours to spare the other day, a friend and myself took a stroll countrywards, and were amply repaid for our trouble. A few minutes after leaving the car at Queensbury, I heard a voice calling, and on looking round was pleased to see a birdy pal. After a chat on birdy breeding for a few minutes, the conversation veered round to the Green Marked Club; result, another member captured. Cinnamon Marks were also mentioned, and he stated that himself and a friend intended to join that club. Look out for me, Mr. Secretaries; I have both names and brass.

AFTER leaving our friend, we proceeded across country, and were soon amongst the birds. Thrushes, Blackbirds, Blue-dunnocks, Linnets, etc., were here, there, and everywhere. The Cuckoo was calling in the distance, and in one place I was pleased to have a splendid view of a pair of Magpies; a grand pair, they were in lovely condition.

"STRAIGHT-'UN."

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1909 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

Northern Y.C.C.

As breeding results are always welcome by your go-ahead paper, I am sending you the result of a few of our members:—Mr. Leach upwards of 20, Mr. J. Curry 14, Mr. Ellwood 56, Mr. Davidson 20, Mr. Carr 16, Mr. Wigglesworth 12, Tindale 24. Mr. Dix has had poor results, so has Mr. Harrison and Mr. White only 2 or 3 each. I have close on 70, and just commencing second round.—T. C. CRAWHALL.

Cardiff.

Mr. W. S. Negus, the secretary of the Cardiff and Dis. C.B.S., writes: Breeding experiences were discussed by the members at our last meeting. Some are meeting with extraordinary successes, while others report the reverse. Ill-luck is attributed generally to the dry east winds that have been experienced in this part of the country during the early part of the breeding season.

Midland Roller Canary Club.

Some of our members are doing exceptionally well this breeding season, having as many as 30 to 40 birds doing for themselves, while others are just the reverse, not having a solitary youngster as yet. Clear eggs and bad feeding hens seem more plentiful than usual round this district.—J. H. WILLOWS, hon. secretary.

Warrington.

Yorkshire breeders in this district have had poor results from the first round, but the second promises to be better. Norwich breeders are having good results, and several promising youngsters have been bred. We have not heard of any Mules or Hybrids being bred yet; these may be expected to do better later on.—C. DUKES, secretary, Warrington C.B.S.

Club Reports.

GLASGOW & WEST. COUNTIES B.C.

Meeting held in the Good Templars' Hall, Ingram-street. Mr. Pettigrew presided. Mr. Pettigrew gave a report of the splendid ramble the members had at Thornton Hall, not forgetting the scones and bannocks that were "removed" during the time they were there. It was resolved to have another ramble on the 19th June. The date of the First Feather Show was fixed for the 10th July. The patronage of the club was granted to Kilmarnock Ornithological C.B.S.—T. DRYSDALE, Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Fortnightly meeting held May 29th, at the Fawcett-street Cafe. Mr. W. F. Swan presided in the absence of Mr. J. Farrar, who is confined to his bed through an accident. The chief subject for discussion was the selection of matched pairs, and about an hour and a half was devoted to considering the relative merits of in-breeding, pedigree breeding, and breeding from birds selected on sight. The question of using a large cock to a small hen, or vice-versa, and breeding from medium-sized pairs, were all gone into, the discussion being thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Two new members were elected, Mr. P. F. Thomas, of Kamptee, India, and Mr. Summersides, of Monkwearmouth. Mr. Thomas is the second gentleman from India who has joined the Society, and his admission gave the greatest satisfaction to the members.—W. REID, Secretary.

QUEEN'S PARK AND DISTRICT (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in Marie Stuart Hall, Langside-road, Crosshill. The first feather show business was gone into with great zeal. It is to be held in above ball on June 26th, birds to be staged not later than 4 p.m. The June meeting will be held an hour before the first feather show opening, and there will be no meeting on the last Friday of the month. Members will materially help matters by being prompt at meeting, and staging birds at time arranged. The club is fortunate in securing the services of Mr. J. Ferguson as judge for first feather show. The special prizes for same are coming in beyond expectation. We are growing apace; new members at each meeting, and we invite anyone who would like to join us. Entries for first feather not later than June 19th.—G. N. THOMSON, Sec.

GATESHEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held May 26th, at headquarters, Mr. Almond in the chair. Considering that the breeding season is at its height, we had a good attendance of members. After minutes of previous meeting were read and adopted, we enrolled four new members: Mr. Currah and Son, of Newcastle joining our ranks, also Mr. Coutts and Mr. Harvey, of Byker. Schedule for First Feather Show was gone into; we are again having nineteen classes. Some discussion arose over judge, so it was left over till next meeting to be held on June 9th. It was proposed to hold a smoker after show, which met with approval by most of the members present. As we have secured a splendid room for the occasion, we hope to see as many present as possible. It was also suggested to have a ramble; we decided to make final arrangements at next meeting.—G. BUCK and H. JOHNSON, Secs.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

A meeting was held on May 26th to consider the specials for the Nest Feather and Autumn Shows. Before business commenced, Mr. Tweedale said he had a very sad announcement to make, that one of the members who had joined only this year had been taken away very suddenly, and be proposed that that we send our sympathy to Mrs. Whitfield and her small family. The resolution was carried in silence. It was resolved to leave the question of specials for table shows open until later in the season, and that subscriptions be invited from members. 12/- was promised. It was decided that we accept Mr. Sandiford's offer of a two guinea challenge cup for most points won by members, three highest birds over six selected shows, birds to have been moulted on Sandiford's Colour Feed. That the club give a gold medal for second most points, and that we give one medal at each show for the best bird shown by a member. In the novice section it was decided that we give a silver medal at each show for the best bird shown by a novice member. That the cup given by Dr. O'Neal be for most points gained by a novice, two highest birds to count, the club to give a gold medal for second most points. Mr. Atkins promised 2/6 for third most points. Sandiford's cup is to be won twice before being the absolute property of the exhibitor. The N.Y.C.C. Challenge Cup is to be competed for as before. Our next Table Show is to be held in conjunction with the Northern British Bird, Mule, and Foreign Bird Club on June 16th. All subscriptions must be paid in June.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Hon. Sec.

NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

A splendid muster of members were present at headquarters on 19th May, to hear Mr. Morris's lecture on the Norwich Plainhead. Mr. Hale occupied the chair. In order to make his remarks clear to all present, the lecturer had brought three fine specimens of Norwich, and during his lecture described very fully the points to be considered in selecting a Norwich, and also what to avoid. He strongly condemned the method of double buffing, having proved by experience that no real good birds would be obtained from it, the result being a bundle of feathers and quality very poor. To obtain good colour, he advised the novice to use green blood, one such bird being sufficient in the breeding room, and said caution should be exercised in obtaining the right stock bird, which he described as a bronze green, and which would be the means of establishing a foundation of colour in one's stock. He recommended the beginner not to purchase birds here and there, but to go to a reliable breeder for his stock, and also never to buy a buff off the show bench, as many carried too much feather, or others bred double buff. He dwelt at some length on the use of a breeding record, by which the breeder would know how his stock was bred and also the faults, etc., to guard against when pairing up. By this means a breeder would be able to turn up the pedigree of all his stock, which the lecturer maintained was essential. Many other points were thoroughly explained, the lecturer repeatedly referring to the birds present to emphasise his points. At the close of his lecture, Mr. Morris answered questions, the chief item discussed being breeding from pedigree. Mr. Morris stuck to his guns well, maintaining that pedigree was absolutely essential and that a breeder must exercise his judgment in pairing his stock, and not simply rely on pedigree alone. Questions were asked by Messrs. Crisp, Forse, Penton, Harper, Lacey, Cox, and several others. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Morris at the close.—R. P. CARTER, Hon. Sec.

JARROW AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of Mr. Richardson, who had promised to give us a washing exhibition, Mr. W. Bowen kindly offered his services for the occasion, and washed a couple of birds for us and afterwards gave the members some good advice on how to wash their birds for the coming shows. There was a good gathering of friends and members, and all spent a very interesting evening. Our next meetiug is on Tuesday, June 8th, in Lockhart's Cafe. —ROBT. BLORE, Sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER CANARY CLUB.

Monthly meeting held May 27th, at Swan and Peacock, Wolverhampton, when a good muster of members turned up to transact the important business of passing rules and fixing show date, etc. Mr. Max Jacquinn presided. Since last meeting the committee had read and drawn up a set of rules similar to those which govern other Roller societies. These were discussed at length, and then passed in their entirety. It was unanimously decided that November 3rd and 4th be the dates fixed for the annual open contest, and that Mr. F. A. Lester, London, be asked to judge. Four new members were elected, viz., Messrs. Tonkins (Birmingham), J. Brown (Wednesfield), A. Shepherd (Willeshall), Cooper (Wolverhampton).—J. H. WILLOWS, Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Adjourned general meeting held in the Oldham Hall, Rinshaw-street, Liverpool, May 27th, Mrs. Hales in the chair. Patronage: It was decided that the classification be as last year, viz., Selfs and Fouls first show and alternately cocks and hens. All applications for patronage to be in the hands of the Secretary by July 20th, and the patronage will be allotted on July 24th. Societies asking for same must undertake to put on the necessary eight classes and take the rotation of classification. It was decided to again have a draw to raise the cash specials; all arrangements for this being left in the hands of the committee. It was also decided to have two novice cups as last year, the cups to be raised by voluntary subscriptions. About £2 was subscribed at the meeting, and the Secretary will be glad to hear from any member who wishes to subscribe to cups. The Nest Feather Show was fixed for July 24th, Mr. Houlton, St. Helens, to judge. —S. HADWIN, Sec.

HULL C.B.S.

The Society recently held its annual country ramble at Croxby Pond, the beautiful grounds of Lord Yarborough (by kind permission of his agent, C. B. Hankey, Esq.). A good muster turned up and were taken to their destination by brake over a hilly course. On arrival, parties were formed with the object of studying wild bird life, the grounds containing an abundance of trees, shrubs, and a large pond studded with reeds and willows affording cosy nesting places for birds and wild fowl. Amongst the species were discovered wild ducks, coots, water hens, and a large swan, which latter showed a very antagonistic spirit towards intruders. Whilst of other species, Yellow Buntings, Chaffinches, Blue Tits, Wrens, Linnets, and commoner birds were discovered pursuing their breeding operations, which generally were found to be rather backward. In the fine old high trees with which the place abounds, Magpies and Jackdaws could be seen bringing up their broods, and lively squirrels were discovered in their haunts. After tea the party were photographed as a memento of the occasion. Another nest was discovered in the "doctor's" stockings, which had been hung on a tree to dry. It was said to be a Stonechat's, and must have been built very rapidly; stones were plentiful therein. The catering was well carried out by Mr. Moore, jun., whilst Mr. T. Cartwright proved himself to be a very capable waiter. A vote of thanks was passed to Mr. A. Sutcliffe for kindly obtaining the necessary permit to visit Croxby, and also to Mr. Towl for obtaining a handsome silver medal for competition amongst our members. At a meeting held on May 24th, it was suggested that a picnic be arranged for August Bank Holiday at Ravendale Valley, open to all members and their friends, and steps will be taken to carry this arrangement out, if practicable.—H. HARDING, Hon. Treasurer.

A Safety Nest.
Sent by T. Giles, 15a, Austin Street, Stamford, Lincolnshire.

I enclose a sketch of a safety nest for the use of Hybrid breeders. It enables one to remove the eggs without frightening the birds. It should be made 4½in. high and three inches the other two ways, as per sketch. A cokernut should be purchased, and sawn across, then you have two nest pans. The drawers should be 1½in. deep, and be filled with cotton wool (or other soft material), and it can be so arranged that a slot cut in the end of the cage enables the drawer to be pulled out from the outside of the cage, and the egg taken away. A hole is cut in the bottom of the nest-pan and lining, through which the egg drops.—T. GILES.

No. 315.
An Easily Removable Nest-box.
Sent by H. Wright, 75, Bridge Road, Battersea, S.W.

I enclose a sketch of the nest boxes I use in my breeding cages (all of which I make myself). I leave all dimensions to the maker's fancy. I first cut a hole in the end of the cage, then arrange a piece of wood to fit exactly in the space, and I attach the nest box to the inside of the latter. Then place the lower edge of this piece of wood into the groove at the bottom of the opening (made by a strip of wood fixed across it), when the top will fall on to the piece fixed across on the inside of the cage; then put on a wire fastener to secure it, and a knob. This "door" acts almost as a drawer, and I find it most convenient for inspecting the nest at any time, while it is easy to supply a clean nest for the young.—H. WRIGHT.

Some Breeding Season . . . . Troubles Considered.

By T. W. WILSON.

A Lecture before the members and friends of the Halifax O.S. on April 3rd.

The Red Mite Pest.

The next trouble on the list is of a different order, and is perhaps more vexatious than serious. The "red-mite pest" (to which I am referring) is one that, whilst it is not at all desirable, cannot be classed as of a fatal order. It may be taken at the outset as a sine qua non that when you set out to breed Canaries by choice, you are also setting out to breed red-mite willy-nilly. This being the case, the first thing to ascertain is when and where they first made their unwelcome appearance. This you will find to be about the end of May in the nest-pots.

When you take them away to replace them with clean ones for the next nests, on examining them you will find a few tiny moving dots which represent the "enemy." Don't fail to clear that pot right away, and scour it out as soon as possible. You must now keep a sharp look-out on the perch-ends and the seed-lockers in the weekly clean up; also in all tiny crevices in the cages, as when once the mites get a hold they multiply rapidly.

You will find more in the nests as the season reaches its close, and if you watch this point you will do a lot to keep them from spreading. This is very essential in view of the moulting season, as if there are large numbers of red mite present, that very desirable condition of things, known as a "quick moult," is very much discounted. I have never found them do any very great damage by their presence in the nest; in fact, I have noted at times a particularly large and lusty lot of chicks reared on a perfect ant-hill of these pests. I have also found various British birds' nests that have been "alive" with the vermin, and yet the young seemed most vigorous. I may instance more particularly the nest of the Swallow. But yet taking all things into account the less you entertain this uninvited guest, the better for your stock, if only on the score of comfort.

Some Minor Troubles.

This exhausts my list of major troubles, but I have yet a passing reference to make with regard to a few minor ones. First, there is the case of the hen who persistently refuses to mate with the gent of your choice, but shows ardent attachment to some other fellow across the room. When this happens, first locate the object of the errant lady's affections; he can be found by means of the answering calls. Promptly remove him as far away as possible, even to the extent of a swing-cage downstairs, as it is generally an unattached cock bird in whose case this happens.

Another trouble is having a hen which consistently ignores the nest provided, and lays her eggs on the floor of the cage. I have met this difficulty in various ways. In some cases the putting of the nest pot in the place where the hen lays her eggs succeeds, and in some instances I have made a rude nest on the cage bottom myself, and there the brood has been reared. These two are, however, rare cases.

I do not want my hearers to go away with the idea that they will be beset and worried by the woeful list of troubles I have outlined; on the contrary even the veriest tyro should be able to steer clear of nine-tenths of them by decent management and an intelligent interpretation of the many articles from the pens of old and experienced hands that appear almost weekly at this time of the year in Cage Birds.

In conclusion I wish to mention just a few seemingly trivial things, all of which however play their part in helping to prevent many of the aforementioned troubles and difficulties from besetting the fancier, be he an old hand or a beginner. In the first place, give your hens all the room and exercise you can in the winter, so that they will be in good hard training when pairing time comes round, as you will find that you will have but few of the vexations I have instanced if they are in the best of condition. Don't forget to trim the claws of old birds before pairing them, so as to lessen your chances of having clawholed eggs or young birds dragged out of the nest when the hen comes off. Don't enter the bird-room either hurriedly or silently, but give due notice of your coming. Go about the work of the bird-room in a gentle and easy manner. Don't point at sitting or brooding hens with your training stick, for though gesticulation may be the soul of oratory, I object to having my birds pointed at suddenly, especially when they are on the nest. Don't neglect to dredge the nest and under the lining with insect powder when setting the hen. Don't fail to give a hen that has sat a nest of clear eggs, at least a fortnight's rest and good diet before pairing her again; three weeks would be better, as all hens are greatly reduced in tone by the incubating process. Position of perches: below the nest one inch till young are 12 days old, then higher 2ins.

Lastly, whatever the trouble of the moment, don't let it weigh too much on your mind. Don't let the sad loss of a youngster or two occupy your mind except in so far as the lesson gained from the experience may be useful to you; but centre all your mind and hopes on those that are still left and requiring your best attention. Study your birds' characteristics and don't try to make them do your way, but try to do theirs, and a greater measure of success will be yours, and you will vote the Canary cult one of the most fascinating of hobbies.

OBITUARY.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSON.

The members of the Blaydon-on-Tyne and Dis. C.B.S. have sustained a severe loss in the death of Mr. Robt. Johnson, who was a keen Yorkshire breeder, and died last week at the age of 49. He was interred at Winlaton, on Whitsunday, and among other fanciers who attended the funeral we noticed Messrs. J. McGuiness, J. Robson, J. Hands, G. Dobson, and R. Pattison. Peace to his ashes.—GEO. HARVER, secretary.

Mr. J. H. VERRALL.

We deeply regret to hear of the demise of Mr. John Hubert Verrall, one of the "old brigade" of fanciers, and who will be well-known to our readers through the various articles and many letters he has from time to time contributed to our columns. Mrs. Becks (of Portslade), a niece, with whom Mr. Verrall passed the declining years of his life, writes:—

"I am sorry to say that my uncle passed away on Thursday, May 20th, after a lingering illness, due to cancer of the liver. He was buried on the 25th at St. John's Churchyard, Lewes. His brother, Mr. George Verrall, of Newmarket, Mrs. Claude Verrall, and several others I did not know, attended the burial service. He had lived with me (his niece) two and a half years. He has left a dear little Linnet that I shall look after, and I do hope it will live. Strange to say, he died on the same day as his brother Claude (my father), May 20th, two years ago."

Mr. Verrall, who was 68 years of age, was well-known to most of the "old school" in the Fancy. He attended the very early Crystal Palace Shows (commencing with the one in the year 1864), and was also an exhibitor at many of them. From 1880 to 1892 he did not miss a single fixture at the great Glass House. His tastes in birds were very varied, Canaries, British, and Foreign being alike favoured, though his particular leaning—if he can be said to have had one—was towards Mules, Hybrids, and rare-feathered birds. Another link in memory's chain of bye-gone associations is severed with the death of this sterling old fancier—may he sleep in peace.

One of the latest and most up-to-date of metropolitan bird and pet stores is that recently opened at 37, New Oxford Street, London, W., by Messrs. Willson. The name is an old one in the trade, but the business is now in entirely new hands, and the new management intend to leave no stone unturned to make this store one of the best and most complete in existence. The premises in New Oxford Street have been fitted with the very best styles of cages, aviaries, and pens, and the whole of the rooms re-decorated and fitted with electric light, regardless of expense. The result is one of the cleanest and most attractive bird, etc., shops it has been our pleasure to see, all the stock being kept under the best sanitary conditions. A large stock of birds (Canaries, British and foreign, ranging from the commonest to the rarest species), is always to be seen there, and our readers in town, and country visitors are invited to call and look round. Messrs. Willson's monthly list (June) will be found in our advertisement columns this week.

London Federation of C.B.S.

A meeting of the Council will be held this Friday, June 4th, at 7.30 p.m., at the Feathers Hotel, Gt. Chapel Street, Westminster, S.W.—P. ADAMTHWAITE, secretary.

Green Marked Yorkshire C.C.

A general meeting of members and intending members will be held Saturday next, June 5th, at 6.30 p.m., at the Market Tavern, Bradford. Agenda: 1, New rules and regulations; 2, Method of counting points, starred birds or otherwise; 3, Classification for club patronage; 4, Election of other officers and whole committee. All members and intending members are earnestly requested to attend, as the business is of vital importance.—F. ARMSTRONG, hon. secretary.

"CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

One of the oldest makers and advertisers of marking rings for Canaries, etc., is Mr. S. Drake, of 31, Haley Hill, Halifax, and this week he sends us samples of his latest rings with, by way of contrast, examples of the rings made in the early days of his career. The latter are very crude and cumbersome by comparison, the 1909 rings being beautifully neat, small, and light, and easy of use—in fact, we find it difficult to imagine anything better in the way of marking rings.

The Wallsend and Mid Tyne C.B.A. are reluctantly compelled to postpone their prize drawing, writes Mr. Jas. Johnston, late secretary, on account of a few more books not yet returned. Would the friends who have such kindly return same as early as possible to enable us to have the prizes drawn for at once? I would like publicly to thank for their kindness all to whom I sent books of tickets in giving us their help in trying to wipe off the deficit from our last show, which I am pleased to say is likely to be cleared off and leave us with a small balance in hand.

"Bird Notes"—issued and published by the Foreign Bird Club—for May, contains an exquisitely coloured plate by Mr. H. Goodchild, of Leclanche's or Rainbow Bunting. Two birds are depicted, one of them being a living specimen in the possession of Mrs. K. Leslie Miller. Some interesting notes by Mr. Wesley T. Page accompany the plate. Mr. Page also writes on "An Easter Visit to Members' (of the Foreign Bird Club) Aviaries," four or five of the aviaries referred to being excellently illustrated from photographs. "Book Notices and Reviews," "A Group of Interesting Acquisitions," "Bird Notes from Far and Near," and a further instalment of Mr. Douglas Dewar's series of articles on "The Birds of India," go to complete a really capital issue.

The Norwich Plainhead Club.

Kindly announce that all societies desirous of having the club's patronage should apply to me at once, giving full particulars of classification, judge, etc. The rules provide that there must be eight classes, four money prizes, and a club judge.—J. HOPKINS, hon. secretary, 126, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

The Cage Bird Union.

I should be glad if all those societies who are affiliated to the C.B.U. who may have changed their delegates for the coming year, will send on to me at once their names and addresses, as I wish to nominate all delegates for the selection of the Executive Council, which will take place at once. I shall also be glad to hear from societies thinking of joining the Union.—J. RAYNES, secretary, 9, Richmond Road, Chorlton-cum-Hardy.

N.B.B. and M.C. Outing.

The National British Bird and Mule Club annual outing takes places to-day (Saturday), June 5th, write Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr, the hon. secretaries. The morning party meet at the booking office Waterloo (south station) at 10 o'clock, and hook to Surbiton. The afternoon party meet at the booking office, No. 3 platform (main line), and proceed by the 1.37 train to Claygate, where we meet the morning party. Each person to get his own ticket. All fanciers and their friends invited.

CONVINCING TESTIMONY.

MR. ROONEY, Hon. Sec. Y.C.C. of Ireland, writes as follows :—"I was so well pleased with the first tin of your Egg and Biscuit—or rather my Yorkshires liked it so well—that I have decided to use your preparation in the future instead of the hard-boiled egg and tea biscuit. A bird eats nothing that it does not like, and what it likes, with few exceptions, invariably agrees with it. I believe if I put a tinful of your Egg and Biscuit in with a 'Yorky' that it would leave nothing but the egg-pan."

MR. JOHN STEWART; 17, Bellfield Terrace, Coalburn, writes as follows :—"I have tried your Egg and Biscuit Food, and must say that it is worth 3s. per tin instead of 1s. I tried it on a nest of four Roller Canaries. They are the strongest birds I ever had, and I shall never be without it all the year round."

MR. JOSEPH COTTERELL, 37, Bull Street, Bull Piece, Darlaston, Staffs., writes as follows :—"I have given your Egg and Biscuit a trial, and can say without a doubt that it is the best Egg Food I have ever tried, and shall recommend it to all the bird fanciers I meet."

MR. E. E. R. BRYANT, Church Street, Seaford, writes as follows :—"I am much pleased with your Egg and Biscuit. I consider it far superior to hard-boiled eggs, and find it keeps better after making up. The birds also eat up every scrap. It is a time-saver when you have a lot of birds. I add about 50 per cent. of biscuit."

MR. W. WATSON, 76, Lowergate, Clitheroe, writes as follows :—"Please forward me by return of post a 1s. tin of your Egg and Biscuit. I am completely without, and have some young birds, and I prefer it to any other food I have ever tried. I have recommended it very strongly to the members of the Clitheroe and District Cage Bird Society, of which I am Assistant Secretary, and several have tried it with success. Please send it by return, as I prefer it to egg and bread."

MR. ARTHUR WRIGHT, Post Office, Limpsfield, Surrey, writes as follows :—"Kindly forward me another 1s. tin of your Egg and Biscuit early. It is undoubtedly the best I have ever tried, and I cannot be without it now."

MR. D. WARRALL, The Croft, Gomer Street, Willenhall, Staffs, writes as follows :—"Will you please forward us four 1s. tins of your Egg and Biscuit. I am pleased to inform you that I paired my birds up, using your foods, and am pleased to let you know that I have had fifteen birds out of sixteen eggs. I hope you will send the food by return, as I am short, and do not wish to mix their foods, as the young are doing wonderfully well."

MR. R. H. TRUEMAN, 15, Fort Royal Hill, Worcester, writes as follows :—"My first round of Yorkshire Canaries are the best developed birds I have ever had, and they have been fed on your Egg and Biscuit alone as soft food."

Originals can be seen at our offices with hundreds of others. Never has any commodity met with such universal appreciation, and the many difficulties of the egg diet have been successfully overcome by our "Egg & Biscuit."

CANARY QUERIES.

Absence of Toes and Cause.

J.C.D.—Sorry, but I cannot really suggest anything better than merciful destruction for a brood of three young birds which have only two half toes and two stumps of toes amongst them. As they seem so thriving and healthy, you may, of course, wait awhile and see what agility they may acquire on leaving the nest, and if they should manage to get about tolerably well, then there would be some excuse for keeping them, but otherwise, the greatest kindness would undoubtedly be to stifle sentimentality and have them chloroformed. A rather wide flat perch, rubbed over with very coarse sandpaper so as to give it a slightly corrugated surface, should be the best aid to help them in getting about. As regards the cause, the habit you mention would have absolutely nothing at all to do with it. It is far more probable that one of the old birds, most likely the hen, when they were hatching nipped the missing toes off either accidently or otherwise.

A Husky Norwich.

Ayrshire Laddie.—Your feeding is incorreet, in addition to which the bird doubtless contracted a cold during the bad weather we were having at the time you say he became ill. Alter the staple diet to three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and give in addition, separately, when it is recovered, a few grains of hemp twice a week, and on two other days a half teaspoonful of egg food, or a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake, and a spray of green food daily. For the present, feed as above, but give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops each of sherry and cod-liver oil emulsion mixed in it every second day for a fortnight. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts for two days, and afterwards twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, two days in every three for a week, and every second day for another week after if necessary. See that it is not exposed to any draughts.

Deformed Feet.

Yadnum.—There should be no need to destroy the bird on account of its toes being deformed. You have, however, omitted to give the most important particulars, namely, whether it is the front toes or the hind ones which are doubled underneath. But as it is the hind toes in the vast majority of cases, I am replying on that assumption in your case, and if this is not correct, please write again and say so. First make two little rubber rings by cutting about an eighth of an inch off a rubber tube, same as used on a baby's feeding bottle, for each. Catch the bird, hold the three front toes together, and lay the hind toe back against the shank of the leg. Pass a rubber ring over the three front claws, and push it up the shank of the leg nearly, but not quite, as far as the hind toe reaches, and leave it there so that when you release the bird the hind toe will be held back by the ring. Treat both feet the same, and let the bird wear these rings two or three weeks. When you take them off give the bird only small round perches, about the size of a lead pencil, and take notice of the toes for a few days to see whether they come forward permanently again. If so, you must put on the rings for a week or two longer. But do not mind them coming forward for a few minutes or an hour occasionally. If they keep in their proper position most of the time, the small perches will complete the cure.

Cause of Unfertility.

W.B.—The cause of all your eggs from both pairs of birds being unfertile is simply that the cocks were not in proper breeding condition. The cause of this lack of condition would be merely a matter of conjecture without more details as to treatment. It might have been due to the variable weather about the time, or to your feeding, which you say consists of best Canary seed and egg and biscuit. If that is their sole diet it is very faulty, As a staple diet, give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape during the breeding season, and now, to get them ready for mating again, give the cocks separately half a teaspoonful of hemp every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of egg food with a few grains of inga and a pinch of gold of pleasure added to it. As green food, give two or three leaves of dandelion each daily. Instead of the above extras, give the hens a pinch of inga every second day, and the same kind and quantity of egg food, but minus the inga, on the alternate days. As green food, give them a supply of chickweed daily. You may also give the cocks six drops of dandelion juice and four of tincture of gentian in the water for a few days. After a week or fortnight of this treatment, you should be able to mate them with much better results.

Making a Muddle of it.

Kitchen Boy.—You have evidently been overfeeding the Yorkshires and thereby unconsciously contributing to the failure. Take away the nest box for a week, and during this time treat the bird as follows. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for three consecutive days, and after that give twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day for a week or fortnight. It will not matter if this is continued up to the time of laying again. As regards the diet, give a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. Every second day give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, linseed, and inga between the pair, and on the alternate days give the same quantity of egg food with a pinch of gold of pleasure sprinkled over it. Do not give egg without any bread or biscuit, as you have been doing. Always add at least an equal bulk of bread crumb or crushed biscuit; twice the bulk would be still better for adult birds prior to nesting, and crushed sponge cake would do just as well. The last two items should be discontinued as soon as the hens have gone to nest. Give a fairly liberal supply of green food each day—chickweed, groundsel, or watercress, in this order for preference, but give very little dandelion. Give cuttlefish and a good supply of gritty calcarcous sand. After a week or so return the nest box and continue the treatment mentioned above until the hen has gone to nest again. Limit the diet strictly to what is mentioned above, and fight shy of drugs and nostrums when not absolutely necessary.

Overdue.

Ironmonger.—Your letter arrived too late for a reply to be got in time for last week's issue. See rules as to time. I am inclined to think you must have made some error as to the time the hen had been sitting, as it would certainly be most remarkable for you to find a chick alive on breaking an egg after it had been sat upon for three weeks. The only other probable cause I could suggest would be that the hen did not really settle down to sitting during the first week, but merely kept the eggs from becoming cold, and thereby kept the germ alive. It will be too late for you to do anything to bring out the chicks by the time this appears, but another time in such an extreme case as this, where it is simply a case of the chicks dying if left alone, you should put them in a saucer of warm water for a few minutes and then return them to the nest for an hour or two, and if no signs of "pipping" are then visible, make a small hole very carefully in the top of the large end of the egg to enable you to see where the tip of the chick's beak touches the shell, and make a little crack (nothing more) in the shell right across where the beak lies. Return them to the nest for an hour or two longer to give the chicks a chance to free themselves. If they make no progress you may later on enlarge the crack round the shell and gently lift off the top portion. If the chick is alive and inside of shell apparently dry, and the yolk absorbed, you may perhaps simply toss out the chick, but to do so before the yolk is absorbed completely, or to cause any bleeding, is almost certain death. By the way, you need never break an egg to tell whether a chick is alive within the shell. Fill a teacup with warm water, gently drop in each egg separately and steady it with the finger as it floats; remove the finger, and if there is a living chick within the egg will bob about quite unmistakably. All eggs that do not contain a live chick will remain still and unmoved as long as the water is kept still.

Owing to the holidays, many queries have necessarily had to wait an answer until next week.

Breeding in Aviary.

William.—The very cold weather we were having when your Canaries had young in the outdoor aviary would probably be largely to blame for the hens ceasing to feed. They would most likely remain on the nests to keep the young warm, depending upon the cock to carry food to them, and the poor hard-worked benedict had far too much on hand to attend to all. You ought to have two cocks with the six hens, instead of only one. As it is, there is a great risk of you getting a large proportion of unfertile eggs. Your feeding is not very good. As the birds are flying loose and in a fairly large place, you should not give a mixture of seeds, but use a separate vessel for each kind of seed. Give a regular supply of Canary, rape, and hemp, but stop the regular use of linseed altogether, and at most only give a little occasionally, which you might strew about a shallow pan filled with gritty sand. You do not say whether you use grit on the floor or aviary or not. If you do not, give two pans, one filled with plain grit, and the other with the same material among which you have well mixed a little crushed common salt. If you use grit on the floor you may dispense with the pan of plain grit. Give a saucer of egg food daily as long as there is any young to be fed, and let it consist of equal parts of egg, crushed biscuit, or bread crumbs, and crushed sponge cake. Give a variety of green food, and in unlimited quantities. See that everything is always sweet and fresh, down to the drinking and bathing water. When the weather gets warm, let the bath remain in the aviary permanently.

Young Dying.

Helen Green.—Beyond saying the young gape before dying, you give no idea as to what symptoms may be present, nor of the condition of the bodies after death. Are the crops empty or full when they die, and have the bodies a plump, well-fed appearance, or the reverse? Is the gaping you speak of the same as occurs when they are being fed, or simply a kind of gasping as they lie flat in the nest? If the former is the case, as I feel rather inclined to suspect, I should say the real cause of all the trouble is that the hens cease feeding them, and the young simply die of starvation, in which case they would have nothing in the crops after death. If you find that this surmise is correct, begin to give a free supply of green food—groundsel, chickweed, or lettuce, in the order named for preference and also give the hen a bath in which a little common salt has been dissolved, say, in the proportion of a good teaspoonful of salt to a pint of water. Let the hen bathe twice a day in this prepared bath if she will for two or three days. Your feeding is not quite correct. If you look up these replies for the past month you will find full details as to feeding from time of hatching frequently repeated. Meantime, after the young are a week old let your egg food consist of equal parts of egg, biscuit, and crushed sponge cake. Begin to give green food on the fourth day, at latest, and do not begin to give hemp until the young are about ten days old. By following these hints I think your trouble should soon cease, unless, indeed, the hens are incorrigibly bad feeders.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Moulting a Bullfinch.

Jarvis.—Let the bird have a fair supply of linseed in its stock mixture when moulting, but no hemp whatever. A little maw and sunflower daily should be allowed—or safflower seed, which looks like a kind of minature sunflower seed. The chief point is to offer all the natural colouring agents, in the shape of fruits and berries and weeds, you can lay hands on. You can get dewberries, and plenty of ripe and semi-ripe blackberries; then plenty of privet berries. Other suitable things are ripe cherries, raspberries (Bullies are great fruit eaters, remember), heather tops, mountain ash berries, dock, plantain, thistles, shepherd's purse, chickweed. See "Wild Plant" book just issued by "C.B." A most important point in the production of gloss in the plumage is a free use of the bath. A bird which is not a free bather never comes out so polished as one that revels in cold water—the difference is plainly to be seen. If your Bullie is lax in this respect, he must be lightly sprayed every day with a fine sprayer (such as barbers use for bay rhum, etc.), which may be bought from most fanciers' specialists advertising in our columns. Never drench the bird.

Egg-eating.

Perplexed.—Hens which persist in smashing and eating every egg they lay are a—well, to put it as briefly as possible, a nuisance. They are far worse than egg-smashing Finches. I have known "faked" eggs cure an egg-eating hen; have used them successfully myself, in fact. Here is the recipe: Take any clear egg and, with an egg-drill (used on nesting expeditions) bore a fair-sized hole in one side and eject the contents in the usual way with the blow-pipe. If you have not an egg-drill, the ends can be punctured and gradually broken away with a needle-point to allow the contents to be blown out. Then make a mixture of mustard and cayenne pepper (the hottest sample you can lay hands on), with a little water, and fill up the now empty shell with this delectable "cream." Over the hole stick a little thin court plaster, or gold-beaters' skin. After dark (or as near it as possible) slip this "egg" quietly into the nest (often it will do placed on the cage bottom) of the hen addicted to egg-eating, and take yourself off to roost. Don't go into the bird-room too early the next morning (not, of course, from fear of hearing any unladylike language). One experience is generally sufficient. Still, hens have been known to seem to rather like it. I may add that I have also cured egg-eating Goldfinches by the above dodge.

A Hand-reared Song Thrush.

Little Tiny.—There is no method by which the sex of Song Thrushes can accurately be told, other than by hearing them sing. The hens are often bigger and stouter in build than the cocks, and that they are as good in colour and markings is evidenced by the fact that some of the finest Song Thrushes ever exhibited on the show bench have been hens. The cocks are generally longer and flatter-looking on head when viewed sideways, and perhaps a shade deeper in brown on the back, while I have heard some fanciers advance the opinion that they generally have a small light patch directly below the under mandible, free from all marking (or pencilling). The one sure test, however, is the song. In taking a youngster out of a nest, I should go for the most forward, best-developed one—such a youngster is usually to be found in every nest (the "top dog"). Young cocks commence to "record" (or try over their song) almost as soon as they commence to perch—you can see their little throats working like the bellows of a concertina as they warble away. The hens will also "record," but not with the gusto of a real cock, nor with the same pulsation of the throat. Hand-reared birds should always have the opportunity of "learning" from the song of a good adult performer. If this is not afforded them, they never become really finished vocalists, but sing a medley composed more or less largely of the notes of any birds they happen to hear.

Colour Feeding a Greenfinch.

Beginner, G.P.—It is usually a difficult matter to get Finches to eat colour food made in the usual way—viz., with egg-bread. Most have to be "judiciously starved" on to it. There is a risk, of course, of them being upset and succumbing during the process. Some fanciers get over this difficulty by gradually accustoming the birds to eating ground-up seeds (canary, linseed, and maw, generally). Then, about the end of June, they commence adding a little colour-feed, working up the strength by degrees. One or two large firms in the seed line sell seeds with the shells removed (some, I fancy, terming these "cooked seeds"), which, of course, can readily be treated with colour food. Both crushed and shelled seeds absorb the colouring agent quite well. A certain successful fancier of my acquaintance, with a liking for colour feeding Britishers (especially Bullfinches), uses crushed linseed only as a vehicle for conveying the pepper. You must experiment and find out which way, or ways, best meet your own case—there is no "royal road" as with Canaries, unless it be with hand-reared British birds. Most fanciers use red-feed. Moult him in a good-sized cage—flight cage, if you like, providing he is very steady at present. The quantity of colour food depends on the bird—a rich yellow Greenfinch would naturally need less than a dingier-coloured one. One in four ought to be the outside strength necessary; one in six or seven might suffice. Use your own judgment. In my opinion, an overfed Greenfinch is spoiled; and some birds, buffs, it is almost waste of time to try to colour-feed. They don't "take it" (the colour).

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Brevities.

A Curious Question (J. Furbur).—The Nightingale is certainly not a Hedge Sparrow; they are very different birds. The Hedge Accentor (to give the bird its proper name) is a brownish bird, with dark streaks; the 'Gale plain brown. The Hedge Sparrow, further, remains with us all the year round.

A Magpie's Wing (Magpie).—I fancy it is the hand-reared Magpies which become proficient at talking; and they certainly talk well, too. I have got adult-caught birds very tame (I have one now), but not to articulate words, though they have mimiced various sounds. If the shoulder of the wing was smashed by the shot, it will never hang properly. You should get part 2 of the "British Bird Manual"; it deals with Softbills, and will tell you about the Magpie. So far as colour of plumage goes, male and female are alike; the former has the best tail, and exhibits a better metallic sheen.

Toes of Linnet Mule (F. Yardley).—It appears to be a complicated case, and such are difficult to cure. You might try the dodge advised some time ago in this paper of spreading out the toes on a piece of thin cardboard (of suitable size), and fastening the toes (not too tightly) in position, with silk thread. They might set properly after a course of this. No perches in cage, of course. Give Parrish's Chemical Food in the Mule's drinking water for a time (a small teaspoonful to two tablespoonfuls).

Young Greenfinches (W. J. M.).—Yes, your feeding is correct enough. That is proved by the foster-parent bringing up the young Greenfinches successfully so far. You want to give seeding chickweed and shepherd's purse in addition to (or rather than) groundsel and dandelion. When about to leave their parents, you will only need to lightly crack the ordinary seeds for a time, until the young Greenies are quite able to crack it for themselves. Continue the seeding greenfoods, by all means.

A Quartette (A Scot).—1. Have never used these things in cages, but I do not know that broom (dead) would hurt Hybrid couples. A bunch of tall, dried grasses, however, makes a quite good enough protection for the nest, and cut, dry (soft) hay an excellent nesting material. 2. If put in a fairly warm oven for half an hour, the moss would be then fit to use. 3. No. Try the book on "Wild Seeds" (price 1/2, post free), just published from this office. 4. No book specially dealing with this. See the chapter on "Diseases" in CAGE BIRD ANNUAL for 1909 (post free 8d.).

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

Cockatoo Falling Off His Perch.

No Name.—Give ten drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the mouth and repeat the dose after an interval of two days. Dissolve five grains of Bromide of Potassium in a little syrup. Give this daily for two or three days. Keep the bird quiet and where it will not be alarmed; it is important that it should be kept quiet and out of draught. I do not care to say anything about its diet, as a sudden change while it is in this condition may not be advisable. You had better repeat query next week, giving full particulars as to how you have been dieting the bird, which should accompany every query. Give full details, as I do not keep queries by me.

Ring-necked Parrakeet.

E.T.A.—Make the drinking water for one day just saline with Epsom salts; follow this by making the drinking water the colour of pale port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue this while the moult lasts. If there should be any signs of constipation, a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia—one teaspoonful to one ounce of water—will soon rectify this. Add one portion of sunflower seed to your seed mixture; also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuits, and nuts, but do not give any tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in the cage and keep the bird out of the reach of draught; at the same time it must have fresh air.

Lovebirds and Small Finches.

"James."—(1) A Red-faced would be the best to put with the Peach-faced cock, but I certainly advise you to try and get another Peach-faced hen, as this is the largest of the genus Agapornis, and the Red-faced are certainly fragile till they get thoroughly established. An advert in our columns would probably secure you one from some private aviculturist; (2) Breeding pairs require plenty of space, and it would be well not to overstock your space. Get a pair each of Cutthroats (Ribbon Finches), Bengalese, and Bronze Mannikins, all of which will thrive on the same treatment as Zebra Finches. I am convinced you would readily procure a hen Zebra Finch by advertising in our columns. You would find "Foreign Birds for Beginners" very helpful. See advert in this column.

Diseased Parrot.

J.F.D.—You must continue the treatment already prescribed; it must be continued till the trouble yields. You had allowed this to go on too long before seeking advice, and it will take some time to effect a cure, if such be possible. Providing you can do it without distressing the bird too much, I should advise wiping out its mouth with the honey and borax three or four times daily; also give every other day a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia—one teaspoonful to one ounce of water—so long as its voidings are not watery loose. I take it that the bird is making fairly satisfactory progress, or with such a malady it could hardly have gained strength, even though the progress is not otherwise outwardly apparent. Continue the treatment already advised, with the above modifications, and report progress a fortnight or three weeks hence, when I shall hope to hear of a decided improvement.

Budgerigar Not Breeding.

W.B.—This is a case in which patience must be exercised, though you do uot give size of your C.P. aviary. I cannot but feel that it is very much overstocked with four pairs, and as there should be at least six husks, even if you have only four, this must mean the space being very much occupied; while if two pairs were to bring off broods simultaneously, they would scarcely, at least so it appears to me, have room to move about. I really advise you to take out two pairs, leaving in the four husks, and get another cage of some type for the other two pairs. If kept in sight of each other this would have the same stimulating effect of emulating each other in reproducing their kind, as if they were kept together. Canary, white and spray millet, oats, green food, cuttlefish, and water for drinking and bathing will be all they require. The best stimulant you can give them is grass in flower (seeding grass) ad lib. This is their natural food, and they cannot have too much of it. Procure Budgerigars and Cockatiels, see advert in this column.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free, a mine of information of use and interest.

Cockatoo in Rough Plumage.

Wm. Triggs.—I much fear from your details that this bird is a feather plucker, and I should advise spraying it twice a week with quassia solution for the next few weeks. Your diet is quite right as to the boiled maize, sulphur, and chemical food, but use the following seed mixture: One part each Canary seed, oats, maize, hemp, wheat, and sunflower seed; well mix and keep a constant supply in cage. Also supply ripe fruit (banana, apple, orange, grapes, etc.), such as it fancies—test its taste in this direction—plain biscuit, nuts, and also keep a piece of cuttlefish continually in the cage. For the next month at least I should advise one dose of Diuneford's Magnesia—one teaspoonful to each ounce of the drinking water—weekly, in lieu of the Chemical Food. Improvement will most certainly not be rapid, and I should be interested to hear how it is progressing a few weeks hence. As regards its beak, this must be pared down to normal size, but be careful you do not cut back far enough to make it bleed. I suppose you have not the Slender-billed Cockatoo. In this species the upper mandible is nearly one inch longer than the lower, and in such case you must be careful to only pare away the overgrowth. If you have had no experience, you had better let either some experienced fancier or a vet. cut it for you.

PARK AND LAKE AVICULTURE.

Silkworms and Winkles.

L. Toole.—1. You can get silkworms from Robert Green, Covent Garden Aquarium and Aviaries, London. While in season they will, I think, be found advertised in the columns of this paper. 2. If you want to keep winkles alive, you should add Tidman's Sea Salt to the fresh water—not common salt. Other substances besides salt are present in sea water. You should also give them seaweed to eat; but I daresay they would feed on lettuce or other things eaten by land snails.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Green Hen (J. H. Preston).—Liver disease, giving rise to feverishness, in which the lungs were involved, and ending with apoplexy.

GENERAL.

A Hawfinch which Plucks Its Feathers.

SIR,—I should be very thankful if any of your many readers could tell me a cure for or name the cause of a cock Hawfinch plucking out his feathers on his thighs and under breast. I have a most beautiful Hawfinch that has spoiled his good looks by doing so. I have kept several Hawfinches, but have never had one to act like this. I cannot find any red mite on him, and he has water to wash in. He has never been beaten by a Hawfinch on the show bench yet, but I can hope for little success with him if he continues to act as he has done. I shall, as a young exhibitor, be thankful for any information concerning same.

WILLIAM P. BELL.

A Remedy Wanted.

SIR,—I notice in CAGE BIRDS of May 15th and 22nd that a "Remedy is wanted." The cause of the birds dying is that they happen to pick some bad seed from the bottom of the aviary, and then diarrhœa sets in, the birds lose their appetite, and pass the seeds unnoticed. Then inflammation sets in and the abdomen becomes swollen and red. The birds hop about the bottom of the aviary from one corner to the other, picking up the seeds and dropping them again, and hopping about like anything starved. By giving the birds castor oil at this time you are shortening their lives, because they do not want purging medicine—rather the reverse. I have had practical experience of British birds and Canaries for 26 years. I had the same trouble with my birds for many years, but at last I found a remedy that I wanted, and I cure all the birds with the same complaint. I will send a bottle of my remedy to the gentleman if he will be so kind as to give his name and address in the next issue of CAGE BIRDS, and also send a bottle free of charge for the gentleman who put the puzzle "Remedy wanted" in CAGE BIRDS, May 15th.

The Clashing of Show Dates in Scotland.

SIR,—I read with some interest and more amusement the letter from Mr. W. Grewar, and I must say a weaker reply I have never seen. He starts off by complaining that I make use of a nom de plume. Well, and why not? I assume that my doing so does no harm to anyone, and it certainly cannot alter the facts. Doubtless Mr. Grewar likes to see his name in print. My ambitions do not lie in that direction. Mr. Grewar at once admits that he was not aware that Kelty Show was fixed for 24th October, and that, mark you, notwithstanding the fact that it has been advertised in your paper for weeks. Fancy any intelligent body of men sitting down to fix a date for their show without first consulting the "Dates Fixed" column. Your correspondent's only excuse, if excuse it can be called, for fixing 24th October, is that there were no shows near at hand on that date last year! But last year and this year are vastly different. There are, in point of fact, to be two shows on the above date this year, and the Forfar members had only to read their paper to see this. Mr. Grewar does not like the suggestion that his society are selfish, so he states that it is I, who am selfish, because, forsooth, I ask fanciers to support those societies first in the field. By what stretch of imagination can this be called selfishness on my part? I think fanciers will agree with me that I am only asking justice for Kelty and Perth. Mr. Grewar objects to my asking if Forfar members are too stupid to see that their show will suffer, and maintains that they are not more stupid than I have shown myself by asking such a question. Will Mr. Grewar deny that all three shows will suffer? The fact is obvious. It is gratifying to learn that the Forfar members are very much awake, as one would not have gathered this from their action. We are also told that the City of Glasgow show is usually held on 16th October (the date I suggested). Well, and what of that? Forfar people used to be well satisfied if they had no competition north of Glasgow (as is shown from Mr. Grewar's letter from which I quote later). There is room for two shows on one day, provided they are held at respectable distances from each other, and further, as Mr. Grewar well knows, it is not every fancier who has birds fit to exhibit at City of Glasgow. Forfar show does not, I presume, expect the same class of birds. Our friend asks why Perth has altered its date three times within the past seven years. I hold no brief for Perth society, but I can guess the reason, and it is that other societies have treated Perth as Forfar has done on this occasion. Will you be surprised if Perth or Kelty alter their date next year? One of the three clubs will have to do so if their show is to be a success. I cannot close without convicting Mr. Grewar on his own statements. He states that when Forfar society held their first show on November 22nd, 1902, there were on that date no shows north of Glasgow (by the way, there are none billed north of Glasgow on 16th October this year), but the following year Perth, knowing that Forfar were to "select 21st November also took that date," and doubtless he thinks he has scored when he asks: "Do I not call that selfish? I do, sir (assuming the facts to be as stated). The converse applies here:—Perth, previous to any other society, selected and advertised their date, and Forfar, knowing this, yet chose the same date. Notwithstanding all these facts, Mr. Grewar finishes with the determination to stick to the date he has usurped, and has the audacity to suggest that Perth and Kelty should alter their date to allow his society a clear field. Need I say more?

Treatment of Cage Birds in Transit.

SIR,—Will you kindly insert this in your correspondence column anent the treatment of valuable birds by railway servants. I sent some birds to Manchester last Sunday. I took them to Cambridge station myself, booked them, and personally handed them into the train, and waited its departure. To my surprise I saw the guard turn them over, empty the water across the floor of the van, not studying three large "Live Birds" labels stuck on the package. Is this why exhibitors do not care to send their birds to shows? For my part, I shall not care to trust my birds away in the future. I think it is high time the cage bird fancy took this matter up.

CANTAB.

Does It Constitute a Record?

SIR,—In your issue of May 22nd Mr. Horsley states that he wants to know if 10 eggs which a two-year-old hen laid in 11 days constitutes a record? I myself have a hen Canary (a one-year-old) which laid 12 eggs on 12 consecutive days, and this was her second nest. The first nest she laid seven eggs in. Mr. Horsley will find as the hen has so many eggs to cover that they will not get the proper heat they require, and mine were three days late in hatching. Out of 12 eggs I have at the time of writing a nest of four birds a fortnight old. Six of the eggs were unfertile, and the other two eggs had dead birds in them. I took the eggs away until the seventh was laid, and I was surprised to find five more laid. It placed me in a rather awkward position, as I had not another hen laying at the time. So I let them all remain with her. It would not be a bad idea, I imagine, to mark each egg. I often do this when I change eggs to another hen. The marking should be carefully done with pen and ink. I do not believe in putting eggs in warm water, and I wait until the hen has laid her five eggs. I don't mind losing a day, as long as the birds are hatched the same day. I have also found some most useful information in CAGE BIRDS, which I take every week.

MRS. W. ANDREWS.

The Border Fancy Canary in the South.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Robert Ellwood, I have nothing to add to, or retract from my letter published in your columns on May 22nd, except to say I have nothing to do with what "Wee McGregor" does or does not. I have given an emphatic denial to all Mr. Ellwood's charges anent myself and that person. Because Mr. Ellwood has been lashed into fury by that individual is no justification whatever for his attack against me, and that his attack against me in your columns is a malicious one I shall quickly prove. Not only has he attacked my integrity in your columns, but also with the Dulwich and Peckham Society. Mr. Ellwood says in his letter published in your last issue, "he does not suggest there was anything wrong anent my brother and myself, or any collusion." He also invited me to publish his correspondence with the Secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham Society. One letter of that correspondence is quite sufficient to show whether Mr. Ellwood's attack against me is malicious or otherwise. Copy of letter sent by Mr. Ellwood to Mr. W. Hodson, secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham Society.

Springfield Meadows.
Weybridge.
2/12/08.

DEAR SIR,—I am much obliged for your letter of the 30th ult., and quite appreciate your position in the matter. You may rest assured that, under the circumstances stated, I exonerate your society from all blame. I must say it has turned out as I expected. It appears to me that Mr. Robson first awarded special No. 31 to No. 3 in class 24, and then, with a view of squeezing me out of special 32, he reversed the decision. It was somewhat significant that in reporting the show he stated both birds, i.e., No. 3 in Class 27 and No. 3 in Class 24, had won special No. 32. The most objectionable feature of the whole thing is that the owner of the birds is a brother of the judge, and of this, when the opportunity arises, I hope to have something to say. I am sure you quite understand why I feel so strongly about the matter, and that I have been done out of the special. Had the award remained, I could still question it, but I cannot now, except, of course, as to honesty of the judging. I cannot agree with you that a second prize bird in one class takes precedence over a third prize bird in another class.

Yours faithfully,
ROBERT ELLWOOD,

W. Hodson, Esq.

This letter, which was written weeks before ever "Wee McGregor" had entered the correspondence, speaks for itself. In it he makes deliberate charges against me and my integrity. Even his statement in the letter, "that in a report of the show in your contemporary, dated Nov. 13th, two birds won special 32," is a deliberate lie. The printed report is there to prove this. The Smith-Thomson correspondence was the opportune time, I presume, spoken of in his letter to renew his abusive attack in your columns. Whatever special price card was on the first prize evenly marked bird matters not to me. It is the stewards who put the cards on the cages, and if they put a card on the wrong cage I am in no way responsible, nor will I hold myself responsible. I again repeat that the first novice special was awarded to the second prize Cinnamon, and no other bird; whether the card was put on it or not, and I have the original numbers in my possession in my judging book to prove it. To show Mr. Ellwood that I do not possess the malicious spirit of himself, and have no wish to treat him harshly over his vile, uncalled-for attack against me, I will give him the opportunity—though I need not have done so—to withdraw unreservedly the whole of the false charges he makes in the above letter, and publicly apologise in your columns for the abusive remarks he has made anent myself in your next issue. Failing this, the entire matter will be at once placed in my solicitor's hands to be dealt with. This Mr. Ellwood is no mere intimidation, but I am fully determined to protect my integrity.—Judges are not "targets" to be shot at, as you think fit, with slanderous falsehoods.

JOHN ROBSON.

A Word to Secretaries.

SIR,—May I be permitted to call the attention of show secretaries (especially secretaries of agricultural societies) to the matter of labels for cage bird exhibits? In the majority of cases only labels for the cages are sent, those for the hamper being almost invariably conspicuous by their absence—while some of the former are as large as postcards. It is not always easy to lay hands on a double-sided label; and if one should happen to mislay the schedule, and not know where to send birds, it would be awkward indeed.

The Sad Case of Mr. Barwell.

A Chance to Help.

SIR,—In reply to the letter in your last issue from Mr. W. P. Bell, I most highly appreciate his good wishes, still, the time of year would be all against working a show on any lines likely to be a success, owing to the birds being breeding. But as the Northampton Hand in Hand Cage Bird Society is holding the annual Nest Feather Show at my house on Saturday, July 10th, I shall be pleased to give 5s. first prize, 3s. second, and 2s. third for any variety cage bird (gift class). All birds to be sent on to me, and I will unpack and find the show cages myself, the birds to be sold and all money devoted to the fund. So, if any fancier, feeling charitably disposed, will look me up a bird or two I shall be highly gratified helping so deserving a case. JNO. NASON, Treasurer.

Foresters' Arms, Northampton.

The Rook and the Crow.

SIR,—People who live in towns, who pay little attention to these matters, would no doubt consider the above-mentioned birds as one and the same, alike as they are in size and colour, and seen as they usually are spread over our fields, or uttering their well-known cawings on the top of some tree. They are, however, as distinct in their characters and habits as a hare and a rabbit. The real Crow (Corvus corone) is the next link in the chain after the Raven, which it resembles far more nearly than it does the Rook. The male and his mate, for example, seldom associate with the rest of their species, but generally remain in pairs. Their favourite food, too, like the Raven, is carrion, and they will watch their opportunity, and pounce down on young lambs or even sheep that are thrown upon their backs in a furrow and unable to rise. In these cases the eye is the point which they first attack. But smaller living prey they will also attempt to carry off to be devoured at leisure. The Rook, on the other hand, is a social bird, passing its days with those relations and friends amongst whom it was born and bred, and for its food preferring a vegetable diet, or such insects as it can collect under the sod of the meadow or pick up in its progress over a fallow or freshploughed field. T. KERSHAW.

SIR,—"Querist" may know a Rook from a Crow very easily. A Rook has the sides of its face and its forehead bare as regards feathers, but covered with a white scabrous skin. All Crows are Ravens in miniature, and are wanting in this distinguishing characteristic. R. RHYDDERCH.

Notes on Mule and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR,—July is generally the month in which Hybrid breeders usually depend upon the best results, particularly from the Bullfinch crosses. The hen Bullie I have tried a great many experiments with, but so far with but poor results. Eggs I have had in plenty. An old hen Bullie of mine (not so very old), I have had for three years. I caught her as a young bird, and she has been petted a lot because she was so tame from the first. She was caught in early autumn, and the next season I had her up with a cock Canary outside in a large cage. I made two nests for her, and she at once took to me and laid four eggs in the nest and one at the bottom of the cage. I fully expected she had paired with the Canary, as they were so friendly, but the eggs turned out to be clear. I always take notes of eggs and date, and I have found she has now laid for three years on or about the 6th July. The next year she was again with the Canary—in fact, she had been continually with him—and she again laid five eggs, which this time I took from her, and gave them to a Canary to hatch. Unfortunately the Canary managed to throw them out of nest, and they were broken; so I was not quite sure of their being fertile. This Bullie used to sit her full time, and was very careful over her nest and eggs, but I never did see the Canary feed her at any time. During the moult the Canary died, so I put her in a mate (a Greenfinch), also a Linnet, but she would not have them at any price, so I had to part them. She was the only British bird I had, but late in April I was lent a cock Redpoll, which was caught in the winter and I put him with her. They used to fight a bit, but as the cage was large I left them alone. In fact, I had taken the "hump" at last over her. For over 20 years in Hybrid breeding I had always had patience and perseverance, but the last strain, I left, had broken the camel's back. However, these birds I placed the last week in June near my bedside with two nest boxes in cage, one with a Greenfinch's nest, and the other I had made from an old Blackbird's nest. The next day the nests were all over the cage. Again I rebuilt the nests, and again they were pulled out. The process was repeated for over a week. They at last left them alone, probably tired out. Which one was the culprit I could not say, but I think it was the Redpoll. After this I made a practice of waking at daylight and I laid and watched them; and at times I have been greatly amused, as the Redpoll always seemed to be master. I saw her on the 30th June one year go to the nest with some pieces of matting in her mouth, and then come off and chase him round the cage. At about 4 a.m. she called to pair, and they paired well, but only once during that morning. I found after he had paired with her he sat on the perch, and tweeted like a Canary after it has paired. Hadn't I some hopes then at once of this cross! You may be sure I was fully wide awake again next morning, and at about the same time (4 a.m.) they paired again. I did not see them pair more than once each morning for the two first mornings, and about the same time I stayed in bed and kept them under observation until 7 a.m. for seven mornings. She continually paired the last three. On several occasions also in the afternoon. On July 6th the first egg was laid, which I took away at once, because I could not trust the Redpoll. On the 7th she again laid. The 8th she missed, and laid on the 9th and 10th. All these eggs were laid with the exception of the first one (which was on the bottom in some building materials) in the nest. I put the first two away so as to try and get them under some Canary; but I left her with the last three. She sat well for two days, and at night I was wakened at about 12 p.m. by a most peculiar noise, something like a kitten mewing; I expected there was one in the room, but on getting a light I found it was the Bullie. She was lying at the cage bottom with mouth open and was in a fit. I at once took her, and brought her round, but the eggs were all smashed, some in the nest and others at the cage bottom! Not one was whole. I put three Canary eggs under her, which were clear, and which I had had given me for nest eggs. I always like to keep some by me to put in the nests; I think by giving the birds a start in that way it encourages them to lay there. I generally find they don't break them. After the hen had sat two days she came off in the afternoon and called to pair, which they did again well, and they paired well after this. As this happened two days after the last egg was laid, I expected to see her again lay, but she did not. What will be my luck this year I don't know. I have been so near yet so far from several of these good and rare crosses. As I write these notes my old pet is sitting in her box on two dummies at my elbow. I touch her up now and then with my pen, but she takes no notice. She takes tit-bits from my fingers whilst sitting. I am, however, afraid her days are numbered. Another pair I had was a Linnet and a Bullie. The Linnet was caught late in the spring and was turned into a large cage with the hen Bullie. He soon got into full song and being out-of-doors was the means of tempting another pair of Linnets to breed quite close, but no young were reared. This pair would not take to any nests which I built, as they were destroyed before the day was out. The Bullie laid at last, probably from the low perch, but the first egg was saved. She missed the next day and laid on the third, and again missed. She laid three eggs all told. The only one I could save was put under my Bullie and Redpoll and so got broken. I never saw them pair. After she had laid she started to sit, and sat in an empty nest in a cokernut shell. It seems rather strange that both Bullies should start at about the same time to lay—the first week in July. Perhaps some of your many readers may now have some Bullies about to begin nesting. If so, I should like to hear the results both of their sitting and feeding. I hope to see results from some of your readers who have met with success in this hobby this season, as it is always interesting reading, besides being an encouragement for others to go in for it to try their luck. I hope we shall be able to hear of the Siskin-Bullie Hybrid, that it has been produced. Also if there are any more Canary-Bullies raised, and Redpoll-Bullies. I shall be delighted if I can hear of any Chaffinch Hybrids this year, also Hawfinch Hybrids.

Canary Breeding for Beginners - - Post Free. 7d.

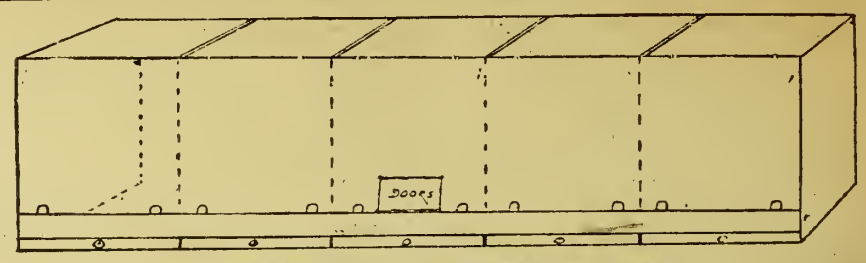
By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

"CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.



The Framework of Mr. Grigg's Flight Cage.

Making a Flight Cage.

SIR,—I will try to show how to construct a small aviary 6ft. long by 18 inches high by 15 inches wide, that can be divided into five separate cages when required. To commence, draw a plan to the scale of 1in. to a foot throughout. Next take this plan to a timber merchant, and ask for ¼in. deal (pine is better, but more expensive). You will then find the length of the pieces of wood is the same as that of the cage; two pieces make the height, and one and a-half the width. The price runs from 4d. to 6d. a piece. You will require the following pieces: Back, two; bottom and top, three; tray, ends and two partitions, three; two other partitions, one. You see by this that no wood is wasted. A ⅝in. board is also required. Having bought the wood, mark two pieces "back," and put them on one side. Take two further pieces, and cut both carefully in half lengthwise. You will then have four half-pieces, and for purposes of identification, I will call them Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Take No. 1, and this, with a whole piece, if cut into two lengths of 14¼ins., and three of 13¾ins., will form the "top," with ¼in. spaces for the partitions to fall into. (The larger pieces will be the ends of the top.) No. 2, with a whole piece, makes the bottom. No. 3, with a whole piece, cut into two 17½in. lengths for the ends of cage, and two of 18in. lengths for partitions. No. 4, also taken with a whole piece, when cut into 13¾in. lengths, gives the material for sand-trays, and allows for the partitions to be held in position between the same. With the remaining piece of ¼in. wood you can construct two more partitions, and finish off the trays by nailing an edging round to keep the sand from falling out. Do not, however, nail wood of this thickness on the fronts of the trays. Now, with a few small nails hold the pieces of wood in position in their respective places. To proceed, cut the ⅝in. board lengthwise into three separate pieces of 3in., 1in., and ⅝in. in width respectively. Place the 3in. piece inside the front of the cage, allowing for the 1in. piece (which has to be cut into 14in. lengths, to be attached to the outside front of the trays) to slip in and out easily underneath it. The ⅝in. square is for supporting the wirework at top. You will, no doubt, have noticed that your roof is not sufficiently strong; cut eight ⅝ pieces, of 14in. length, and fix same where the partitions are let down. The wirework is the next item. The cheapest is to have the ordinary small mesh; this, however, does not look either business-like or so suitable for the birds. The best way is to obtain from one of the numerous advertisers in CAGE BIRDS some punched steel bar wire-fronts (which can be bought for about 3s. 6d.). When ordering, draw a plan of the cage, showing where the doors and seed and water holes should be. Do not nail in the netting and frame-work, if used, but screw in the same, as, if you do this, when the cage requires painting, you can, by merely unscrewing the frame, take off the whole front. You will find it cheapest to distemper the inside, and a light green looks very well, with the outside stained pine or darker shade. If you have not a table for the cage to stand on, a light stand made of wood called battens is very cheaply constructed. If you can manage it, a light tray for catching the seed is handy.

C. L. GRIGG.

Type of Present-day Winning Norwich Plainheads.

SIR,—The first point in Mr. Grey's letter is to admit he was wrong in saying I was a disappointed exhibitor. Owing to removal, and an attack of illness lasting some years, I have not shown for seven years, hence could not be "disappointed." But I am coming, Mr. Grey, and hopes are entertained. Then Mr. Grey indulges in a free advertisement that would have looked exceedingly well in the "so-much per inch" column, but admits that the length of "Queenie" is only a guess with him. She was a beautiful hen, 5½ins. from the top of the head to the tail end, and Mr. Eckersley knew that when he bought her, as such an authority isn't likely to put long wings and tail into his stock, especially on the hen's side. Mr. Grey is so indefinite when he says "I should say was 6ins. to 6¼ins.," that I infer he does not know the measure of the unflighted yellow hen. I note he misses Mr. Cowling's yellow hen (another beauty 5¼ins. long); an authority at Wellingboro' knows that. May I quote Mr. A. J. Simpson as an authority on the Palace winners? Mr. Grey again makes no attempt to answer my question, re Mr. Dollinson's yellow, purposely omitting all the actual 5¼in. birds that lead the way on the bench. His fairy tale is typical of him, for he is so uncertain of measurements, in fact anything but "I did this," "I won that." Mr. Grey says I do not adduce anything to prove the 5¼in. as a model standard. Well, I have quoted first his own birds, then many others, and a reference to my letter and the various show reports so ably published by CAGE BIRDS, will disprove his assertion. Then my opinion as to a standard has been before the Fancy since Nov. 6th, 1908, and Mr. Grey is the only one to criticise it, and that after making statements such as "unfortunately in using this 'big' blood you also get extra length in wings and tail." See Mr. Grey's letter May 1st, which he opens by taking the head as a point. He quotes "A narrow-headed bird is very objectionable." What for, Mr. Grey? Because narrow heads go with long wings and long tails? This to support my 5¼in. "hens with the shortest of wings and tails," is another remark in Mr. Grey's letter. Here again he backs up my standard of 5¼ins. If Mr. Grey's best hens are 6ins. to 6¼ins., his large hens must be even longer than this, which, I venture to state, no fancier would like to breed from. "Chubby effect so much desired in the Norwich," is Mr. Grey's next remark to back the 5¼ins. Then he says "If short hens are used there is little fear of long wings and tail." Norwich from "big blood carry too much feather at the vent," is Mr. Grey's way of helping me to stick to 5½ins. He says "It takes away the taper from the chest, thus spoiling the fine sweep and clean cut so much desired." Then comes the remark, "I have very nearly always been satisfied with the judging." Kindly note the "very nearly always." It needs no comment. I have quoted the former part of Mr. Grey's letter as the best substantiation of 5¼ins., to Mr. Grey. He actually shows and wins (and justly proud of) with birds that are 5¼ins., and nicely proportioned, but advocates that it is also a "Wee Gem" standard! Shall I venture to advise Mr. Grey to measure some of his birds? He will be surprised to find how near 5¼ins. they are, and be of one opinion the next time he writes. I again give him credit for the fore part of his letter (May 1st), but humbly ask him to let his conscience lead him when having a quiet hour among his own stock, and when noting the various winners at the shows.

EDWARD FLOYD.

Goldfinch-Greenfinch Hybrid Breeding.

SIR,—Nearly every Canary breeder possesses a Goldfinch. Unfortunately, the Goldies often succumb, but a Siberian cock Goldfinch that lives against the drawbacks of civilised life is a useful inmate of the aviary, and can be utilised in various directions. It can be matched with the Greenfinch hen, which breeds freely in a cage. The Greenfinch takes to the nest placed in the ordinary nest board, and, as a rule, deposits the eggs in the nests. The Goldfinch cock frequently breaks the eggs whenever he gets the chance. It is, therefore, expedient to remove him to another cage the day before she lays, and to keep him away should the Greenfinch hen be permitted to hatch her own eggs. She is a capital feeder, and if she proves a rearer should be allowed to bring up the young. The young are strong, healthy birds, and grow rapidly in the second feather. They take on a beautiful tinge, and the feathers reveal the parentage. Males should be colour fed, to help the brilliancy and general tone of feather. The male which gives promise of being the outstanding bird should be transferred to a large bird cage to save waste of plumage, as if he is to be of any use for exhibition he needs to be in full bloom. Size, colour, and condition are all important factors in a high-class Goldfinch-Greenfinch-Hybrid. This cross is a very safe venture for a beginner to start with. Food: Egg and biscuit mixture, ordinary Canary and rape seed, with hemp seed, which is indispensable for the Goldfinch. Dandelion heads, so long as procurable, and thereafter chickweed should be supplied.

GOLDIE-GREENIE.

The Affairs of the United Kingdom Lizard Society.

SIR—After reading Mr. F. Greig's very amusing letter in the columns of your last issue of CAGE BIRDS, I must trouble you for sufficient space in your valuable paper to try and correct a few of Mr. Greig's rambling misstatements, as I really cannot allow his letter to pass without a few comments. In the first place, and in order to make it quite clear, I must state that Mr. Fuller had nothing whatever to do with the letter that I sent, and which Mr. Greig complains of. Neither do I propose to defend Mr. Fuller against any of the insinuations thrown out by Mr. Greig, as I have every confidence in that gentleman taking care of himself. In the second place, Mr. Greig says that he took my (Thompson's) letter for what he considered it was worth. Now, sir, I believe him, as that is where he makes some of his mistakes, by not bringing before the society matters that concern the society. I should here like to remind him as the so-termed hon. sec., that his duties to the society are to bring before them any business that concerns the society for their consideration, and not his (Mr. Greig's). I notice also in his remarkable letter that he does give me credit for sending out about one or two birds; but at the same time I cannot give him credit for telling you the whole truth on that point, as I exhibited one Lizard at Oldham, four at Rochdale Good Intent, three Lizards and one Norwich at Sunderland, six Lizards, four Norwich and one British at Glossop, all under the U.K.L.S., of which he professes to be hon. sec. Seeing that he does not know how many birds I really did send out under their conditions, I am sure it would interest me if he made an attempt to tell the fanciers what number of points I am entitled to. He also charges me with not paying my subs. until I saw I had nothing to beat; but I can assure you that I was the same as that grand old Lizard fancier he mentions as president, and Mr. W. Lawton, treasurer (by name only, as Mr. Greig never permitted him to "treasure"), in addition to most of the other prominent breeders and exhibitors he mentioned, and, I might add a few others. I had not sufficient confidence in his work and I promise him that if the secretaryship of the society is in the same hands, that he will not get any at all from me this year. Another of his rambling misstatements is that I (Mr. Thompson) and Mr. Fuller are responsible for creating all the ill-feeling that exists in the U.K.L.S. I fling it back at him by stating that he alone is absolutely responsible for all the unrest that exists in the U.K.L.S. to-day, and the sooner he resigns the secretaryship, and all the other offices that he morally holds in the society, the sooner will this unrest become a peaceful calm, and no doubt those prominent fanciers will band themselves together again in forming that strong society for Lizards that Mr. Greig and Mr. Fuller are agreed upon. As he also states that he is sick of the whole thing, I might here be able to help him out of the difficulty by suggesting that he forwards the books of the society on to the president, and also allows the respected treasurer, Mr. W. Lawton, to take his place in the society by handing over to him the slender means of the society. If he is as respected as Mr. Greig tries to make him out, why on earth doesn't Mr. Greig trust him? Surely a gentleman respected is worthy to be trusted. In regard to Mr. Jno. Dewsnap's name being brought into the argument (a gentleman, by-the-way, that is at the apex of his fame) he ought to be ashamed of himself, and the last person in the wide, wide world to ever even breathe that most distinguished exhibitor's name as he knows as well as any other member of the U.K.L.S., that he was entirely responsible for the resignation of that fancier. For the same reason, I should like to ask if Mr. Dickinson hadn't something to say in CAGE BIRDS some time later, about the same old cause? Then he goes on to tell you that it stands to reason that the fanciers he named will not sit down and be talked to by novices like me, as I am hardly able to distinguish a gold from a silver; yet, in the same breath, he condemns himself by stating when he took the secretaryship up he was only a novice, and no doubt most of the fanciers that have had anything to do with him could have told you that long ago. I, in return, will ask Mr. Greig regarding the complete muddle of the affairs, that I and others are convinced he is solely responsible for, whether it stands to reason that such prominent fanciers as he mentions will sit down and be led by the nose by another novice of a secretary? Now, sir, in regard to the keeping and showing of birds, I am going to be quite frank with him. In the first place there is a pleasure, in the second an expense. I don't mind telling you I keep a few birds, because they are beautiful to look at, and a thing of beauty is a thing of joy as long as you can retain it. But there is also the financial side of the question, which Mr. Greig, I think, hints at, and which I must admit I consider, by keeping as good a stock as my means will allow. If I get rather over stocked, and I decide to sell a few off, out of my way, I find it far more profitable than keeping a stock of birds that anybody can purchase anywhere at 3s. to 4s. per dozen. Then again, Mr. Greig goes on to state that what they want are fanciers in the U.K.L.S., and he gives you a few of the prominent fanciers that the society is thought to possess; but when there is only a solitary one in the whole list that has paid his subscriptions, and that one is Mr. Barker Clegg, I consider the rest have no more right to be screened than Mr. Fuller has to be exposed for not paying his subs. Some, no doubt, would be pleased to learn whether Mr. Greig has ever been an asset to the society by paying his subscriptions; if not he should not throw stones. In conclusion I can most candidly say that if either I or Thompson and Co., get as much of our own way as Mr. Greig has already had of his, I sincerely trust that the societies which we represent will be in a far more healthy state than the United Kingdom Lizard Society now is.

EDWARD THOMPSON.

A letter from Mr. Fuller has had to be held over.—EDITOR.

The Border Fancy Canary in the South.

SIR,—Seeing that Mr. Hadwin admits it was out of mere curiosity he asked me the question referred to in his last letter, I will leave him to satisfy that curiosity himself. We have been told that curiosity "killed the cat," but, as far as I am concerned, it will not kill me. Regarding size, here Mr. Hadwin again supports me by stating that he was under the impression that the English Club was formed to combat the increasing size of birds sent from my side of the border. Now, gentle readers, just think one moment and ask yourselves if it were not because Scottish breeders found a demand for large birds that they sent them some hundreds of miles? Or could it be their love of paying the railway companies the exorbitant charges made by conveying the birds hither and thither? Or only to give their birds a change of air and scenery? I, for one, stick to the former. If Mr. Hadwin or any other person in authority makes rules, or points, to uphold a bird to any specified size or type, depend upon it that there are breeders on both sides of the border who know the way to produce the size and type of bird required. I am afraid Mr. Hadwin's statements cannot be taken as true facts, viz., that, prior to the last two or three years Scottish birds were stronger in every way than the English. I have never found it so. As far as my mind can carry me back, the size of the bird left no room for complaint, being easily kept in check. I quite agree with him that many good birds have been bred on the other side of the border, and many of their breeders are my close personal friends. The best places to see both the bird and its breeders are the International contests; there one can see at a glance how things stand. I have had the honour to report two of them for CAGE BIRDS, and therefore came in contact with both the breeders and the birds, and although Scotland came out each time on the top, I passed the remark that I felt sure England, once they had a right grip of the bird, would be able to turn the tables on the opposition very shortly. As I saw the "Wee Gem" had fairly captivated the eyes of the fanciers in the South, I see Mr. Hadwin has misconstrued my letter somewhat (I trust not to suit any insincere purpose) re show committees. If he looks over it again, he will find: "Each judge has a certain number of breeders and followers who think his standard the right one, therefore, so long as they are so, and are on the committees of societies, they will vote for the judge they favour." Now, those breeders and followers, by supporting the judge at shows (not at their own show, perhaps, but following him up wherever he may be appointed and sending him entries), are they not voting for him by giving him their support? Those committeemen are the bees who bring honey to the Fancy. Each one of them as a breeder likewise is entitled to have his own opinion, and support the type of bird he desires. Mr. Hadwin remarks, "If judges place the cards to suit the committee," must have originated in his own mind; never in mine, and, what is more, will never be entertained by me. Now, Sir, you asked me to give you an article on the "Wee Gems" as a help to your novice readers. I have done so, and, as you know, this controversy originated through Mr. Smith, who plainly said he was one, hence the stand I have taken throughout to defend them. I trust the novices will always find me ready to act in this way; should any of them need assistance they have only to ask and it shall be given. On the other hand I decline to answer questions by anyone who is none too scrupulous about asking with a double meaning. My idea of our Fancy is to help the novice, by kindly words and sympathetic attention, over any thorny paths.

J. PATTERSON.

A Visit to the North of England Linnet Derby.

SIR,—Being a lover of the best of all British singing birds, namely the Linnet, I decided to pay a visit to the All-England contest that takes place annually on Whit-Monday at the King's Head, Shannon Street, Leeds. I was introduced to the host, Mr. Tillotson, who kindly conducted me to a large well-lighted room where the contest was to take place. Here were men from all parts of the North of England, gathered with one special object, namely, to hear a good Linnet. The judges, Mr. Allen, Mr. Melia, and Mr. Cooper, whose knowledge and impartiality could not be doubted, having taken their places precisely at 11 a.m., Numbers 1 and 2 were called for, and amid dead silence the contest began, each pair of birds being staged for ten minutes. Some splendid singing resulted, and was highly appreciated. So all went well until Mr. Allen pronounced half an hour's interval for refreshments, which were served through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Tillotson, the quality and quantity being such that anyone having a good appetite was sure to lose it. After all had got settled down again, numbers 13 and 14 were called for, and the contest went merrily on, everyone present being delighted with the singing. At the close of the contest Mr. H. Allen distributed the prizes, and in a few well-chosen words complimented the competitors on the great care which they must have bestowed on their birds to bring them to such perfection. He said he could not allow the opportunity to pass without naming the winner of the first prize, the property of Mr. Sissins, his chattering, reeling, scaping, peeing, and whinnying being superb. Others also deserved praise. A full prize-list will be found elsewhere. The room having been cleared, songs were rendered by Mr. Allen, Mr. Crane, Mr. Melia, Mr. Hepton, and last, but not least, Mr. Stead, better known as "Honey" who sang "My wife, Brown," two notes higher than David could get on the piano. Taking leave of the genial secretary, Mr. Wilson Naylor and the committee, who deserve great credit for the splendid manner in which the day's proceedings had been carried through, I bade them adieu, promising to pay them another visit in the near future.

A LOVER OF THE LINNET.

Cinnamon Border Fancies and Their Colour.

SIR,—I was rather amused at the tone of Mr. Dixon's letter in last week's issue. Yes, Mr. Dixon, you were quite right re what I meant by "harping." If you will read again my letter which appeared on April 17th, you will see I did not dispute you had the Cinnamon cock you showed at Hawick, or that you knew of another Cinnamon cock that won at Selkirk in 1892. Mr. Dixon has come to a point where he shows he is beaten instead of answering my questions like a man, he endeavours to find out my identity, but I must remind him it is the question of the colour of the Cinnamon Borders we are on. The Editor has my name and address, and is satisfied, so I think it should satisfy him. Mr. Dixon claims the point of the dispute on which he tackled me, saying it was on the point of the Cinnamon cocks; but I must remind him he also stated the Cinnamon Borders in those days "Your Reporter" spoke of, were of better colour than those exhibited now. He has failed entirely to prove this. Mr. Dixon says he was at the Scottish National, and had a good look at the Cinnamon Borders shown there, yet he seems to have nothing to say about their colour. I pointed out that the fifth yellow cock was one of the disputed birds. I also pointed out that another Cinnamon Border at the Scottish National, which I saw, and am of the opinion it is pale in colour, was at the Crystal Palace reported on as "nice colour." I may tell Mr. Dixon and his friend they have failed entirely to prove their statement that the Cinnamon Borders are not as good colour to-day as they were in those early days they speak of. Can they bring proof of their assertions? I expect the readers of "C. B." will take note that the birds Mr. Dixon and his friend are praising belonged mostly to themselves. I am afraid it is a case of "every one thinks their ain craw the whitest." For myself, I am speaking not only for my own birds, but for the Cinnamon Border fancy breeders in general. I never would have started this correspondence had "Your Reporter" not stated that at the Crystal Palace show, taking the class right through, there was a lack of depth in the colour. In his report he gave a certain bird credit for being of nice colour, when, in my opinion, it is decidedly pale in colour. Mr. Dixon says he has decided to go no further with the discussion, as he does not see what benefit it would be either to him or the Fancy in general. Two things I must say I have benefited by: the one is that I have learned there were Cinnamon Border cocks much earlier than I had anticipated, though the cocks seem to have died out for a number of years. The other is that I am all the more convinced that the majority of fanciers think "their ain craw the whitest." I could cite dozens of cases where fanciers have visited a show, and were loud in their assertions that if their birds had been there the winner would have stood back. Yet when these same birds did meet it was the other way about. Knowing these facts, I am all the more convinced that Mr. Dixon and his friend have let their imagination get the better of them. I don't wish to deny them their own personal opinions on the matter; but when they put those opinions into the form of assertions, then I most certainly challenge them to prove their words. I again refuse to disclose my name for reasons stated in my first letter. I again refer Mr. Dixon to my last letter, re the disputed birds; if he has nothing to say on the matter, then that finishes this correspondence, as far as I am concerned.

The Story of an Amusing Parrot.

SIR,—I wish to say that my "Polly," a Grey, will be thirty-one years old next birthday. I have had the pleasure of attending and feeding her for twenty-two of those years, which I need hardly say has given, not only to myself but to others, an endless amount of amusement and occupation, to say nothing of profit, "Polly" having won first and special prizes twice over at our local show. But, alas! like everything in this world, there must have been a grievous mistake somewhere. The bird was pronounced a King Parrot, and for years we thought so, too. But one day a lady friend asked us to mind another Parrot for a few days while she was away. The two Parrots being put on the lawn in the garden could see each other. Well, my "Polly" being enamoured of the other bird, became seriously ill; her screams were terrific day and night, and we felt sure we should lose her. We rushed up to town and enquired of all the bird fanciers to know what could be done. But we needn't have troubled, for "Polly" just laid an egg at the bottom of her cage. This egg I have carefully preserved. I may say I am a dentist by profession, and I recollect on one particular occasion I had a patient, an elderly gentleman, to attend to. When he came into my surgery he said "You must make haste and attend to me because there is another patient waiting for you in the other room." At last I heard someone talking in the other room. I "hurried up" and went to the waiting-room, and lo, no one was there but my blessed parrot, which was on a table behind a curtain. It was evidently the bird which had been talking to him. My "Polly" is a very great talker. It will say almost anything, calling such names as "Herbert," "Ada," "Laura," "Ethel," "Walter," and "Charlotte.' It will also say "So cold out," or "Polly wants his water or corn." Sure enough it is quite correct when we look. He will also say, "Put on your coat, walk to Acton and catch a tram," or will count "one, two, three, four, five for Polly. Who will buy?" It will also imitate a cat or whistle for the dog, calling "Wolf"; in fact there never was such a "Polly." It also whistles a tune, quite sweetly, and sings in a low voice. It likes any amount of company. We feed it on simple diet, such as boiled maize, sunflower seed, and fruit of all kinds, but it does not like bananas; in fact, it seems to have a great objection to them. It is so sensible that if you give it anything hard it goes and dips it in its water to soften it, such as toast. We always take great care in covering it up at night, when it will say, "Good night, kiss me." When we uncover it in the morning it will say, "There you are, then, good morning."

Breeding & Feeding for Colour.

By JOHN W. BANCROFT.

Not Dishonest or Fraudulent.

We now come to the third charge: "That colour-feeding is dishonest and fraudulent." Where in the name of goodness does fraud or dishonesty come in? Colour-feeding is perfectly legitimate. It is done quite openly, and is allowed and encouraged in regard to certain varieties. In the old days of colour-feeding nothing but hot K.N. was used in the egg-food. It was a case of have it or leave it then, the seed being withheld to a great extent.

In this sense I grant that it may have appeared cruel and harmful up to a certain point. It was dishonest and unfair in so far that the practice was kept a close secret by the few who would not impart the information of their modus operandi to their brother fanciers either for love or money. This naturally gave their birds a decided advantage when competing with those birds which had been moulted without the aid of the pepper. But now all this is changed. Birds fed upon the present day pepper usually eat it with avidity if prepared in a proper manner. Nor is thero any secret about it either, for the veriest novice may, if he practise on the right material (viz., birds which possess good rich natural colour to start with) and follow the mothod I am about to describe, moult and colour-feed his birds equal to any of the "crack" exhibitors.

When to Commence Colour-Feeding.

Some people advise the colour-feeding of birds from the nest. I have never done much in this direction myself. What little I have done, and that which I have observed in the rooms of other fanciers who have tried it, has resulted in failure, the birds coming out patchy in colour and anything but of an even shade. I fail to see where any advantage would accrue, even were it possible to moult the nestlings of an even colour. The flights being of an orange tint, in place of the natural greenish lemon shade, would debar any fancier from exhibiting such in classes restricted to unflighted birds. And in the case of Norwich, it would take an exceedingly good unflighted to beat a good all-round bird in adult classes, as a Norwich improves in substance as ho gets older.

Another thing; when rearing young Canaries, the chief aim is to get the greatest amount of nourishment possible into them in the shape of egg-food; but by adding the pepper to this food we should be taking away somewhat of its nutritive value. It is generally understood that the first-round birds (i.e., those of the first nests) commence moulting at the age of from ten to twelve weeks; the second-round at about the age of eight weeks, and the third round at the age of six weeks. Individuals vary even out of the same nest. I have had first-round birds commence shedding their feathers when they were about seven or eight weeks of age, whilst others out of the same nest and off the same parents have not started until they have been about fourteen weeks old. Bearing this fact in mind, it behoves one to commence with the colour-feed early enough in order to avoid disappointment. Personally, I make a practice of giving the colour-feed to my young birds when they reach the age of seven weeks or thereabouts in a very mild form, of course, to begin with. By starting thus, the colour is getting thoroughly impregnated in the bird's blood, and even if they do not begin to moult very early, they are prepared for any emergency, such as "plucking" by their companions.

Feather Plucking and Its Cure.

This vicious habit of feather-plucking is indulged in very freely by some individuals, and, if allowed to go on unchecked, has a very debilitating effect on the victim's system. The moment the habit is suspected, the fancier should endeavour to find out the culprit and at once isolate it from the rest.

The feather plucker can usually be "spotted," by its having a more perfect and tidy appearance in the plumage than its comrades, even if it is not detected in the act. This habit, I imagine, is acquired from a naturally inquisitive desire the youngsters have of pecking at anything within their reach. This may be avoided to a certain extent by the distribution of pieces of cuttlefish about the cages or flights, also by tying small bundles of twine cut up into short lengths inside the wires of the cage front, in close proximity to the perches, just so that the birds can reach them nicely.

The adult birds usually break into moult at about the end of June or the beginning of July, according to the kind of summer or the way in which they have been worked in the breeding room; and exhibition birds, intended for the early shows, ought not to be bred from after the end of June, but should be thrown into the flights and placed on colour-feed at once, caging them singly when they have got about half-way through the moult.

How to Mix the Colour-feed.

In preparing the colour-feed I use for Yorkshires or Norwich one lb. hot Natal to each four lbs. of tasteless, and one and a half lbs. castor sugar. Mix these thoroughly some weeks previous to commencing colour-feeding. If it does not appear moist enough, I add a small quantity of pure olive oil, but most of the colour-feeds now on the market contain sufficient oil, in spite of what the vendors state in regard to the feed being absolutely pure. I commence colour-feeding by adding one teaspoonful of the prepared peppers to each gill of egg-food, which is composed of one hard-boiled egg pressed through a sieve or egg-mill, mixed with bread crumbs rubbed fine.

The whole should be thoroughly incorporated, before being given to the birds. The quantity of this feed should be one good teaspoonful per bird daily. The birds eat it more readily if it is given at different times, than if it is given in the full quantity all at once. The quantity of the pepper is gradually increased until I have got the birds on to the full strength in, say, about twelve or fourteen days, which is about five teaspoonfuls. This proportion is quite sufficient for all practical purposes. Giving it in stronger quantities is simply to waste the pepper, as a bird's blood can only absorb a certain amount of the colouring agent. Overdo this and the excess of colouring matter will simply be carried away through the bird's excreta.

A good feed for Cinnamons I find is 6ozs. hot Natal to each 1lb. of tasteless and ½lb. sugar, commencing with one teaspoonful to each gill of egg-food. For Lizards and Mules one pound hot Natal, one pound tasteless, and three-quarter-pound sugar, commencing as before with one teaspoonful to each gill of egg-food, and increasing it gradually until it is full strength, viz., five teaspoonfuls.

For the benefit of those fanciers who prefer to use egg-bread in place of the freshly-boiled egg and bread crumbs, when mixing the colour-feed, I will here give a very good recipe, which I occasionally make use of at such time as I have been glad of a makeshift. This is as follows:—Take of flour one lb., castor sugar one lb., lard 2ozs., two good teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a nice pinch of salt, and six fresh eggs. First mix the flour, sugar, baking powder and salt, then rub the lard well in. Now add the eggs, previously beaten well up, and thoroughly mix. Grease well the inside of a two-pound loaf tin and pour in the mass. Bake in a moderate oven. Keep for three or four days. Then grate it fine and mix it with the colour-feed as desired.

I may here remark, however, that I do not consider this to be so good a plan as that in which the freshly-boiled egg and stale bread crumbs are used. It saves trouble certainly, and is very handy when a person is pressed for time. There is nothing now about it, as over twenty years ago I knew fanciers who used it.

Now these feeds are of themselves most nourishing, and a bird fed upon them would thrive most probably even if the seed were withheld, which, as I have before remarked, is rarely necessary.

My Experiences with the . . Beautiful Waxwing.

By WILLIAM HARDIE.

I will here endeavour to give my readers of CAGE BIRDS an account of experiences with the Waxwing (Bombycilla garrula), the European Waxwing. This elegant species I have also heard go by the name of "the Bohemian Chatterer," and "Silk Tail."

Plumage and General Appearance.

To begin with I will describe the plumage and general appearance of the two specimens that I kept. First (male):—Bill strong and black (except at the base, where the colour inclines to a yellowish white); irides purplish-red, chin and throat velvety black, as is also the streak (in the midst of which is the eye), passing from the bill to the hinder part of the head; forehead reddish-brown; head-feathers (long and silky, forming a reclining crest) approaching to reddish-chestnut (the bird can erect or depress the crest at pleasure); upper parts, purplish-red, or brownish, dashed with ash-colour, the rump lightest; breast and abdomen pale purplish-ash tinged, with pale brownish red; vent and under tail coverts orange-brown, inclining to reddish-orange; greater wing-coverts, black, tipped with white; lesser wing-coverts a shade darker than the general tint of the upper plumage; primaries black, with a bright yellow spot near the white tip of their outer web; secondaries grey, tipped with white on the outer web, some of them terminating with small flattish oval appendages of the colour of red sealing wax; tail black, tipped with yellow; legs, toes, and claws, black. Published herewith is a sketch of the male bird which I hope will be of use to explain my rather crude method of describing the plumage.

Female:—Generally, similar to the male, but the yellow on the wings and tail is hardly so bright, nor are the wax-like appendages so large or so numerous. As far as I can learn, the Waxwing is only an occasional visitant to the British Isles. I have never had the good fortune to see it in its wild state. It is migratory, but may be shown in a variety class at a show where there are no British migratory classes. A splendid bird it is for this class, being sure to catch the judge's eye if a good specimen. The length is about 8ins., the size approaching that of the Starling.

My Method of Feeding.

I found these birds very hardy. My mode of feeding was as follows:—A mixture of soaked puppy biscuits, dried flies, and ant's eggs (an unlimited supply of the latter), and a good supply of gentles and a few mealworms. I always kept the gentles separate, and gave the mealworms from my hand. For green-food I gave them the buds and sprouts of the beech, maple, and various fruit trees, of which they were very fond. They were also extremely fond of juicy berries and fruit (juniper and laurel berries), and of fruit: applos, currants, and figs; but of all fruits they were passionately fond of grapes, actually greedy for them, in fact. They were very amiable when confined, and were easily tamed.

I gave them nearly the whole scope of my bird-room. Their flight is very rapid. When taking wing they often uttered a note resembling the syllables, zi, zi, ri. They very seldom alighted on any of the perches, but on small branches and twigs that I had fastened here and there in the room. When they alighted on the floor, which they sometimes did, their gait was very awkward.

An Unfortunate Accident.

The male bird was very affectionate to his mate, caressing and feeding her. I had these birds for upwards of two years, when an unfortunate accident occurred. I had taken a friend in to see some young Canaries that I had bred, when he accidently trod on the hen Waxwing and killed her.

The cock bird, after she was killed, behaved in a very curious fashion. When I used to enter the room afterwards, he would utter his peculiar cry and fly furiously round and round, at tho same time keeping well out of my reach. His actions at this time surprised me very much, because before the accident he was so tame that I had hardly got into the room before he would alight on either my head or my shoulder.

He did not long survive his mate. About three weeks after the hen bird was killed, I went into the room one morning and found him lying dead on the floor. I was very sorry indeed, and also greatly surprised, because he never showed any signs of anything being the matter with him.

Strange as it may seem, and although both birds were in the pink of condition, I never showed them. The reason for this was that I was very much engrossed in the breeding of Canaries, although of late years I have gone back to the British birds. At the present time I am busy preparing for a season of hybridising of which I hope to give you an account later on.

But to come back to my subject; the song of the Waxwing consists only of weak and uncertain whistling, a little resembling that of the Thrush, but not nearly so loud. While singing, it moves the crest, but hardly moves the throat. Its warbling is certainly not very musical, but it has the merit of continuing throughout all the seasons of the year. Their beauty is so great that I would have no objection to keeping another pair if I could get them. Their silkiness of feather is marvellous, and their colouring and uncommon appearance add to their charm. I do not know a more attractive pet, being naturally so very docile and harmless.

Seeds & their Properties.

By F. BOWMAN.

A paper read recently before the Glasgow and West of Scotland N.M.B. and F.B.C.

Teazle, Maw and Millet Seeds.

Teazle seed is another highly stimulating food, and is very fattening, but unlike nigor it also contains a large percentage of albumen or nitrogen. To the Canary fancier it is principally usoful as a change from other rich seeds that are offered. Good teazle seed should always be very sweet to the taste and light in colour.

Next comes maw seed, which, to my mind, is one that cannot be too highly spoken of. The oil it contains acts both as a food and as a medicine, and is a sure preventative and cure in all cases of diarrhœa. It is a splendid seed to give young birds when getting them on to hard seed, as this is the time when they are most liable to attacks of diarrhœa, through their stomachs being too weak to withstand the change from soft food to the seed which is given them. In my eight years' experience I have never yet lost a young bird after its leaving the nest. This I put down to my free use of maw seed at this critical period of a bird's existence.

There is one other cultivated seed that cannot be overlooked, and this is the millet. But if we leave out the more delicate foreign Finches and Waxbills, I am afraid there is not much to say in its favour. It contains very few nourishing properties, as it is composed of about 90 per cent. of starch and 10 per cent. of nitrogen. It is useful at times to a bird that is in too high a condition as it exercises the stomach of the bird, without bringing the feeding properties that other seeds would do.

Some Better-known Wild Seeds.

This brings me to a few of our better known wild seeds, the most valuable of which I think you will all agree is dandelion, which in the early months, when green food cannot be got, is a splendid substitute for bringing birds into breeding condition. Next comes thistle seed, as this is the Goldie's favourite, and is an essential for bringing him into breeding condition. Then come shepherd's purse, plaintain (or rats' tails), groundsel, and the near relative of the groundsel (only it grows much larger), the ragwort; last, but by no means least, is gold of pleasure.

All these seeds have practically the same properties; they are provided by Nature at a time when birds require a tonic, to prepare them for the moulting season. Dandelion is the only wild seed that blooms twice in one season, the first bloom coming in the early spring is Nature's gift to the birds requiring a tonic to prepare them for the breeding season. The second bloom comes at a time, the end of the summer, when they also need a tonic, to help them to regain their lost vigour after the breeding is done, thus, as I said before, preparing them for a successful moult. This is clearly proved by the composition of these seeds, as most wild ones contain a very large proportion of mineral salts, which act on the blood in the form of a tonic and also make them of a very forcing nature—the very thing the birds require at these periods.

You will see I have only touched very lightly on wild seeds, as I prefer to leave this to some future occasion when the plants themselves can be used as a demonstration. There is one other seed I should like to refer to before closing, this is the lettuce, as it is a very useful seed in place of the chemicals in use. It is a splendid seed for reducing fat. It also acts as a medicine in cases where birds are troubled with huskiness or loss of voice. The oil it contains acts as a purgative, and is very cooling to the blood.

Judging from the above facts, I should advocate as a staple food—three parts Canary seed to one part rape seed, with a tit-bit of the following mixture given once or twice a week according to the temperature: One lb. hemp, 1lb. maw, ½lb. niger, ½lb. teazle, ½lb. linseed. This I consider is sufficient for the average Canary fancier. The British bird fancier in addition to this would require a mixture of wild seeds which can be bought very cheaply at most seed stores. When purchasing seeds of any kind care should always be taken to get the best, which is not necessarily the dearest.

All good seed should be bright, smooth and glossy. Dull and shrivelled seed should never be accepted, as in most cases it has lost its finest property, the property of life or fertilisation. This brings me to a full stop; so allow me to thank you for your kind attention. Should anyone wish to ask a question arising out of this paper, I will do my best to give a satisfactory answer.

The Chairman now invited questions from the members present, and fully half-an-hour was spent in going over some of the points. After a most enjoyable evening a very hearty after a most enjoyable evening a very hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Bowman and then to the chairman for his courtesy and help in the chair, brought the meeting to a close.—R. A. Brown, Sec.

PRESENTATION TO A WELSH CAGE BIRD JUDGE.

One of the most active of Swansea cage-bird and dog fanciers in the person of Mr. J. B. Evans, is leaving the town for London. There was a large gathering at the Mackworth Hotel, Swansea, on May 26th, the occasion being that of a "smoker," at which Mr. Evans was made the recipient of tokens of the esteem in which he is held. The chair was taken by Mr. W. A. Ford.

Mr. J. B. Evans, the recipient of the Presentation from the Welsh Fanciers.

The chairman remarked that what Mr. Evans did not know about Scottish terriers was not worth knowing. As a judge of both Fancies he had built up a big reputation throughout Wales, and his departure from their midst would create a gap which it would be impossible to fill.

Mr. D. A. S. Longden (of the Welsh National C.B.S.) handed the guest of the evening an illuminated address, the number of signatures being a proof of the whole-hearted manner in which the testimonial movement had been taken up by fanciers. Mr. Longdon spoke of Mr. Evans' first coming to Swansea, which was eleven years ago, and of the way he had worked to form a cage-bird society, and also to hold an open show in the town. This led to the forming of the Swansea and District Cage Bird Society, which was started with a membership of twelve, but had since reached a total of over 70.

Mr. Phil. Jenkins (of the Swansea and District C.B.S.) presented Mr. Evans with a purse of gold, which had been subscribed for by the fanciers of the town and district, after which he said that one thing that had been impressed on his memory was a remark made by Mr. Evans to him, that "to be a successful fancier you must be a good loser on the show bench." The speaker thought that if every fancier had this spirit impressed on his memory it would greatly advance the friendship of members in their different societies, and also on the show bench.

Mr. Evans was accorded a most enthusiastic greeting. The cage-bird and dog fanciers of Swansea, he said, have held their own all over the United Kingdom, winning at all the chief shows that were held. Speaking of the prominence into which Swansea had been brought by the success of its fanciers, Mr. Evans remarked that football and cage-birds had done more to advertise the town than anything else. What Swansea had accomplished was known from Land's End to John o' Groats.

Mr. Prosser moved a vote of thanks to the Fancy Press, remarking that they had reason to be thankful for the way they gave publicity to the doings of the different societies of the town. It was a great help which the Press gave during the show season in reporting the shows and various other items of news.—This was endorsed by the chairman, and responded to by Mr. W. Phillips.

An excellent miscellaneous programme of vocal and instrumental music was then gone through, and a most enjoyable evening was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

ORNITHOLOGICAL ODDMENTS.

By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S.
Author of "The World's Birds."

Soft-Bill Hybrids.

Finch-hybrid breeders have got their mated couples up for breeding long ago, but when is someone going to put a little variety into the British hybrid classes by showing a few softbill hybrids? That such can be produced we know; that, between the pied and grey Wagtails has been bred twice, and there ought to be some a good deal easier to get than this. Whitethroat-Blackcap, Robin-Nightingale, and Blackbird-Thrush, are some that suggest themselves, and the breeder of any one of these would certainly cover himself with glory. The only thing is to make sure that the cock is the stronger bird, for softbills are more murderous than Finches when their blood is up, and everyone knows how Madam Bully justifies her name when mated to a pitiable Finchlet whom she finds she can thrash.

Breeding Soft-Bills.

I find there is an idea about that one cannot breed softbills in captivity without a practically unlimited supply of live food for the parents to feed the young with; but I think this is a mistake. I only know this, that I have known the following softbills to have been bred in the London Zoo during my time:—Indian Mynah, Hybrid between Andeman Starling and Grey-headed Starling or Mynah, Tickell's Ouzel (a sort of small grey Blackbird from India, (Merula unicolour) and American Robin (a large Thrush, (Turdus migratorius), and Blue Robin, and I am quite sure these never got enough insects to rear the young upon, and so had to do it to a great extent on artificial food. Besides, the Blue Robin, which is the readiest of softbills to breed, has often been reared in this way.

What are we Getting to?

This brings me to a point in aviculture about which I have been often reflecting of late. Are aviculturists aware that the export of foreign birds from their own countries is being gradually stopped? Some time ago New Zealand decided not to allow any to be sent out but the sheep-killing Kea Parrot and the mischievous Weka Rail, two peculiarly villainous and ugly birds, which no-one would want to keep except as curiosities. Then, more recently, the United States barred all export of their birds, and only the other day German exports were prohibited over the only part of the year for getting the migratory Continental species. If this goes on, the only foreign birds we shall have to fall back on will be Canaries, Budgerigars and Collared Doves, for I do not know of any other foreign cage-birds bred sufficiently numerous here to be always obtainable.

Judging Gold Pheasants.

The keepers of the larger ornamental birds have shown themselves more enterprising in this respect than the cage-bird men, for, as everyone knows, you can always get tame-bred Peafowl, Gold and Silver Pheasants, Swans, and Canadian Geese, just as you can fowls and Ducks, and several other of the waterfowl and Pheasant groups are more or less established; for instance, all the Carolina Ducks and Californian Quails, which come into the trade are captive-bred, though these birds are in but few hands. Apropos of Golden Pheasants, I may here give a tip that may be useful. The males of these birds vary much in colour, some being far richer in hue than others. Now, I have found that if a bird's ruff is of the right colour, which is an intense amber, more red than yellow, all the rest of his plumage will be right, whereas a bird with a pale ruff of a yellow tint is apt to fail in the depth of the yellow crest. It would therefore be as well to ask for a sample feather from the ruff when one is buying Gold Pheasants without seeing them. This is of some importance, as no colour in Nature equals in richness the yellow in a good Gold Pheasant's crest — it almost seems to send out light when seen in a shaded place, and is the chief beauty of this lovely bird.

Gold Pheasants are particularly suited for those who have back-garden accommodation, as they will do well in an aviary the size of the ordinary fowl-run, and pick up any seed or softfood which may be spilled by small birds kept with them thus avoiding waste and their lovely colours look well along with anything.

Concerning Nests.

The sweetness of the countryside is just now considerably enhanced by the scent of the hawthorn. Every hedgerow is laden with its pure white blossoms, hanging in such thick clusters that to Finches which love to build there find this year more than their usual security. In the hot, bright sunlight of the past few weeks, vegetation has increased rapidly; daily the undergrowth has become thicker, so that the choice nest of the tuneful Linnet, and the mossy cup-shaped home of the Hedge-Warbler are now well hidden by the young leaves of the briars, while the nettles along the dusty roadside and field paths have so far advanced in growth that the common Whitethroat has followed the example of her ancestor and commenced what is probably the flimsiest nest of all the perchers. So delicately is this put together that any idea of warmth derived from the thickness of the material used seems quite out of the question. But nesting as she does during the heat of summer, such warmth is hardly necessary. The second nest of both the Blackbird and Song Thrush may frequently be found with the usual mud lining omitted, but one hardly knows whether to give the birds credit for neglecting to use it on account of the increased atmospheric heat, or to attribute it to the difficulty they must have in some cases in collecting the necessary materials for it. It is curious how both at times choose what are apparently very unsuitable situations for their nests. A wooden fence offers some attractions for them, even when it is bordering a wood, where natural sites in trees and bushes are to be had in abundance. The nest is conspicuous to all passers-by, so that it is certain to be detected, and it is so near the ground that the risk of the young ones from vermin is increased considerably. Such a nest built at the corner of a belt of woodland, successfully passed the incubation stages, but when the young were about five or six days old, a wandering stoat found them out, and only one beheaded body of the brood was left as evidence of the tragedy. In the fields and woodlands these incidents are of daily occurrence, but so abundant is nature in her supply of every living creature, that at the end of the summer bird-life will be far in excess of what is required to continue the race.

Problem of Egg Coloration.

Egg coloration is one of the greatest problems of ornithology. In our rambles we constantly note deviations from ordinary clutches that upset any attempt at a standard. There seems to be no rule governing the coloration of eggs.

Finding a New Mate.

The majority of wild birds will quickly provide themselves with another mate should they by accident lose their partner. This has been known to occur in districts where none but the particular pair existed. The surviving bird has been absent for two or three days, possibly journeying many miles, and has returned with a fresh partner.

Not a Desirable Catch.

Stanley, in his "History of Birds," records that a London bird-catcher caught a Shrike in his clap net, in the act of pouncing on a valuable decoy Linnet. At first he thought himself fortunate in capturing so rare a prize; but in a very short time he was glad to get rid of it at any price, for although it fed well on small birds and raw meat, and seemed tolerably accustomed to confinement, the moment it opened its mouth and uttered its well-known note, his whole collection of singing birds were put to silence.

Hedge and Tree Magpies.

A little time ago there was a discussion concerning the Magpie, some contending that there were Tree Magpies and Hedge Magpies. But although a good deal was written upon the matter, and many observations recorded, nothing definite was decided. The fact of a pair of Magpies building in a hedge did not prove conclusively they were what one might term Hedge Magpies, because the same pair of birds might the following year choose a tree of some height for their home, and one is inclined to think that the difference in the sizes of the nests is, after all, simply regulated by the position.

SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED.
£50 Given in Prizes this Year.

All societies using over 20 lbs. to have a beautiful special. Read this startling proof—"The only proof." I don't need to lecture to you. Use Royal Red and it will prove you need no lectures or papers on colour feeding. (Have on view 10 tons.)

Supplied last season: Mr. Godley 56lbs. Royal Red, Mr. Hodder 45 lbs. Royal Red. At last 1909 Crystal Palace Show, in the eight champion Norwich classes, the whole eight first prize winners were moulted on Royal Red. The eight exhibitors who won them all used about 50lbs. each Royal Red. Is there any more proof than this as to who claims the premier colour-feed? Mr. J. W. Rennie, big southern winner of 1st clear yellow, 1st yellow hens, Crystal Palace, writes: "May 3rd, 1909. All my winning Norwich were fed solely on your colour-feed, and I intend to use no other on them this year." Also supplied last season: Mr. E. Baker 200lbs. Royal Red, Sam Cook, Norwich Plainhead cup winner, 60lbs., Mr. Grey, big N.N.P.C. silver bowl winner, 30lbs., Judge Vardy 212lbs., Mr. Midgley, winner two first open Norwich at last Palace, 20lbs., Mr. Dobinson, another fist winner at last Palace, 20lbs., T. Irons 70lbs., W. Booth, birds hottest in England, 30lbs., A. Hirst 30lbs., J. Wilcock 70lbs., R. Halliday 20lbs., Cleminson and Taylor 100lbs., W. Morris 60lbs., W. Whetstone 30lbs., W. R. Miles 50lbs., J. Howard 200lbs., W. Spillman 20lbs., W. Collings 20lbs., Dr. Herd 20lbs., Tams and Sons 30lbs., W. Dormer 60lbs., G. Harland 30lbs., Mr. Hope 60lbs., J. C. Barnes 120lbs., Judge Battye 100lbs. I could fill this paper with successful exhibitors' names supplied by me last year, not with 1 or 2lbs., so as to be able to compete for specials. Anyone who saw any of above gentlemen's birds last season will admit they were the hottes[illegible].

awkward part to clean in the ordinary cages. It will be clearly seen in the sketch how it is contrived. Just take two strips of wood and glue them on the bottom of cage frame, or nail them, whichever you please.—ROBERT MITCHELL.

I take in CAGE BIRDS every week and find it very helpful, writes Mr. J. Forbes (Ayr). Through a single advertisement in the early part of this year, I was enahled to dispose of about a dozen of my surplus stock, and in doing so made several friends in the Fancy.

CAGE BIRDS is really my Sunday companion. I shall never forget when I first started birdkeeping. I found that alright in itself, but when it came to breeding them I was lost; but a fellow fancier told me to follow CAGE BIRDS up, as that would put me right. I did so, and am now practically on the top rung of the "ladder of progress."—J. WALSH (Atherton).

"Birds and their Nests and Eggs found in and near great Towns," is the title of the latest handbook by George H. Vos, B.A., M.B. (Cantab). Strictly speaking it is the third part of a work on this subject. The three parts, as the author tells us in his preface, embody accounts of "excursions taken near the Metropolis by myself alone, or in company with my valued naturalist friend, Mr. Alfred Hodgkinson, during three seasons, with limited time at our disposal." The object of the writer is to give a short word picture of the various kinds of birds, and the chief points connected with them, which he finds to be "a most valuable method of gaining familiarity with our feathered friends." But nothing, as the author rightly points out, can take the place of finding the birds themselves. The book is delightfully free from heaviness. It cannot be said to be authoritative, except in so far as the plain statement of facts as discovered by the author is concerned. So that if the reader looks, for instance, for a reasoned discussion on the subject of the migratory instincts of birds, he will look in vain; but if, as a lover of wild-bird life, he seeks entertainment and some enlightenment on minor points, he will be amply satisfied. The book contains a large number of illustrations, and is well printed, being also of a convenient size. Those interested in the spread of nature study in elementary schools will find this book helpful in the furtherance of their propaganda. Messrs. E. Routledge and Sons, of London, and E. P. Dutton and Co., of New York, are the publishers, the price of the book being one shilling.

Country Rambles

Bradford East O.S.

The annual ramble took place on Whit-Tuesday, to Harden and Bingley, under conditions that were idcal for walking. The ramble turned out to be the most popular which has been organised by this Society, no less than 84 persons joining the party, which spent a pleasant afternoon among the rich woodland with which this part of the country is so generously endowed. Taking car to Thornton, the party wended its way past Doe Park, down by Hewenden reservoir, just touching the fringe of Cullingworth, then all through the woods at Harden.

The country around Harden and Bingley is just now looking at its best, and everybody in the party seemed to enjoy to the full the grand effect produced by the beautiful wild flowers, the magnificent foliage of the trees, the green mantle of the fields, the ferns and bracken, and the clear running stream, with trout sporting in its refreshing waters. It made one wish to stay longer, and wander amidst the beauty which nature provides in such prodigal quantity. But the time was drawing near for tea, and so we had to push on to our destination at Harden, where our appetites were gratified by a substantial meal, provided jointly by Messrs. Hastwick and Myers. Unfortunately, owing to the limited means of catering for so large a party in the village, we had to split into two sections, and after tea these went in two different directions, one party going back to the Allerton car, thence to Bradford, and the other by the Saltaire route.

We had the pleasure of hearing the Cuckoo nearly all the way from Harden to Allerton, and we also saw a few birds' nests, but did not disturb them, as it was getting rather late. We reached the Allerton car about 8.10 p.m., and arrived home in good time, after spending a most pleasant afternoon in one of the nicest parts the broad-acred shire can boast of. The members will note with pleasure the increased numbers that join these rambles, and I feel sure that the welfare of the Society is assured so long as these outings are arranged in this spirit. My hope is that they may long continue to give the same satisfaction which they have done in the past.—H. Hill, Hon. Secretary.

Leyton and District C.B.A.

The annual outing took place on May 27th, and once again Epping Forest was the venue selected, the meet taking place at Loughton Station. Some thirty members and friends turned up, some arriving on cycles and others by rail. For "Who's Who?" see photograph. The day was radiantly glorious. The golden sunshine, blue sky without a cloud, in addition the good fellowship so markedly prevalent, made one realise to the fullest extent the joy of living. The ground covered was much the same as at last year's outing. The party, on reaching the forest, split up in two, one half under the leadership of J. S. C., pushed on to the far side of Connaught Waters, leaving the second moiety in charge of the commander-in-chief, Mr. Hon. Sec. B. F. Forse, to give him his full title. Those British Bird enthusiasts, the Brothers Morris, very considerately parted company in order that one might accompany each section. It seems hard to realise as I write this, in a room in which a large fire is burning, whilst against my window a cold rain is pattering, that on the day of the outing the sun's heat was so great that one felt tempted to throw oneself full length in the cool and fragrant bracken, and cease the quest of the pretty and interesting homes of our feathered friends. These, I am inclined to think, were not quite so plentiful as on previous occasions; none the less, we saw plenty, including those of the Greater and Lesser Whitethroat, Greenfinch, Linnet, Bullfinch, Chaffinch, Hawfinch, Yellow Bunting, Hedge Sparrow, Jay, Blackbird and Thrush.

All day the birds sang in unceasing melody, and as one listened there was no difficulty for trained ears to recognise the notes of the Nightingale, Garden Warbler, Blackcap, Whitethroat, Thrush and Blackbird, whilst from the trees at frequent intervals came the weird call of the Woodpecker. Everyone knows the Cuckoo, and Leyton fanciers should never forget him, as until late in the evening sometimes two at once were calling, "Cuckoo! Cuckoo! Cuckoo!" Two unusual clutches were found by the members of Mr. Forse's section, viz., Chaffinch and Lesser Whitethroat, each with six eggs. I much regret that I did not see them, as I have never found more than five in a clutch. Many nests contained young birds, and I am pleased to say none were molested. Lest readers of Cage Birds should think we exhausted our subject, let me remind them that the portion of the Forest to which my section turned their attention consists of some 4,000 acres, leading through beautiful glades and thickets, the latter dense with pollarded oak, beech, hornbeam, maple, and birch, with an undergrowth of thorn crab and holly, not forgetting the wild briar, which is in great profusion. An interesting item in the outing was furnished by a balloon race (not got up by the Leyton fanciers), which drew our eyes from the bushes as by magnetic attraction. There appeared to be some ten or a dozen competitors. Some of them, owing to the great height they had attained, looked like mere bubbles against the azure sky, whilst the accompanying Martins, which seemed to be as curious as we ourselves, had the appearance of insects as they wheeled and circled about them. Incident crowded upon incident; there is not space to relate them all. As Burns truly says:—

"Pleasures are like poppies spread;
You seize the flowor, its bloom is shed."

And by this time some of the less enthusiastic naturalists began to murmur of a tea-time that was long past. So the birds were left in peace, and glad, no doubt, they were to be relieved from the scrutiny of such keen eyes. Tea at the "Owl," quaintest of hostelries or inns, whichever you like to call it. The other section having arrived before us, we speedily "fell to." Hunger ever the best of sauce, we all did ample justice to the viands put before us. We were photographed "muchly" both before and after tea; the one reproduced here was the one taken after, as may be readily seen by the peaceful and contented look on the victims' faces. The small boy in the group closed his eyes in a spirit of mischief; he also made everybody laugh by announcing the fact immediately the shutter clicked. This young gentleman raised another laugh by pulling his hat down to hide his hair, so as not to excite the anger of a herd of cows that passed between him and the camera. That readers may appreciate the joke, let me explain that his hair is red gold in colour. Tea had been laid in the big marquee standing in the grounds, the windows of which looked immediately on to a narrow strip of plantation, and then away across a meadow, the cool green of which was patterned in profusion with the bloom of the dandelion, daisy and buttercup.

At the far end there was a belt of timber bordering a beautiful estate, no doubt at one time itself a portion of the forest. Horse chestnut (in full bloom) oak, elm, copper and ordinary beech, ash, and blue fir trees were conspicuous, and subordinate to these the laburnum, with its amount of gold, mountain ash in flower (food for the birds, bye-and-bye), white and crimson thorn, rhododendrons in varying colours, which the rays of the setting sun were illuminating. This is one of the scenes that will linger in my memory for many a long day. "The night drave on with songs and clatter," and the concert, which seems to have become a feature of the Leyton fanciers' outing, enabled Messrs. Curtis, B. F. Forse, Carr, Wilson, Pardoe, Tossach and Bates to contribute very much to the pleasure of all present. All too soon, it seemed to most of us, the time arrived to ring down the curtain on one of the most enjoyable outings it has been my good fortune to take part in. So with the singing of "God Save the King," the solo of which was rendered right musically by friend Curtis, and the chorus by all of us right lustily, followed by "Auld Lang Syne," the meeting broke up, and we were speedily en route for Loughton. Once more Forest all the way.—J. S. Clarke.

King's Head (Leicester) B.B. and M. Club.

The first of a series of country rambles in connection with the "King's Head" (Archdeacon Lane, Leicester), British Bird and Mule Club took place on May 23rd. Brilliant weather favoured the event. A start was made at 9.30 a.m. from headquarters by brake, and a couple of hours' easy riding took us well into the country, close to Seagrave fox covers. From this point the party rambled on foot towards Six Hills, our destination. In the afternoon a special route was taken by the whole party, and in a well-wooded neighbourhood, under the guidance of that well-known fancier and exhibitor, Mr. W. Cole, we soon made the acquaintance of some of our migratory feathered friends. The first to attract our attention was the Black-Cap Warbler, sending forth his full, rich notes. Near to a low stone wall we saw the Redstart and his mate busily building. Up in a fir tree we saw the Gold-crested Wren and the Blue Tit. The Cuckoo was heard, the Whinchat flew by, while the woods echoed with the music of the Blackbird, the Linnet, Chaffinch, Yellowhammer, and the lovely Song Thrush, whose mate we discovered sitting tightly on her nest of six eggs, one of which we examined and then carefully replaced. Near by we also found the nest of the Lesser Whitethroat and the Hedge Accentor. The song of the Willow Warbler (as also that of the Chiffchaff) was heard. At the top of a high edge we saw a splendid specimen of the Wheatear, while earlier on, during the picnic "spread," we listened to the beautiful notes of the Nightingale. Returning to the hostelry, the members sat down to an appetising tea, after which a vote of thanks to the Ramble Management Committee was passed unanimously, and a start was made on the return journey. Passing through beautiful scenery, enlivened by Swallows, Swifts, Sand-martins, and Magpies, and here and there a hovering Hawk, home was reached, after a grand day out, about 7 p.m. Local fanciers wishing to join the above club should apply to headquarters.—W. Burbidge, Secretary.

Hartlepools C.B.S.

The Hartlepools Cage Bird Society's fourth annual outing was held on Whit-Monday in the beautiful grounds surrounding Wynyard, the seat of Lord Londonderry. The weather was not by any means propitious, as during the drive to the park, and also during a portion of the ramble, the rain fell heavily; but this notwithstanding, a party of nineteen ladies and gentlemen had a real good time. As usual, through the kindness of Mr. Mieklejohn, the keepers conducted two parties through the woods, and though nothing unusual was noted, several interesting objects were discovered. In recounting the details of his party's ramble, Mr. R. Dall gave a most excellent account of the various nests, eggs, and young they had seen, several of which, however, they could not name. This party was also shown the pheasant incubators, and as several lots of eggs were batching it proved a very instructive object lesson. Mr. Woodhead described the finds of his party, which included, amongst others, the nest of the Kestrel Hawk, containing a young one and an egg, with dead one, unhatched. The party re-assembled to make the return drive to Wolviston, where Mrs. Balmer had a splendid tea awaiting us. Needless to say, full justice was done to the good things provided, and afterwards the whole company thoroughly enjoyed themselves, songs being rendered by Messrs. Robinson and Meynell, and dancing was indulged in to the musical strains of the piano, the artists being Messrs. Dent and Woodhead. The singing of "God Save the King" preceded a lovely drive to West Hartlepool, and the company parted with the heartiest wishes that at some future date such another pleasant time would be spent together.—E. Woodhead, assistant-secretary.

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1909 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

Hetton-le-Hole and District C.B.S.

Breeding results are very poor in our district up till now. The total results obtained by members present at our meeting on June 5th, were as follows:—H. Fenwick 25, R. Lawson 21, Geo. Vipond 19, R. Allen 15, H. Wilson 13, G. Gowland 11, H. Kilner 7, S. Rowell 7, J. Appleby 1, P. Newstead 1, A. Notley nil. Sad complaints were heard about clear eggs, dead in shell, and the finding of young dead in nest and yet with crops full of food—not a very bright report to send, but we hope for much better results.—A. J. Notley, hon. secretary.

In Scotland.

The result of the breeding of the Scotch Fancy Canary in Scotland, so far, has not been encouraging. The most successful report is that of Mr. Dalgleish, of Edinburgh, who is said to have twenty to thirty. Mr. Paton, of Kilmarnock, has had a good season, and Mr. Hannan, of Maxwelltown, and Mr. Craig, of Girvan, made a capital start. As a rule, however, breeders have few young birds, so that they will have to depend upon what may be done in June, July, and August. A backward start may be followed with success.—A Breeder.

Bradford East O.S.

While out on the annual Whitsuntide ramble, writes Mr. H. Hill, hon. sec. Bradford East O.S., the birdy-men whiled the time away by describing their experiences, their successes and failures, during the present season; and it is surprising what different methods are adopted to achieve success. Some of the members are doing extremely well, while others are doing just as badly. I hear that there are some promising youngsters out, whose owners have already visions of first prizes in plenty adorning the show-cages of their favourites before the curtain is rung down on the season 1909-10. But more anon; the fates-that-be will determine in due time. But the average exhibitor is doomed to have many disappointments. My only hope is that those with lofty ambitions will be let down as gently as possible, for the bird is yet to be bred which suits every judge. I might say in passing that two of our most prominent exhibiting members have round about 100 each, and several others have their forties and fifties, so it looks as though our members' shows are going to be up to the usual standard.

Under the White Rose.

THE breeding season is now proceeding apace, and, as usual, some fanciers are flourishing and others, no matter how they try, seem to be unable to get going properly. The principal cries have been, "dead in shell" and "clear eggs." The feeding this time, taking it all round, has left little room for complaint. I have heard many remark that they never had hens do better. Several Societies held members' shows for young birds last week, and others are to be held to-day. Then next week we have the only open First Feather show, at Great Horton, where it is hoped some good birds, and plenty of them, will be seen.

MULE and Hybrid breeders are not having such a lively time; several, I hear, are getting plenty of eggs, which are not proving fertile. Perhaps it is rather early yet. Others are looking forward to better results, their birds being busy carrying nesting material about. Some of the crosses being tried are good, if they will only be successful, the following being amongst them (first named in each case being the male bird): Bullie-Greenie, Linnet-Bullie, Redpoll-Bullie, Redpoll-Greenie, Twite-Canary, Linnet-Canary, Goldie-Canary, Linnet-Siskin, Siskin-Bullie.

THE Green Marked Y.C.C. (beg pardon, the National Green Marked Y.C.C.) was duly put into working order on Saturday last. There was not a very great turn-out of fanciers, but representative. Quite three hours were taken up by business, the formation of rules, classes, method of counting for points, prizes, etc., being the principal points. Four classes at least must be provided for marked birds by Societies that wish to have the Club's patronage, and they are to be as follows:—Green marked yellow Yorkshire cock; ditto buff cock; ditto yellow hen; ditto buff hen.

A MARKED bird must be marked on at least two technical points (eye, wing, and tail), even and foul marks being, of course, allowed to compete. The birds are to be judged in the first place for type and quality, markings only to have preference where birds are of equal merit otherwise. As regards counting for points' competitions, three birds only are to count, and these must be "starred." In the event of a class being cancelled, exhibitors are to be allowed to transfer the "star" to another exhibit. After the close of the business there was a long discussion on the merits or otherwise of "starring" for these competitions, its effect on the entry of exhibits at shows, the sale of birds, etc. It was a lively hour.

"STRAIGHT-'UN."

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Mag, the Happy.

A friend of mine has a Magpie, which is a happy little fellow. He is very fond of a bone. He will scold the cat, and call his master. The children will run after him with sticks, and he will jump upon the top of a post and talk to them as impertinently as can be, and his mistress would often find behind the doors scissors, thimble, halfpennies, etc. At last they were obliged to cage him, because they got tired of his mischievous ways. He calls Bill to let him out, as he does not like being penned up. He is like a robber, because he got in prison for his naughty ways.—Sent by Ella Cook, aged 10 years, Bearwood, Pembridge.

*The Canaries' Whitsun Holiday

One Sunday morning my father hung his Canaries out in the back yard, as usual. In one cage was "Minnie" and "Georgie" and three young ones. Somehow the cage door came open and they both escaped, and flew on to our neighbour's fruit trees, and then on to the housetops. Some boys caught "Minnie" in the afternoon, but "Georgie" we could not see. We had quite made up our minds that we should never see him again. In the evening, however, we all went out for a walk, and went we returned at 8 p.m. to our surprise he had returned through the kitchen window and into the scullery. Both the old and young ones are now doing well.—Sent by Dora Wood, age 15, 1, Pearcefield Terrace Cromwell Road, Brentwood, Essex.

*How a Starling was Saved.

On Whit-Monday my aunt was watching some parent Starlings feeding their young. One of the young ones was so eager to get a worm which was in its mother's bill that it fell out of the nest. The cat sprang forward, but my aunt was too quick for it, and managed to catch the young bird before the cat did. She brought it to my big brother, who put it in a cage. He gave it some worms to eat, and hung the cage high up on a wall. The old Starlings fed the young one through the cage wires. My brother nailed a platform to the bottom of the cage for it to stand on. The old birds have been many times every day since, carrying worms, slugs, snails and green food to the young bird, which has a very big appetite.—Sent by May Higgs, age 10, 85, Chapel Street, Luton, Bedfordshire.

The Stanhope Show report states that I was fourth in the British hird class with a Reed Bunting, writes Mr. J. Forster (P.C.) (Darlington), whereas it was a Meadow Bunting, which appears to he very seldom identified in these parts. I may say it was also a big winner at Scotch shows last season.

OBITUARY.

Mr. J. GRIGGS (Birmingham).

It is with very great regret that I have to inform you of the death of Mr. J. Griggs, president of the City of Birmingham C.B.S., writes Mr. J. H. de Maillet, the hon. sec. Mr. Griggs died on May 31st, after long suffering borne with much fortitude. The deceased gentleman was a great lover of Crests. A few years ago he gave £70 for a pair. He had huilt up a most successful stud, hut owing to his indifferent health he very rarely exhibited on the show hench. To the members of the Society he was a generous and kind-hearted friend, always ready to do his utmost to further the interests of the Society, and he will long be remembered hy those who came into close personal touch with him.

Much sympathy will be extended to Mr. and Mrs. Gain ("News of the World") on the death of their only daughter Nora, aged 12 years, after a very brief illness, writes Mr. G. F. Woolhouse (E. Dulwich). Mr. Gain, who is one of the vice-presidents of the Dulwich O.S., and well known for his generosity in furthering the interests of the Fancy, has, I am sure, the warmest sympathy, not only of his fellow members, hut also af all who know him.

Our First Feather Show is to be held on July 10th, writes Mr. A. J. Notley, secretary of the Hetton-le-Hole and Dis. C.B.S., when Mr. A. Brown will judge.

Mr. Fox (Long Eaton), will judge at our Nest Feather Show on June 19th, writes Mr. C. Draper, secretary of the Leicester and Leicestershire Hand-in-Hand C.B.S.

A Wagtail has huilt under the lines on the Midland Railway, at Hampton, between Evesham and Cheltenham. Many trains pass over the nest during the course of the day, hut the hird pays no heed to them, and sits calmly on her six eggs.

Societies requiring the patronage of the Northern B.B.M. and F.B.C., writes Mr. J. Bertram, the secretary, please make application to me at 95, Gainshro Grove, Newcastle-on-Tyne, not later than June 15th, stating classification and judge (radius, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland).

'CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

The open show of the Hasland, Grassmoor, and Dist. C.B.S., writes Mr. C. H. Naylor, the hon. sec., is fixed for December 4th, judge, Mr. W. Vardy, of Huthwaite. Nest feather shows' dates are July 3rd and 31st, when Mr. Vardy will also judge. We are hoping to have a good show at Hasland this time, as we have an excellent room, and I believe Chesterfield are not holding one.

Kindly allow me to thank the chairman and members of the Glasgow and Western O.S. for the very kind manner in which they treated me at their meeting, which I noticed advised in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Wm. Hornby, assistant-secretary, Kirkstall and District C.B.S., and being on a visit in the district I paid them a call. The reception extended to me will always remain in my memory.

Kindly note my change of address, writes Mr. Geo. W. F. Lythgoe, from Stamford Street, to 76, Shrewshury Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. For the benefit of any fanciers who may wish to call, I may state that I am only in the next street to Stamford Street. I am afraid this is perilously near, as after living for 29 years in one house I quite anticipate finding myself trying to open the old, original door.

The following gentlemen have kindly agreed to officiate as judges at our annual show, to he held in Glasgow on October 15th and 16th, writes Mr. John Young, secretary of the City of Glasgow O.A.. viz: Plainhead section: Messrs. Davidson (Aberdeen) and Malcolmson (Glasgow); Crest, etc., section: Mr. J. Nohle (Kilmarnock); Border Fancy section: Messrs. Hislop (Stirling) and Hamilton (Hamilton); Mules, British, and Foreign birds: Messrs. Pettigrew (Glasgow) and Livingstone (Bathgate).

A remarkable consignment of Australian birds (one of the largest seen for many years) reached London last week, and was hought hy that well-known firm of importers, Messrs. De Von, of 114, Bethnal Green Road, London, E. The shipment comprised 2,453 pairs of Budgerigars, 1,616 pairs of Zebra Finches, 98 pairs of Diamond Sparrows, and a number of the handsome Leadheater Cockatoos, and Blue Bonnet Parrakeets—that is to say, the ahove are the numbers which reached England safely, Messrs. De Von's premises presenting an astonishing spectacle the next day, what with the regular stock and the 3,300 odd hirds enumerated above. Over 1,000 pairs of Budgerigars fly loose in one room, the noise of their wings and their cries when disturbed being deafening. This huge consignment landed in very good condition.

Midland Counties Yorks. C.C.

A committee meeting will he held at the Crown Hotel, Station Street, Birmingham, on June 17th, at eight o'clock. Special business; will all members of the committee please attend?—W. H. UZZELL, hon. sec.

The Norwich Plainhead Club.

Kindly mention that Mr. W. Aitchison, the well-known Scottish exhibitor, has promised one guinea cash prize (or value) to the member (champion or uovice) joining in 1909 who gains most points at cup shows next season, writes Mr. Jno. Hopkins, hon. sec.

Yorkshire County B.B. and M.C.

Will Societies desirous of obtaining the patronage, writes Mr. W. R. Myers, the hon. secretary, make application for same to me at 23, Inglehy Place, Bradford? Any Society is eligible which makes five classes for British birds, Mules, and Hybrids, and has its headquarters in the county of Yorkshire. Will intending members please forward their names?

A Presentation at Hull.

After the judging at the last Nest Feather show of the Hull C.B.S., held on June 7th, the chairman, Mr. G. W. Oliver, called the members together (these numhering ahout 40), and stated that he had a very pleasant duty to perform, which was to present a beautiful silver tea service to the late secretary, Mr. F. F. Potter, for the valuahle services he rendered to the Society in the years 1906-8. Mr. Potter, in returning his thanks, said it would always be his endeavour to advance the Fancy in every possible way, and to render all the aid he could to the Society.

Merely Lapse of Memory!

I was visiting our local show at Kirkcaldy, writes "H.J.," and starting at class 1, I went round until I came to the A.O.V. class, in which a Gold Lizard Canary had taken first prize. There were two men standing hy, and they evidently thought it was a Hybrid class. Anyway, they were trying to get at the parentage of the first-prize hird. One of them appealed to me, and I told him it was a Lizard Canary. Turning to his friend, he at once said: "That's it, Sam; it's between the Lizard and the Canary. I jist forgot the name the noo."

Marking Wild Birds.

Professor Thomson, of the University of Aherdeen, has the idea of marking birds with aluminium rings, keeping a record of the date, locality, species, etc., hoping that whoever hecomes possessed of any of these hirds will send particulars to the Natural History Department at the University. Some valuable information respecting the migration of hirds should thus he collected, and the routes taken by migrants should by this means be in many cases perfectly traced. If it were possible to offer some small reward to bird catchers for the return of the rings, whenever found on birds, possibly more of them might reach the University during the coming autumn. A letter from Professor Thomson will be found in our correspondence columns this week.

Difficulties of the . . . . . Breeding Season.

By T. C. CRAWHALL.

The Sweating Hen.

The hen that sweats her young is almost as great a sinner as the one that won't feed; in fact, the non-feeder, if she does not mend her ways, usually turns into a sweater. The same treatment ought to be tried. If she has the cock bird with her, remove him, so that she is bound to come off for food for herself. Give plenty of salts in the water. By plenty, I do not mean a saturated solution, but, say, as much as will cover a sixpence or a shilling, according to the severity of the case. Increase the proportion of rape seed, and, in fact, do what you can to bring her condition down.

I consider most cases of sweating hens are caused through the giving too much egg food the first few days after hatching. The hen fills her crop with rich food, and the young can only take a very small proportion from her; you will find, if ever you have to hand-feed youngsters, how little it takes to fill their tiny necks. Then the rest is absorbed into the hen's system. As the hen is inactive while brooding her young, she is not able to throw off the ill-effects of over-eating as she would otherwise be able to do if not sitting. Consequently, the system is overcharged, the liver becomes sluggish, and the hen has not energy enough to feed her young. That is the reason I recommend you to reduce your hen's condition by purgatives and feeding.

You will also find that the excreta of the young of a sweating hen is generally in a very moist condition, due possibly to the food which they get not being mixed with a sufficient quantity of the mother's digestive saliva, or because the saliva is not of sufficient strength to aid the youngsters to digest their food, thus setting up a kind of inflammation and diarrhœa. The use of salts, contrary to expectations does not increase the moisture of the excreta, but by clearing the bowels of offensive matter and allaying the inflammation they begin to resume their normal functions. I have seen it stated that a mild antiseptic, such as boracic acid, is a very useful thing to add to the water if you have any hens with a tendency to sweat their young.

I have not tried it, but if sweating is a disease of a septic nature, then a pinch of boracic acid in the water, or a drop or two of solution of permanganate of potash (sufficient to give a very faint pink colour to the water) might be found beneficial.

A salt bath is also often recommended to be hung on the cage. In the case of sweating hens it should be used daily until the hen and chicks regain their health. The bath must not be made too strong, or the hen will not go into it. Salt, like boracic and permanganate, is a mild antiseptic, and possibly that accounts for the benefits claimed for it.

To Deal with Nesting Diarrhœa.

Nesting diarrhœa is a very troublesome complaint which attacks some hens. I have noticed that if a hen has it during her first nest, she is liable to have returns of it at each subsequent nest. Again, it is said to be of bacteriological origin. The hen's temperature rises naturally during the period of incubation, and is thus favourable to the growth of the bacilli which are present in the bowels. They increase rapidly, setting up irritation of the bowels, and thus causing the diarrhœa.

The first treatment should be a mild dose of opening medicine to clear the offensive matter out; follow this up with a little chalk stirred up in the drinking water. Take the water away for a couple of hours, and when returning it, stir it up well, when the hen will get a certain portion of it. Do this two or three times a day, and give plenty of maw seed to eat.

Thoroughly cleanse the cage and all materials in it. If the nest pan is soiled, give a fresh one. Maw seed is a good preventative of nesting diarrhœa, so if you have a hen troubled with it during her first nest supply her with a liberal quantity of maw seed each of the following nests.

The Case of Egg-binding.

Egg-bound hens are a source of trouble to some fanciers. I have only had one example, and in spite of all the methods advised, oil on vent, steaming, etc., she died, so that I cannot consider myself competent to give advice on this question. My only advice must be to get fanciers to try and avoid such a thing happening. This can only be done by having perfectly healthy birds, and by not frightening the hens before they lay.

I give plenty of crushed hen's eggs shells to my birds when paired up. Mrs. C. saves all the shells of the eggs she uses in the house, and I save all I use for the birds. I think that this, together with good food and healthy stock, are essentials to prevent egg-binding.

Eggs Failing to Hatch.

Eggs fertile but not hatching is a difficulty which arises at all times, but especially during the warm, dry weather of the second and third rounds. This is the result of two or three causes. You will find that on the thirteenth or fourteenth day some of your eggs chip, but the young bird is not able to make further progress towards releasing himself from the shell. If in the morning you notice any eggs like this which by the afternoon have made no further progress, you must help the youngster out, or you will lose it.

The way to do this is to break the shell with the head of a pin in a circle from the point where you see the beak round the thick end of the egg. Then moisten the beak with a drop of warm water, and rub a little of the warm water round the crack you have made. Then return the egg to the nest. If this is not sufficient help for it to release itself in an hour, you must take the shell off yourself.

Again use the pin's head. Some of my friends use the point, but I think if the young bird could speak he would decidedly object to being pricked at birth. If you insert pin carefully you will be liable to lift the top of the shell off in one piece, then little by little you can get the rest of the shell off, and if this is done carefully your chick will be quite right in a very short time.

You will notice as you remove the shell, that the skin lining is fastened to the wings, thus preventing the young bird turning round in the shell, which is necessary for it to release itself.

All But Hatched Out.

Chicks which come almost to the point of hatching and die in the shell are caused often through improperly-made nests and through the eggs farthest away from the hen's body getting chilled. Pot nest pans are very cold. The nests should be lined with a good thick lining of some heat-retaining material. Most wild birds line their nests with hair or wool, and I do not think for lining the nests anything beats that natural lining. Another cause for young dying in the shell is that the father is an old bird—past his vigour, or a bird that is out of health.

I have mentioned some of the troubles that you will encounter with your hens. Of course, others are bound to occur now and again, but if you will closely observe your birds and study the remedies for each disease, you can often by dealing with the complaint early prevent many a death which would otherwise occur if you were careless or let things go too far before applying remedies.

The Weaning Time.

The difficulties connected with rearing the young are so many and so varied that it is impossible to classify them under various headings. Possibly the greatest difficulty with most fanciers is weaning time. I have noticed in the Fancy Press that many people advise that the young should be taken from the parents when they are about three weeks old, just as they leave the nest. I have always kept mine with the parents until they were a month old, but I can quite understand that if the young will do for themselves at three weeks, it must be a great benefit to the old birds to be relieved of the strain of feeding. When they are removed the same food should be given them as is being given to the parents, only made a little more moist with water or milk.

A milk sop given every other day will be found to be a very great benefit in keeping away inflammation, which is a great trouble with young Canaries. Canary seed with a little German rape seed should be put in the cage as soon as the young are weaned from their parents. It is as well to crack the seed at first. Also supply a limited quantity of crushed hemp seed. Gradually diminish this when you see they are cracking the Canary seed, until at the age of 6 weeks their staple food should be Canary seed with a small proportion of rape mixed with it. All Canaries are better on hard seed when they are from 6 to 8 weeks of age. Then, at 8 weeks, they can have a little soft food, so that one may begin the colour-feeding at the proper time.

The Breeding & Rearing of Crests and Crestbreds.

By D. BROWNING.

A paper read before the Exeter and District C.B.S.

The young birds, as soon as they are able to perch, should be removed to a small hanging cage, in order that the parents can feed them through the wires, and thus avoid plucking. When the young are four or five weeks old they should be induced to eat for themselves as soon as possible. Give them a little egg food and crushed seed, and after a few days they will be able to forage for themselves. I would recommend cutting off the crest of young birds and turning them into a large cage or flight until the moulting season, and then moulting each separately in a roomy cage for show purposes. At the end of the moult, those that are not required should be allowed to remain in a flight during the winter. They will greatly improve in size, and be stronger for the following season's work.

Crests do not come to their full stature until they are two years old. A poor-looking Crest in the first feather very often in moulting develops into one double the size, and it is the case sometimes that when a Crest is very large in the first feather it does not moult out so large. Never part with birds which moult in this way, as it hardly ever fails in the second moult to come up to its original size and others sometimes larger.

The Washing of Birds.

Of all the varieties of Canaries, none are more difficult to get into good show form than the Crest. The excessive amount of feather on these birds when once disarranged is very difficult to get into place. To wash your birds, you should have three basins, the first to wash the birds in and the second and third for rinsing purposes, the water in the third basin to be almost cold. I use clean rain water, which gets the dirt out easier. Have some Sunlight soap or Greeves' Feather Beautifier. Place the soap on the right-hand side of the basin, and have a supply of warm and cold water. Don't be nervous in handling the bird, or you will fail. A towel will be required to dry your hands on, and a soft handkerchief with which to take the worst of the wet out of the bird; and some soft drying cloths to roll the birds in. The drying cage should be ready before a good, clear fire. Take the bird in your left hand, and don't be afraid of handling it. Wash the under part of the body, wings, and tail, putting on plenty of soap and water, and rubbing gently in the same direction as the feathers lie. The head and neck should be the first parts dried—rubbed from the throat towards the back. Then turn the bird over, and finish the neck, moving the feathers from the neck towards the throat, to prevent the production of a frill when dry. Then do the back and wing coverts, using the sponge or shaving brush and water. Freely rinse in the second basin, and finish off in the third, being careful to get all the soap out of the feathers.

In washing the Crest, be careful to rub the feathers gently in the same direction as the Crest lies. Dry the bird a little in the handkerchief. Then roll it in a drying cloth, taking care to keep the head well inside, or you will get a frill on all the feathers around the neck. When drying them, place the birds on their backs, with their tails towards the fire. Change the birds occasionally, and take them out of the cloths as soon as they can stand, and before they are quite dry they should be taken to the bird room, the temperature not to be lower than 60 degrees. The next day the birds should be sprayed, but not made too wet. They will then plume themselves. All Crest birds should be washed four days before being sent to a show.

There is another point worth noticing, and without which no one can produce good Crests. I mean warmth. The bird room should be warmed during the moult and during the winter months, and I am certain that by doing this the birds will be found to be in better condition for the following season.

At the conclusion of the paper the Chairman invited questions. A most animated discussion took place among the "Cresty" men, the questions being answered by Mr. Browning in a very practical manner. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Browning for his splendid paper, and in his reply he very kindly offered to do whatever he could for the Society. This young and flourishing Society must be congratulated on having such talent among its members, backed by a well-organised committee and a hard-working hon. secretary and chairman.

My Thirteen Years' Experiences in Mule and Hybrid Breeding.

By JOHN T. MILLOTT.

I have now had thirteen years' experience in Mule and Hybrid breeding. I have bred the Goldfinch, Greenfinch, Siskin and Linnet, with the hen Canary, also Greenfinch-Linnet and Redpoll-Siskin Hybrids both in a cage and in an indoor aviary. But I must say that I prefer the cages best. My breeding cages are 3ft. 6ins. long, 11ins. wide and 15ins. high, for muling with the Canary, with a partition in the centre and water and seed-pots and hoppers outside. I have some breeding cages with three partitions, so that I can put the Finch in the centre and a Canary hen in each end, which I like the best. The bottom of the cage I cover with clean sand free from dust. All egg-shells from the kitchen I dry and crush to mix with the sand, as I find the hens prefer them when nesting. Also I place in each compartment a lump of old mortar.

Housing and Feeding the Hens.

All my muling hens I turn into the aviary for the winter, and the British birds I cage off separately before the moult as I use some of them for exhibition. I think they are more steady then, and I can feed them more on their natural food. Some I colour-feed. Also, having them in the aviary saves many feathers from getting pulled out when the birds are fighting over the tit-bits, etc. Some of them I moult outdoors. The hens in the aviary I feed on Canary 2 parts, German rape 1 part, as a staple diet. with hemp 1 part. niger ½, maw ½, twice a week, and fresh clean water every day, with a piece of apple or boiled carrot twice a week until the end of February. As the young shoots of dandelion appear, I give the birds a little when there is no frost about.

I mostly take a nest of Canaries first from young hens, as I find that when young hens have had a nest of young Canaries they take more readily to the Finch or British bird. Not only the hen, but also the Finch, will fill eggs then, whereas all other inducements might fail. Also I always test each nest of eggs at the ninth day, and if I find all the eggs clear, I at once get three or four Greenfinch or Linnet eggs from the fields as near hatching as possible (I can mostly get plenty near my house) and I put them under the hen, and when the young are about nine or ten days old I run in the Finch; generally the next clutch of eggs is fertile. I always part the cock from the hen each night when she is about to lay, and return in the morning when I have got the egg, which I replace with a dummy until the eve of the third day. I then part off the cock bird, return the eggs, and let the hen hatch out and rear the young herself.

When the hen is sitting I feed on plain Canary seed, the best I can get, with German summer rape twice a week (about a teaspoonful) and a bath twice a week; and if she does not bathe, as is sometimes the case, I spray the eggs in the nest twice before they are due to hatch. The day before the eggs are due to hatch I put a little egg-food and hemp in the cage, and after the young are three days old I give shepherd's purse (the pods only) fresh twice a day, and clear all cages of green-food every night. Last season I used only shepherd's purse and dandelion leaf, and the seedy heads of the plant. I wish for no better results from the use of green-food. I do not like lettuce, as I think it makes the hens lazy in their feeding.

Concerning the Egg-food.

The last three years I have not been afraid of sour egg-feed as I have made a dozen white cicilian and alabaster marble egg-pots. I give each bird its day's supply in the morning, and always remove what is left at night. I do not mind how hot or close the day is, their egg-food will always be cool, and if I have not sufficient pots made of marble I use an earthenware or glass one and get a piece of flat marble ¾in thick and place it underneath the same, which will answer as well. When I put the nest-boxes in the cages I get a piece of brown paper, ten inches long and four wide, and double it in the centre lengthways, to make it 5ins. by 4ins. In the side of the cage next to the nest-box I make a lot of small holes; then I place in centre of the paper when doubled a few feathers, and the two ends then come together. I hang this little contrivance on the nail, and then the nest-box. This makes a splendid red mite trap. These papers I change every week from the cage to the fire, and I find that red mite are then very scarce. Although I overhaul and limewash my cages every year before the breeding season, I cannot breed without a few of these little pests.

Essentials to Success.

The hen (so-called Sib-bred) some fanciers think you have only to inbreed in order to ensure success, but in my opinion you can inbreed as much as you like, but if the birds have not a tendency to throw birds with light feathers, I find it a loss of time, as I have Sib-bred hens which I have bred myself for seven years, and which last season only threw young having a few light feathers. The easiest way is, in my opinion, to get a hen from a well-known breeder of light Mules, for which you will have to pay a good price. This, I know, is beyond the means of the average working man, even if breeders will part with the right ones. If I want a hen I go to a friend and buy a good, large, clear yellow or buff Norwich, a bird of the year; and I have had larger and better-coloured mules thus than by using my Sib-bred hens. I think it almost hopeless to buy hens for the purpose of breeding light Mules.

How to Deal with the Young.

When the young are from three to four weeks old I separate them from the old ones by putting in the wire partition, and I feed them on egg-food and crushed seed until they can crack their own seed. I keep them on the egg-food until after their moult—half a teaspoonful per bird—but I never give any greenfood, except the ripe heads of knapweed, plantain, and the pods of shepherd's purse. When colour-feeding, I put to one egg half a thick slice of stale home-made bread crumbled up, and three tablespoonfuls of Spratt's Fibrine Lark-feed, which I mix well together. Then I add the tasteless pepper, with good results. I also supply a bath every other day of clean rain water. As to the time at which to pair up, when my birds are in good health and breeding condition, then I pair them; but I always see that the cock bird is most vigorous. If he is not, by the end of the season nothing but clear eggs is to be expected.

The Hybrid Pairs.

When the hen Canaries are in the aviary in the winter months, my pairs of British birds are in the cages in pairs, with or without the partitions. If I am using the cock bird for exhibition I part them by a wire partition; if not, they are run together. I think this method gets them more steady, and they also pair more nearly as I want them to when they are turned into the aviary for the breeding season.

About the first week in March I take out the hen Canaries from the aviary and cage them as required, and the British pairs I turn into the aviary, which I have provided with gorse bushes, etc., to form a small hedge on the wall side for nesting places, also a few nest-boxes which I tack on to fir twigs, and gorse, to make them more private. When the hens are sitting or are rearing their young I never go near them, except to give food and water. I never put their eggs under Canaries; I always let them sit and feed their own young.

When the hens are sitting and feeding I give them shepherd's purse, chickweed, knapweed, dandelion leaf, etc., and seedy heads, milk-thistle, and groundsel (which I can get in season twice a day), with Canary, teazle, rape, hemp, gold-of-pleasure, maw seed, and cracked or shelled sunflower seed, with egg-food, Spratt's Fibrine and ants' eggs mixed together fresh daily. I also supply a bath when they are disposed to take it, and fresh water daily. By the above-named method I was successful in rearing the Greenfinch-Linnet, the Redpoll-Siskin, and also three full eggs from the Twite-Bullfinch, which did not hatch; I am trusting to get this cross this season. Whenever I want any assistance, I mostly find the same in CAGE BIRDS; many wrinkles have Mr. G. E. Weston and Mr. C. St. John taught me.

Sexing Waxwings.

As a small number of these pretty birds have been obtainable of late, after being absent from our markets for some some, it is worth making some notes on the sexing of them. This is more difficult than would appear at first sight, since the age of the bird has to be allowed for. The very young Waxwing has a streaked breast, and is without the black bib; but I have never seen one imported so young as this. Nestlings may have the "wax" tippings to the secondaries, and, on the other hand, these may be wanting in a bird which has lost the breast streaks and assumed the bib.

Then, the markings of the primaries vary with age; a fully adult bird of either sex has the inner webs with a white mark at the tip, forming a V in conjunction with the yellow marks on the outer web. This white mark is usually wanting even after the "wax" on the secondaries appear, so it is evidently assumed later. Furthermore, some cocks develop the wax-tippings on the tail as well as the secondaries; but such birds are rare, and may be very old.

The evidence seems to point to the fact that the fully adult hen is identical with the cock in plumage, but that she takes longer to equal his beauty of feathering. At any rate, Mr. St. Quintin, who has got these birds to nest and lay, states that his hen was only distinguishable by having some of her feathers disarranged owing to mauling by an owl outside the aviary.

The Waxwing's "Love Display."

From what has been said it is pretty obvious that a bird with well-developed wax tippings to the secondaries, and V-tips to the primaries, is probably a cock; but some of this type are certainly small birds, so size seems not to be much of a guide.

The Sexual Display.

A specimen which shows off may probably be put down as a cock. The method of display, as I have seen it recently in the bird-room of my friend, Mr. G. E. Weston, is very peculiar, and not what might have been expected. The tail is lowered and somewhat expanded, but the wings remain closed. The crest is somewhat raised, and the body plumage puffed out, especially on the breast and rump. It seems strange that more attempt is not made to show off the beautiful markings of the wings and tail—a common cock sparrow certainly understands how to make the best of himself much better than this exquisitely beautiful bird.

The Waxwing's Relatives.

To look at a Waxwing, did one not know its place of origin, one would certainly put it down as a tropical species, from its form and colouring; but it is a truly northern bird, having the northern parts of the whole northern hemisphere as its address, for it is found in both worlds. It is a great wanderer, not only in the winter, but in the breeding season. One year, for instance, Waxwings may be breeding abundantly in a locality, and the next entirely absent from it. It has only two near relatives, both very similar to it in general appearance. One of these is the Cedar-bird, or Cherry-bird (Ampelis cedrorum), well known in North America, to which it is confined. This differs from our bird in being smaller, and being yellowish-white under the tail instead of chestnut. The other is the Japanese Waxwing (Ampelis japonica), which has no wax-tippings on the wings, but has these marked with a patch of beautiful rose-red. The tail is also tipped with this colour, so that this species is the most showy of the three. It has not, so far as I know, been imported alive.

Wild Bird Life.

An Abundance of Starlings.

So abundant just now is wild bird life, and so eager are we to watch for, locate and identify the nests of the rarer species, that we take little heed of the doings of the more common birds. Yet the summer habits of these are equally interesting, and none of us is so conversant with their ways that we have nothing to learn. During summer our resident birds spread all over the countryside. The Blackbird, Robin and Thrush nest in our gardens, the Hedge Sparrow in the privet boundary; we also find them along the country lanes, on the edge of the woods, and upon the open common. Each member must needs get afield to secure that necessary privacy and isolation for the rearing of its young. And even then there is crowding; I have found the nests of three Greenfinches in one hawthorn, and two in an evergreen, these latter actually touching each other. Two Thrushes nesting in the same bush is not at all uncommon, and recently a Sparrow's nest was located in an elm tree, placed close to the trunk, immediately under it being a hole from which young Starlings emerged to watch for their parents returning with food, no doubt from time to time bidding them "hurry up," for these voracious birds seem always hungry. No parents work harder during the early summer months than these grub and insect hunters, the Starlings. They will soon be quite as plentiful as the House Sparrow, for although these birds have usually only one nest during the season, it is generally a full brood, and they do not appear to have many enemies. Hosts nest in the old trees surrounding the village, almost every hole being tenanted. A few elms close to my garden are crowded with Starlings, and in one a pair of Jackdaws have also taken up summer quarters. Wherever possible they have robbed the Starlings of their eggs, and when the young have left the nests, they have occasionally hunted and captured a weakling. The noise and hubbub during these raids are beyond description. But so plentiful are these youngsters that the few which meet with such "accidents" cannot make much difference to the general community.

Careless Parents.

When feeding young ones, wild birds become somewhat careless, and if an observer will only sit quietly at a spot where several species are seen, it is an easy matter to locate the nests, and in some cases the finds far exceed expectations.

Local Scarcity of Nightingales.

Nightingales are not so plentiful in some localities in the south as they were last year. A certain district is almost denuded of birds. Can it be that the catcher has been at work? Local gossip says so; but "gossip" is proverbially unreliable.

Rarest Small Birds.

Perhaps the rarest of our small resident birds are the Dartford Warblers. Although these nest in comparative security, they never appear to increase much in numbers. No doubt the recent hard winter has considerably reduced them, as unlike other small birds, they never seek the shelter of farm buildings and houses.

A Clever Architect.

I have in my garden, writes Mr. H. W. Hobden, of Wallington, a Blackbird's nest placed in an extraordinary position; at least, it appeals to me as being a curious site for a bird to choose. It is placed on the top edge of my fence, and rests against my neighbour's shed, which stands about three inches away from the fence. The point which completely baffles me is, how the nest was held together when the birds first started to build! It contains four eggs, and the hen bird is so tame that she will sit whilst anyone examines the nest.

This nest is as Mr. Hobden states. It truly must have been a difficult matter for the birds to make a commencement, which could only have been accomplished by collecting sufficient material to block up the space between his fence and the shed. At the time of my visit the young had been safely reared and had flown; one young one was then in his garden, on a visit to his old home.—H. N.

Chap. XXX.—My Yellow-breasted Robins.

I have selected for the present article a bird which is probably quite unknown to the majority of my readers, except from the writings of Gould. Some years ago I one morning received a letter from a birdy friend, that he had brought from Australia a pair of Yellow-breasted Robins. The letter was very pathetic, for it ran: This is the third time I have attempted to import them, but always so far unsuccessfully. The fourth time had, however, been crowned with success, and a pair had been safely landed in England. Would I have them? Of course, I ought to have said "No; offer them to some more worthy person." Maybe I did a mean and selfish thing, but I wired: "Send them on."

This is a truthful story, and I must confess that my only feeling was one of unmixed rejoicing. I have occasionally indulged in the selfishness of buying half-a-dozen rare birds, but it was, if I remember rightly, the first of the kind that had ever come. My feelings always grow finer as specimens become less rare! The moment I got that letter, my good resolutions melted away like snow in an oven.

About a week later the Yellow Robins turned up. They were in perfect health and the most lovely condition, and when we remember how difficult it is to keep soft-bills in form even in England, we can picture the care required to bring such birds from far off Australia. We have all some small jealousy, I think, at least I trust I am not quite abnormal in this, that I do like to see a Swallow, hear the Cuckoo, and eat a strawberry before any one else each year; though this idiosyncrasy of mine has not quite reached the point of writing to the papers as yet.

I was therefore, I think, pardonably proud that I was the first possessor of a pair of Yellow-breasted Robins, and I forthwith began to study their habits and life history with a view to a future paper thereon. I felt rather like a certain editor, who, when Carlyle died, exclaimed, "Thank God he has died in time for the outer sheet."

A Wee Small Voice.

The first thing that struck me about my new friends was their quietness. Whereas the Blue Robin of America is always on the warble, my yellow friends seemed to have very little to say for themselves, beyond a little plaintive note. It reminded me of a saying of Kingslake, when he was listening to the zither for the first time: "I like that music, it is almost as good as none at all." In shape the Yellow Robins very much resemble their American cousin, the Blue Robin ;they are much of the same size, and their disposition of colour is identical. If for the blue head, back and tail of the Blue Robin you substitute ashen grey; if instead of the reddish breast and dusky throat of the Blue Robin you substitute a white bib and a primrose breast and underparts, then you have master Yellow Robin. The eye is very large and melting, the beak black and shortish, with hairs round the base; feet dark lead colour. The hen can be told from the cock by her wings. In the cock there is a greyish white bar, in the hen it is slate colour.

I feed all my soft-bills on a mixture of my own invention. If any one asks me how I mix it, I reply, as did a celebrated painter: "With my brains." It suits them admirably, as they show by their trim coats and sprightly ways. Of course I always give a moderate supply of mealworms. Unless you are prepared to do so, do not go in for soft-bills.

I gave the Robins what I thought a liberal supply for the first time after a long and trying journey; but they were not by any means suited, I could see. They gobbled them up with lightning-like rapidity, and then sat on their perch with head on one side and a sort of look which seemed to say: "And when are the next coming? Do you call that a meal?" I felt inclined to make the reply that Dr. Vaughan, of Harrow, once made to a certain refractory pupil. Dr. Vaughan was once flogging a young nobleman, who, not being used to such rough treatment, presently got up and asked the headmaster how many cuts he was going to give? Vaughan replied in his most silken voice, "That is for me to decide; Lord F. kneel down again!" I hardened my heart, and walked away, leaving those Robins looking as grouty as King Ahab when he turned his face to the wall and would eat no bread.

When I first obtained them, I put them into a big cage indoors, as the weather was decidedly inclement; so much so, indeed, that the water was nightly frozen into a solid block. They did not seem, however, to feel the cold at all, for they always took a cold tub every morning as soon as the pots were filled. As the weather became warmer I turned them out into a nice sheltered garden aviary in company with some Many-colours. When I go and sit down, they flit about pretending an intense unconsciousness of me and my belongings, as if I was no more interesting than Alexander was to Diogenes, until they have satisfied themselves that I am not inimical, then they become bold, not to say impudent, and hop and peck about my feet in search of unconsidered trifles, and evidently intend that I should consider them as part of my family.

Not Impressed.

As soon as I get up to go, the cock calls his wife, and the last I see is the couple inspecting my remains, and comparing notes—complimentary or otherwise—on my habits and ways of life generally. From their dress and sober manners, I should imagine that in a previous state of existence they belonged to the Quaker persuasion.

I kept them in my possession for some six months, and was growing more and more attached to them, when one sad morning there came to my house, as to David's of old, a certain rich traveller. I took him out and showed him my birds, foolishly laying special emphasis on the rarity of the Yellow Robins. Nobody else in the world had got a pair. Now there are some people to whom such a fact is an irresistible incentive to possession. It was in this case. He asked me what I would take for them. I named what I thought an impossible price; but, alas, he closed with my offer, crying "Done," and "done" I was. There was nothing for it but to go and catch my poor friends; for the man that came that day, though he knows little about birds, likes to possess what other people have not, and he is in the enviable position of being able to talk of my aviaries, my birdrooms, my birds much as the great Porthos when he became Duke of de Bracieux and Pierrefonds, used to talk of "my air," without having to concern himself as to their cost.

As I packed up these Robins I might have given the same account of myself which the sailor coming out of hospital gave in reply to an enquiry of a benevolent priest, who asked him how he felt. "Pretty damned miserable, thank you sir, pretty damned miserable." I felt still more so when a few weeks later I went over to his place, and learnt, in reply to my anxious enquiry, that my poor friends were both dead. Gloom, deep sepulchral gloom, as of Phelegelton settled on my soul. I felt, I am sure, very much as Joseph's brethren must have felt when they said sadly one to another: "We are very guilty concerning our brother."

The Third Section Considered.

We will now pass on to our No. 3 section, and the last, but not by any means the least, in respect either of beauty or of the interesting characteristics of the various inmates. The six species of Foreign birds which are to form this section are as follows:—No. 1 shall be the King Parrakeet, one of the most beautiful specimens of cage birds ever seen. It is clad in a bright costume of red, green, blue, and black. No. 2 shall be the Red-rumped Parrakeet, another beautiful Australian bird, and a very interesting specimen, also clad in different shades of green and with a red patch on the rump; hence his name. No. 3 shall be the Red-headed or Crimson-faced Love Bird, a beautiful bird much smaller than the Parrakeets, and clad in a delicate suit of pale green and a very bright red head. No. 4 shall be the handsome and beautiful Red-headed Gouldian Finch, which, in my opinion, is the prettiest small cage bird imported into this country in anything like decent numbers. No. 5 shall be the Indian Shama, which is not an extraordinary brilliantly coloured bird, as he is clad in black mostly. But as a songster he is as good as any, either British or Foreign; and therefore should make one of the novice's aviary. No. 6 shall be the Pekin Nightingale, a very beautiful little bird in a "coat of many colours," and he is also a hardy little bird and a real good songster.

Now for the cages. For the King a good cage would be one of the following size: 3ft. 6ins. long, 2ft. 6ins. high, and 2ft. wide, with two perches from back to front. Broom handles make very good perches for the King Parrakeet. For the Red-rump a cage 2ft. 6ins. long, 2ft. high, and 15ins. wide is quite large enough, with the perches in the samo position as for the "King," but not so thick. For tho Red-headed Love Bird a stock cage 2ft. long, 18ins. high, and 12ins. wide, is quite large enough, as they are not very active birds.

For the Gouldian a stock cage 2ft. long, 15ins. high, and 12ins. wide, will suit nicely. For the Shama get a cage 3ft. long, 2ft. high, and 15ins. wide, with three perches, two of them near the feeding and the water utensils, and the other perch between the two but higher up. And for the Pekin Nightingale get a cage 2ft. long, 15ins. high, and 10ins. wide, with perches as recommended for the Shama.

Feeding the Foreigners.

As for feeding, No. 3 section is not at all difficult. For the "King" 2 parts sunflower, 1 part hemp, 1 part Canary, as a staple food would suit nicely. Give him a few cayenne pods every other day, and fruit and green food in season, and he will be satisfied. For the Red-rumped Canary and millet and green stuff are about all he requires. If he will take a few sunflower seeds all the better. The Love Bird will do nicely on Canary and millet, and the Gouldian will be satisfied if he gets Canary and millet seeds, and also a spray of millet for him to pick the seeds from. The Indian Shama can be fed on two parts ground biscuits, one part ants' eggs, one part dried flies, mixed up together and prepared with either water or grated carrot or finely chopped lettuce, or any green leaves relished by birds. Give him also a few mealworms daily, and a little raw meat now and again. And for the Pekin a good staple food for him should be as follows:—Two parts ground biscuits, one part dried flies, one of ants' eggs, and prepared as recommended for the Shama. Give him also a few Canary and millet seeds daily, and also a few mealworms and live flies, and they will be greatly relished, and he will thank you in song for them.

I shall not stay any longer over this essay, as I honestly believe that if the novice takes the best of the papers, "Cage Birds and Bird World," and carefully studies the good articles and correspondence in that journal, he will not be very far behind.

The New Mansfield Society.

SIR,—A meeting of the new cage bird society will be held at the Charter Arms, Mansfield, on Tuesday, June 15th, at eight o'clock. Will fanciers please attend, and make the society a success? Come in good numbers, and let us have a good club in Mansfield, and work hand in hand with one another, when, no doubt, it will result in one of the best societies in the Midlands.

A Bramblefinch-Chaffinch Mating Proves Successful.

SIR,—I have managed to cross a cock Bramblefinch with a hen Chaffinch. She laid five eggs, two of them proving fertile. One young was dead in the shell; the other hatched out Saturday morning, June 5, and is alive at the time of writing. But I have small hopes of rearing it, as I have no Canaries hatching just now, and the hen it is under is not feeding. I have also three more eggs under, off the same pair; the hen started to sit on June 4th.

G. DICKINSON.

More Twins.

SIR,—As a friend and fancier, I had the pleasure of visiting the bird-room of Mr. Barclay, of Tevenure, Dublin, a few evenings ago, and had one of the greatest surprises I have ever had since I took up the fancy. I might say, as a very old fancier himself, Mr. Barclay has had experience of this on one or two occasions before, so it is not new to him. He had a nest of eggs (Yorkshires), which the hen left three days previous to their being due to hatch. He put the eggs, three, under another hen, and in due time two birds came out, but the third egg, which was very large, showed no sign of life. He broke the shell, and to his surprise there were two birds in same, fully matured. Mr. Barclay, as is well known, is one of the foremost breeders of birds in Ireland, and is not one to manufacture a sensation. I myself examined the shell, and can vouch that all is as I have written. I have a recollection of having seen a report in CAGE BIRDS of something similar happening some time ago in England, and would be glad to know if it is correct, also if any fancier in Ireland has ever had the same experience.

[Other instances of "twins" have from time to time been recorded in our columns.—EDITOR.]

Thrushes' Eccentric Nesting Habits.

SIR,—Having occasion to visit Carham, a wayside station on the Berwick and Kelso branch, N.E.R., recently, my attention was drawn to a nest of five healthy young Thrushes, conspicuous by its eccentricity. A conversation with the official in charge at the station revealed the following facts. Passing a few wagons in the siding the other Saturday morning he noticed a few pieces of straw on the outside of the sole of an ordinary goods wagon. All down trains stopped just opposite the spot. There is only the one siding for wagons at the station and the platforms do not run parallel with each other. Noticing a couple of Thrushes carrying a few more straws, he was then convinced the first straws were the foundation of their nest. This was on the Saturday forenoon, and judge of his surprise on passing the same spot on the Sunday forenoon, to find the nest complete in every respect, and nicely earth-lined. It was exposed to all weather, it being very wet and snowy at the time, and the nest was only an arm's length or so from the passengers. All went well until the third egg was laid, when the official realised that the wagon was empty and would have to be removed the following day. This was on the Wednesday. What could be done to save the nest and eggs from destruction? An idea he soon got, which worked successfully. He removed nest and eggs bodily, and took them about twenty yards along the siding to the end wagon which would be a few more days in the siding. The only difficulty was knowing how to fix the nest. The wagon was braked tight, and he placed the nest and three eggs between the brake arm and the wagon frame as best he could—still at the platform side of the wagon. Detecting the change, the old ones were backward in visiting their nest all that afternoon, but next day they again took to it, the result being that another two eggs were laid. There the hen sat her time and hatched all five, and now four of them are ready to leave the nest, one being found dead on the railway when a week old, it having been pulled out during the night. Four times the nest has had to be removed to allow for the changing of wagons. It was quite a novelty to sit on the platform seat or in a train and watch the pair feeding their young. Evidently there seems some special attraction about Carham for Thrushes, as since this pair built two nests have been toppled off the axles of goods wagons when same have been removed. Again, some workmen asphalting one of the platforms at present placed their wheel-barrow over some loose coke; they went away for the week-end one Saturday, only to find on lifting the barrow on the Monday a Thrush's nest completely built amongst the coke.

The Progress of the Scotch Fancy Canary.

SIR,—I cannot understand how Canary fanciers do not enter heartily into the breeding of the Scotch Fancy Canary. A grand pair of Canaries will prove a paying venture if they are from a reliable strain, and breed, say, half a dozen, at £5 each which makes £30. Not bad work. Some fanciers get such remuneration. A paying hobby is doubly interesting.

A BREEDER.

How a Hen Canary was Cured of "Sweating."

SIR,—With your kind permission may I relate, for the benefit of the readers of CAGE BIRDS, an experience I have had with two nests of young Canaries? I had one nest of four, and the hen was neglecting and sweating the poor things so much that I had almost lost all hope of keeping them alive, when a happy thought occurred to me. Having another hen with five a couple of days older, which was feeding well, it occurred to me that by placing the nest of five with the hen which was sweating and neglecting the four it might possibly—with the five being so much larger—force her off the nest, and cause her to attend to her duties as a mother. To my delight the experiment proved an unqualified success, as both nests are ready for leaving in splendid condition. I wonder if this experiment has often been tried amongst Canary breeders?

EMANUEL WHITTAKER.

A Good Beginning.

SIR,—I used to look down a certain newspaper to see if I could note anything about rabbits, etc., and I saw a mention of CAGE BIRDS, so I went out to see if I could get a copy. I ordered one for the next week, which was March 6th. In the result I bought two Yorkshire Canaries, and made a double-breeding cage, and now I have four nice young Canaries, a month old. I also bought "Canary Breeding for Beginners." All the rest I want I get from the answers to queries in CAGE BIRDS. I made two breeding cages the same as shown on page 9 in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," one 3ft. the other 4ft. long. I have had several people in to see my birds, and they can hardly believe I made the cages, as they say they see the same in "Club Row." But I show them they are made of a shade thicker wood, and are screwed and glued, and not nailed. One cost me 10s., the other 12s. to make complete. The wire fronts I make as well. I am still making more cages, and now my friends are all going in for Canary breeding. I tell them to take in CAGE BIRDS, and then they can know all they want to. The hen Canary that had the four young ones (now a month old) is sitting on four more eggs. I give my best wishes to CAGE BIRDS.

W. H. STONE.

Breeding the Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrid.

SIR,—I was surprised to see in "Twitterings" that you had heard about my clutch of eggs from Goldfinch and Bullfinch being fertile. They have all hatched. The green Canary hen has four; a yellow-marked hen has one, and a mule. The Bullfinch has sat four days over her time, and has hatched two young mules, but I don't know whether she will feed them. The Goldfinch has fed her all the time she has been sitting. She was caught young, and cage moulted. She has been close to my breeding Goldfinches through the winter, and I noticed she was on friendly terms with this one early in April. The last week in April I put them in a breeding cage. I covered the floor with moss and dry grass, and gave her a nest box, and made her a nest. The first week in May she started to build her nest, and the Goldfinch carried building material to the nest, they being on very friendly terms all the time. On May 13th I saw her call to pair, and they paired well. On May 15th she laid her first egg, and she laid her fifth egg just at the time I had no hen to put the eggs under. One hen had Goldfinch-Canary mules, the other hen had Canaries—both laid on May 22. On the 24th I gave them the Bullies' eggs. To-day, June 6, they are all hatched, and the hens are good feeders. I have been interested in the hints on hybrid breeding, and I have taken CAGE BIRDS in for about four years. This is my first attempt to breed hybrids. I think if fanciers, when trying this cross, would put the Bullie hens to Goldfinches which are proved breeders, there would be more bred. I shall be looking in CAGE BIRDS every week to see if some one else gets a hatch like mine. Wishing the readers of CAGE BIRDS every success,

A Fountain Bath.

SIR,—I am sending you herewith a sketch of a fountain bath, which I find very useful among my birds. It is also very interesting to watch while they are bathing. First, it is necessary to purchase a strong tin (size as shown in illustration); and a copper tube with joints soldered, riveted or brazed. A reservoir of this size and kind, with all the joints tight, will throw a spray 3ft. 6in. high, and one that will last for three-quarters of an hour. The bath at the top can be made of any size to suit one's convenience. I personally use one that is large enough to permit of four birds bathing in it at once. I also find it very useful for birds that are shy at bathing. They will flutter through the spray, finally coming down into bath while the water drops on them. The fountain can be slid in the bottom of the cage, or can be stood upright in an aviary. The air should be pumped into the valve on the top of the reservoir by means of a bicycle pump until enough pressure is obtained.

A Benefit Singing Match in Lancashire.

SIR,—With regard to a benefit open singing contest recently held at a certain town in Lancashire, I understand the person for whom this benefit match was got up has up to the present only received 5s. 6d., notwithstanding it was stated there had been a record entry (over 50 birds at 1s. each), and also a number of tickets sold. I think this is a very disheartening result for the fanciers who came from far and near to try and make the match a success, so as to help a brother fancier in need. I am told that the prizes had nothing at all to do with the entrance and ticket money, as they were bought by the club. I trust some light will be thrown on the matter for the satisfaction of the brother fanciers who came to help in the good cause.

A NOVICE FANCIER.

Proposed New Cage Bird Society for Doncaster and District.

SIR—It has been suggested by several bird fanciers that a cage bird society be formed for Doncaster and District. Personally, I think it is quite time we Doncaster people made a move, not only in exhibiting, but to try to raise the interest in the proper treatment and breeding of cage birds to the highest possible standard. Gathering from the last Cage Bird Exhibition held in Doncaster, we are in a district containing plenty of good material essential for the holding of a successful open show, for we are quite in the hot-bed of the Fancy, both in Canaries and in British birds. I should be pleased to have suggestions from fanciers interested in the above, so that we can get to business at once, and be able to hold shows eventually equal to any in the county. Hurry up, old fanciers, put your shoulder to once more, and let us see what can be done.

G. BESCOBY.

Fertile and Unfertile Eggs.

SIR,—Could you or any of the numerous readers of CAGE BIRDS kindly let me know how to tell a fertilised egg from an unfertilised one? Suppose, for instance, you had two eggs, one from a hen who had no cock bird running with her, and one from a hen who was with a cock bird, the said two eggs to be broken into separate vessels. I presume they would appear different? I should be pleased with this information. I find that nothing is too large nor too small for CAGE BIRDS to deal with, and I wish it the success it deserves.

A. J. BROWN.

If the two eggs had not been sat upon, there would be no difference (to the eye) in their appearance. A change visible to the unaided eye only takes place after the fertilised egg has been incubated for a number of hours, and then is not easy of detection, as it merely comprises the extension of the area of the "germinal disc"—or "blastoderm," as at this stage it is called (the spot of living matter—in a fowl's egg about the size of a hemp seed—found on the surface of the yolk). After a few days' incubation, the change becomes clearly visible, blood-vessels radiating from the yolk (round which the blastoderm spreads) to the shell, giving the cloudy appearance so eagerly looked forward to by the fancier.—EDITOR.

A Redpoll-Bullfinch Marriage.

SIR,—We think many of your readers would like to hear about our hybrid breeding. Well, in the first place, we had two Bullie hens, and just about a month ago, to our surprise, we found one of the Bullies dead on the aviary floor. We thought that mice had got into the aviary, but when we had referred to CAGE BIRDS we found an article stating when the breeding season is on, if you had two Bullies together, the one which was the most anxious to breed would kill the other. This we have found to be true, as we have experienced it already. The other Bullie has mated with a Redpoll, which helped to build the nest. On May 27 we found an egg in the nest (cokernut shell). She laid again on the 28th and again on the 29th of May. She would sit, and to our sorrow we had all the Canary hens about due to hatch! We think they are fertile, as the Redpoll pays so much attention to her. The other Britishers are frightened to go near. She is building again, and we hope we shall have a foster mother this time. We have had a lot of clear nests with mule breeding. We have six Canaries on the perch, thirteen in the nest, and three Goldfinch mules. We will write again about Bullie. We have put the Bullie's eggs in sawdust, and turn them every two days. We have been offered a good price for the Redpoll-Bullie pair. We hope this may interest some of your readers.

CANARY QUERIES.

Unfertile Yorkshire.

Garge.—Am afraid there are quite a large number of breeders just now in the same boat who would like to know how to avoid those apparently quite fresh eggs after they have undergone incubation for a fortnight. The explanation is simply that they have never been fertilised by the male, and the most likely cause in your case is the variable weather in late spring, which kept the cocks backward. When preparing birds for next nests, add a third part rape seed to the staple of Canary, and replace the rape in the mixture for occasional use with an almost equal bulk of hemp. Also add a sprinkling of gold of pleasure seed to the soft food you give, and supply a little dandelion every day. With this treatment you should have better luck in the next nests.

Young Dying.

D. W.—I suspect the hens stopping feeding is the cause of your having so many young die at from four to fifteen days old. You do not say whether the young have food in the crop when they die. Your diet is certainly not correct, as such a varied mixture of seeds is not suitable for a regular diet. A staple of plain Canary in the hoppers, with a little summer rape given separately each day; or, as an alternative, a mixture of three parts Canary to one rape in the hoppers is far better. See reply to "Helen Green" in our last issue, and carry out those instructions when you should save most or all. If the deaths do not cease, write again and state as clearly as possible how the young appear when they die. I would also advise you in such case to get a post mortem on one as early as possible, in order to discover whether there exists any contagious disease or not.

Cages and Food.

Home Pet.—(1) Brass cages, when kept quite clean and well sanded, are not in themselves dangerous to birds. But they are certainly risky in that any temporary neglect or oversight may give stray drops of moisture a chance to cause deposits of verdigris to appear on the brass, which the birds may pick off and thus be poisoned; (2) Of course, the way to make your Canary consume Canary seed more freely is to give it "Hobson's choice"—Canary seed or nothing. Give it only plain Canary seed in its box, and give it a pinch of rape separately each day, or half a teaspoonful every second day. If your bird is a German-bred Roller, it will have been accustomed to a more liberal supply of rape than is usually favoured for other varieties. Let it have a free supply of green food now. The moulting is probably due to the variable weather, which might have affected it. See it is free from draughts; give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry in it every second day, a few grains of hemp on the alternate days, and add twenty drops of Chemical Food to its water for a few days.

The Pet of the Family.

P.H. No. 3 Sheffield.—Such dietetic indiscretion as "bits from the table" have undoubtedly been the undoing of the bird, and being in an open wire cage, it is not unlikely be contracted a chill during the recent snap of unseasonable cold which helped to bring matters to a crisis. See it is kept in a comfortable place, not necessarily a warm one, and out of reach of all draughts. Also see its cage is free from red mites. Put it on a diet of plain Canary only, with a tiny piece of bread sopped in milk and sprinkled with maw seed daily for a week. Limit diet solely to this for the first week, and during the time give twenty drops whisky, six syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in the drinking water two days in every three. After the first week give half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and omit the bread and milk on those days, and give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. Continue this for a week, and then put it on the usual diet, viz., a mixture of three parts Canary to one summer rape as a staple, twice a week a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga, given separately, and on two other days a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or some other kind of egg food. Every day give a spray of chickweed, groundsel, watercress, or a bit of lettuce or dandelion. For a week or two mix three or four drops of sherry in its soft food each time, and sprinkle a few grains of gold of pleasure seed over it, and add to its drinking water, two or three times a week, two drops each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian. Keep cage supplied with clean gritty sand. In future, restrict diet to the above. Glad to bear your other bird is now doing well.

Proposed Aviary.

Donnybrook Fair.—I read your query to say the press is six feet by four inches wide and no height is mentioned; nor is anything said about shelves—whether absent or otherwise. If it contains no shelves it resolves itself into a floor space of two square feet, which is only sufficient for two to three birds. Yet you ask if it will accommodate seven pairs of birds for breeding. If only four inches wide (from back to front) it is too narrow for birds to move about with any degree of comfort, and I would certainly not advise you to carry out your plan of conversion unless you could make a kind of wire flight in front of it, so as to make the structure at the least a foot wide. Canary breeding may be, and often is, carried on in very unfavourable conditions, and will succeed for a time in the face of apparently insurmountable difficulties, but it is scarcely humane to attempt it in space so narrow as you suggest. If you could send a rough sketch of the press (showing shelves, if any exist) and its measurements in each direction, I might be able to suggest some useful plan of conversion.

Kind of Colour Food.

Constant Reader.—No, I certainly do not advise you to use cayenne, of which you send a sample, for colour-feeding. It was this kind of pepper that was used when colour-feeding first came in vogue, and which gave rise to so much objection to the practice on the score of cruelty. This kind of colour-feeding, however, with all its attendant cruelties and objections, has been quite supplanted by the modern sweet peppers, which are a totally different thing to that you send. If you get a little pure tasteless pepper from an advertiser in our columns and compare it with what you have, you cannot fail to see the difference. I doubt whether there is really much to be gained by hot pepper at all, but as many still believe a small proportion of hot essential to the best results, you will find the following equal to anything you require. One pound of pure tasteless, two ounces of best hot Natal, four ounces soft sugar. Thoroughly mix and blend all together. To use, begin by mixing a teaspoonful in one egg and sufficient biscuit powder, and gradually increase the quantity to two heaped teaspoonfuls. When the birds are nearly through the moult, decrease the quantity again to one teaspoonful of colour.

Continual Moulting.

Ted.—You should well examine all crevices about the cage for the presence of red mite, as I fancy these are partly the cause of the bird's condition. The principal cause, however, is a combination of draughts and great variation of heat. Keep him further away from the window, but not near the fire nor over a burning lamp or gas jet, so that it will be in a temperature as equable as possible night and day. See it is quite out of reach of draughts. Continue your present staple diet, but give in addition half a teaspoonful of hemp twice a week, and the same quantity of crushed sponge cake, in which four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion have been well mixed, every second day. Give a little green food daily, and allow it to bathe as often as it likes in fine weather. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts for two or three days, then dissolve a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine in two tablespoonfuls of port wine, and give twenty drops of this in the water every second day until the moulting ceases. As soon as it is sufficiently recovered, reduce the sponge cake to twice a week, and omit the additions to it.

A Bad Beginning.

E. H. Elliott.—Yes, I am afraid your curiosity contributed in some measure to the failure of your birds' first attempt. Leave them more to themselves for the next attempt, and I am sure they will do better. Your feeding is also incorrect, as a teaspoonful of soft food night and morning is about double the quantity you should give any pair that are not feeding young. For the next round adhere to these simple directions: If the hen shows no signs of laying again, remove nest altogether for a few days. Add a few grains of Epsom salts to the drinking water for a day or two. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and give separately every second day a teaspoonful of hemp and a few grains only of inga, and on the alternate days a teaspoonful of egg food with a pinch of gold of pleasure added. You may use the soft food you name if you like, but in that case add also a slight sprinkling of soft sugar. Give a little dandelion and chickweed each day. Continue this treatment until the eggs are laid, then reduce the diet to seed only, with a scrap of green food and soft food once or twice a week. About half a teaspoonful of the latter will be sufficient at this time.

A Panting Cinnamon.

W. W. G. H.—The Cinnamon hen is probably in an overfed condition, which is largely responsible for the panting and apparent signs of asthma. You give far too much egg food for a bird that is not breeding. First of all see she is kept in a fairly regular temperature, and quite free from any draughts. Then treat her for two weeks only as advised to "Asthma" for Yorkshires in this issue. At the end of the fortnight give a staple diet of three parts Canary to one rape, and twice a week give separately a few grains of hemp, and on two other days half a teaspoonful of egg food with four drops of sherry in it and a few grains of inga or gold of pleasure—first one and then the other—sprinkled over it. If you continue to use the egg food you name, mix an equal bulk of crushed sponge cake in it for this bird. Give a little green food daily. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week, and every second day for another week if necessary.

Tried and Found Wanting.

Stocker.—(1) A hen that has been mated for five weeks certainly cannot be termed an untried one. You do not say whether she was mated last year. If so, it is possible she might have been overtaxed, and consequently epoilt for this season; otherwise, I fear she must be a disappointing subject, which will do no good as a breeder. Separate her for a fortnight, and during that time feed and treat as follows. During first week limit diet to plain Canary, with a free supply of green food, preferably chickweed or groundsel. In the water give six drops syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day. In second week add half a teaspoonful of summer rape to diet every day, and every second day give a few grains of hemp and inga, and on the alternate days half a teaspoonful of egg food or crushed sponge cake with a pinch of gold of pleasure seed added. In the drinking water give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every second day. At the end of the fortnight try mating her again with a fresh, vigorous, young cock. (2) About a week is the limit one can really quite depend upon a bird's egg keeping good for ultimate incubation. Under very favourable circumstances they may be kept longer and will hatch out, but it is best not to keep them for longer than four or five days if it can be avoided. It will not make any material difference to the eggs to leave them in nest until mid-day, as you say.

Yorkshire Hen Unwell.

Asthma.—I feel quite certain your hen is not troubled with asthma at all. It is clearly in an overfed condition generally, and this is probably its only trouble. Doubtless your feeding has been too generous, but you say nothing on this point. In its present condition it will be quite useless for breeding for some weeks, and as the season is already getting advanced I should advise you to give up all hopes of mating her this year, and get her into good sound condition for next season. Place her in a large flight where she can get ample and vigorous exercise, and for the next few weeks, or until she is reduced to reasonable proportions and has become quite active, restrict her diet to plain Canary seed only, and an unlimited supply of chickweed, groundsel and green plantain stalks. Keep cage floor clean, well strewn with gritty sand, and if the hen is kept alone, limit the supply of Canary seed to a small teaspoonful each day, and keep the cage free from any accumulation of waste seed on the floor. Once each week you may give a half teaspoonful of rape, and once a similar quantity of egg food. But do not make any further additions. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and in the second week give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. Repeat the two weeks' treatment over again for a month or six weeks as may appear necessary. Do not increase the diet until a week or so has elapsed after the fat has disappeared, and she has become quite active.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Two Oil Glands.

J. R. Cinnamon.—I do not quite know what part of the bird's anatomy you refer to when you say both oil glands are swollen, or whether you connect the "mattery" substance coming from the vent with an oil gland. But in any case, your painting with iodine is, or was, doubtless hastening the end, as I suspect it has not withstood the treatment until now. The bird was plainly very much out of condition, and you should have given full details of its diet and how it was affected in general to enable a really satisfactory reply to be given. If it is still living, put it at once on a diet of plain Canary and give a small piece of bread sopped in milk and sprinkled with soft sugar daily until the bowels become more nearly normal. Each day for a week put one drop of warm castor oil in the vent, and during same time add six drops each syrup of rhubarb and syrup of buckthorn to the drinking water. Give this for two consecutive days at first, and every second day after for the remainder of the week. On the alternate days give a pinch of maw seed and add twenty drops of whisky to its water. After the first week add a pinch of summer rape to diet every second day, and stop the bread and milk on those days, gradually bringing the bird on the ordinary diet frequently advised. Give no green food for the first week, after that gradually bring it on to a spray of chickweed daily. If there appears a "ripe head" on the swelling on oil gland—not otherwise—prick it with a clean needle, gently press out contents, and anoint it a few times with carbolised vaseline or boracic ointment.

Brevities.

Clear Eggs (Bacon, Liverpool).—The sudden drop in temperature was probably the cause of your getting so many clear eggs in the second round. When the birds were going to nest, you ought in the circumstances to have given a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga every second day, and on the alternate days the same quantity of egg food or sponge cake with a pinch of gold of pleasure mixed in it, between each pair. A leaf or two of dandelion might also have been given daily in preference to watercress or lettuce. If you allow any to go to nest again this season, treat in this way for a week at least before you think they will lay again.

Cock with Two Hens (Don't Know).—When No. 2 hen has laid her complement of eggs, remove the cock to a cage, and keep him alone until the young of No. 1 hen are from fourteen to twenty days' old when you may return him for the next brood. The exact time for returning him depends upon his temperament. If he is a good natured, quiet-going bird, return him at the earlier age, as he will take upon himself the task of helping to feed the young; if he is a rowdy sort of chap who worries the hens about, it will be best to keep him away until the hen is really ready to go to nest again, especially if the hen goes on feeding well whilst he is away.

Disappointments (W.M.).—The addled egg was in all probability due to its getting chilled during incubation. Cure, of course, is out of the question. The best preventive is to see the hen has a nice, cosy and well-made nest when she is set. The young one dying at fourteen days old was probably because the hen ceased feeding to go to nest again. For the remedy see some other replies this week. At that age the young one might easily have been reared by hand. I should say the egg that disappeared was dragged out of the nest and broken, and you failed to notice it on the floor. Give the hen that breaks the seeds and drops kernel on floor a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for a day or two, and afterwards six drops of dandelion juice and two each tincture of steel and tincture of gentian every second day for a week.

Yorkshires Off Song ("Peakite").—You do not say whether the birds appear well or ill, nor give any idea how you feed. Try following treatment for a fortnight or so, and if there is no improvement write again, and give a few particulars. As staple diet give a mixture of three parts canary to one part of summer rape seed. Give separately a few grains of hemp and inga twice a week, and every second day give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry mixed in it, and sprinkled over with gold of pleasure seed. Every day give a little green food—preferably chickweed or dandelion. Keep cages clean, strewn with gritty sand, out of draughts, and free from red mites. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts for a few days, and afterwards twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and four of tincture of gentian every second day for a week.

Deformed Toes (Yadnum).—The only remedy is to arrange them on a narrow strip of card, placed underneath, and the toes bound on to it in an extended position, or to arrange a bit of thin wrapping wire around the leg and bringing the other end round under the toes in such a way as to support them in an extended posture. Both these methods require very careful manipulation, and some amount of skill. I believe both have been illustrated in our columns, but I cannot tell in what issues the illustrations appeared. The bareness on abdomen can only have an indirect bearing on the condition of toe, as showing a weakly, ill-nourished specimen generally. Give it a little egg food every second day for a few weeks after it is on seed, and add twenty drops of chemical food to its water on the alternating days.

Weakly Roller (S. or I. K., Cardiff).—The young Roller which is so unsteady on its legs at five weeks old, whilst its three nestmates are doing well, is almost certain to be one that was hatched a day or two later than the rest, and in consequence never got a fair share of the food, and has grown up half starved and weakly. As it is now probably able to feed itself, give it a small quantity of egg food with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and also a little scalded rape seed and a few grains of cracked hemp, each day, in addition to an unlimited supply of canary, until it gets fairly strong. If this extra feeding causes any constipation, give a tiny scrap of chickweed or groundsel each day. If this does not soon bring about an improvement, add twelve drops chemical food to its water.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

A Promising Magpie.

Napoleon.—I gave full instructions for feeding such young birds as Jackdaws, Magples, etc., only the other week. Briefly, scald and mash some puppy biscuits (or a good brand of dog-meal, such as "Melox," or Spratt's), and mix with same a finely-chopped hard-boiled egg—one part of the latter to three of the former. Give him also mealworms, and smallish garden worms cut into suitable pieces; occasionally also give some raw lean beef or mutton, or rabbit flesh, or cooked tripe, etc., cut into tiny pieces. A mouse or a young Sparrow occasionally will be relished. Feed when adult on similar lines, but mix table scraps with the scalded meal. A Magpie is hardly suitable for a cage, unless it be an exceedingly big one; he looks and does better in a small aviary. A pianoforte packing case I have seen transformed into an excellent place for a Magpie, Jay, etc. Very thick perches are needed (broom handles, for instance). A tin bottom is best if kept thickly covered with peat moss litter. A Magpie, properly treated, makes a grand pet. Of course, they don't "sing"; but they talk and mimic very amusingly. Repeat short, catchy sentences to the bird, until he picks them up.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

The Feather Twisting Habit.

J. Pearce.—I do not know anything to cure this annoying habit, once a bird becomes confirmed in it, except a change of environment—a sort of change of occupation. I had an exhibition Goldfinch once which would sit for hours chewing away at the flights of his left wing—he never touched the other—while my hair (and gorge) rose at him. I tried every remedy I could think of (and was told), but without avail. I used to soak the few twisted feather-ends in very hot water, to take out the curl, just before popping him in the travelling-case off to the show, and trust to the judge seeing him in the morning before the novelty of his new situation had worn off, and he had begun to pass the time away by "feather curling" once again. I tried soaking the tips in undiluted quassia infusion; but he soon got to like that immensely. Then I tried bitter apple—awful tasting stuff—but though he pulled a wry "face" at first, he soon got fond of that also. You could try your bird with these things, at the same time endeavouring to distract his attention by providing seeding weeds, etc., for him to pull to pieces, or a soft perch that he can whittle away like a Parrot (many of my own Goldies are fond of doing this, and I encourage them). Or pair him up with a hen Canary, or, failing this, throw him in a flight or aviary amongst other birds, in the hope that he may eventually forget the trick. Goldfinches are naturally lively, always pecking about here and there, and I firmly believe lack of employment engenders the feather-twisting habit.

Hand-rearing a Nightingale.

A.G.F.—If you know nothing of the keeping of insectivorous birds, the Nightingale is not a good subject to make a start with. You ought, for instance, to hand-rear some Thrushes, and so gain experience. That young Nightingales can be successfully hand-reared is quite correct. If you mix best quality ants' eggs (freed from all rubbish) with equal parts of crushed maizena wafers and hard-boiled yolk of egg (beaten up fine), you have a food which will accomplish this. As the youngsters grow, at the time of feeding chop up some mealworms and add to the portion required. The food must be moistened to a sloppy consistency (like cream) with new milk. The food, also, must be always quite sweet and fresh, and now and again a pinch of powdered cuttlefish bone should be stirred amongst it. All the small flies and grubs you can capture, with smooth caterpillars, should also be given. If you can get some live ants' eggs (they are to be bought), use them freely; they will bring you success. Keep the youngsters snug and cosy. For general directions consult the many recent replies on hand-feeding. The young birds should be taken when nine or ten days old, and kept in a warm place, especially at night, and scrupulously clean. They are tender mouthed, and care should be exercised not to hurt them when feeding.

About a Crossbill .

Miss Gray.—Yes, it is practically certain that the Crossbills recently offered for sale were imported from the Continent. Still, that does not necessarily prevent them being exhibited in British bird classes; not many of those shown are caught this side the water. A Crossbill is not a rare bird; it is generally a winter visitor to the southern parts of Great Britain (though nests have been found there), frequenting the forests of Scotland in fair numbers. Most are shown in their wild (i.e., red plumage). After a moult in captivity their colour changes to a yellowish green. The comparative amount and depth of the red colour is said to form a reliable index to this bird's age. Your bird may be given for seed, sunflower, hemp, and Canary seed; and for animal food three or four mealworms daily, with any other insects you can get. A few berries (haw, privet, black, and so on), also the core and pips of apples, smashed nuts of various kinds (walnuts, crack nuts, etc.), and fruit are relished. Offer him any of the other seeds or seed mixtures in general use now and again; also small maize, dari, wheat, and the like. Sometimes he will eat a little, and variety is good. The Crossbill will find a great fund of amusement, and a supply of food also, in a few fir and pine cones, if you can get them with the seed in. He will also find you some employment in providing him with new perches, for he will use his spare moments in chewing these up. It is good for him, too, to have exercise for his curious and powerful mandibles. You will, I think, find him an amusing and interesting bird when tame. Don't give the fir, etc., cones in a "green" state. Gather them ripe, when about to open; if necessary lay them in a moderately warm place (such as a cool oven) until they open.

Colour-feeding Thrush & Blackie.

Newmarket.—It is rather early yet to be thinking about colour-feeding; another month and you should still be in good time. I am compelled to say that I certainly think it necessary to colour-feed both Thrushes and Blackbirds for present-day competition. There is no real need to give a Thrush, or any other British bird, hot pepper. Sweet (tasteless) pepper is quite sufficient. It is a moot point whether the use of hot pepper is of advantage with any bird; some Canary fanciers hold that it "fixes" the colour to a certain extent, i.e., that the artificial colour produced by the admixture of sweet and hot pepper is less liable to fade than that produced by sweet pepper alone. Some fanciers of my acquaintance deny there is any ground for this belief. I never knew a softbill bird yet that would not eat colour-food (sweet). Of course, it is necessary to begin with a very tiny quantity, as the change in the colour of the food (and this alone) makes them shy of it unless very gradually brought about. The bird should be kept in a not too well-lighted spot, but out of direct rays of light, especially the rays of the sun. How strong the colour-food should be given depends on the natural colour of the bird. To give a jonque Thrush (naturally a deep brown), the colour-food extra strong, would be to make him unsightly. Such a bird only needs sufficient to slightly enhance its natural colour, and put a gloss on its plumage. With certain birds (Mules, chiefly) I have used the colour-food one in two—perhaps even stronger, though I don't think it had any good effect. One in four (one teaspoonful of pepper to four of food) is strong, and sufficient for most purposes. Perhaps one in six may be quite enough for your Thrush. It must be continued until the moult is right over; for about a fortnight (to be safe) after you cease to find cast feathers in the cage. The last part to finish is generally the head, and the pepper should be given for some little while after pen feathers (or quills) cease to be noticeable thereabouts.

Brevities.

Goldfinches and Their Young (M.F.R.).—The answer given "C. B. Morgan" this week applies exactly to your own case. There are no "precautions"; in fact, the less you interfere, or even "hang around," the better your chances of ultimate success.

Strength of Colour-food (Yokel).—Personally, I commence with only a trace of colour-food in the egg-food, and work up to a proportion of one in six, which I increase to one in four (slightly over than under) when the feathers are commencing to fall freely. I use the same strength for all my Mules and Hybrids. Mr. Bancroft's recent practical article should help you greatly.

A Case of a Siskin (B.E.).—Probably the Siskin has been indulging too freely in egg-food—they are demons after it, as a rule. Take him from the hen while she sits, feed plainly, and give for 24 hours a dose of saline medicine (as much sulphate of soda as will cover a shilling, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water). You seem to be giving a great deal of hemp, seeing there are no young to feed.

Food for Greenfinch Hen (C. B. Morgan).—The main things the Greenfinch hen will use as feeding materials are the seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's-purse, grass, and groundsel, and a plentiful supply of these is essential. They won't look at "soft foods," as a rule; but, of course, the usual seeds are heavily drawn upon (sunflower, hemp, canary, rape, teazle, etc.),

Chaffinch and a Linnet (E.E.).—It is rather a peculiar mating—distinctly speculative, so to speak. If, however, the cock Chaffinch had cordial feelings towards the other hen Linnet, I see no reason why he should not entertain the same towards this second hen, seeing that his first love has so incontinently left home. Nesting in a cage is much more doubtful than in an aviary; and July is certainly late. But you can only try, if the delay is unavoidable, and hope for the best.

Goldfinch's Bad Plumage (Miss W.).—I think your guess is quite correct, and that some insect is actually troubling the bird—the red mite, in fact. See reply to "W. Carlton" this week. You would also be well repaid by reading the matter on "Parasites" in the chapter on bird diseases in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL (post free 8d. from this office).

A Mule Problem (Action Hay).—Under the circumstances you detail it would not be possible for the Canary to have fertilised that particular egg. I should very much like to have an opportunity of seeing the youngster if it is reared. See the editorial footnote to your letter. I should think a "Mule" bred from a Mule would only be of value as a curiosity; it is difficult to see what value it has for show (competitive) purposes.

Identity of Eggs (C. Fearn).—It is useless sending bits of egg-shell to be identified. It is often, indeed, very difficult to name eggs even when a perfect specimen is forthcoming. Have no means of judging the size, but the "bits" seem to me to be those of a Linnet's egg, or a Greenfinch's; probably the former. Why not have described the nest and its situation? I doubt whether the other nest would be that of a Hawfinch; more likely to be that of a Missel Thrush. The egg of the latter bird corresponds to your description, while "brown above, ash colour below" would roughly fit this bird, which, however, is spotted on the breast.

Rearing Young Finches (R.H.R.).—You did wrong to withhold egg-food. Hen Canaries, when rearing nestling Finches (such as Linnets and Bullfinches) should have the same diet as would be given for the rearing of young Canaries. I have often had success myself, when feeding on egg-food, with seeding heads of shepherd's-purse and chickweed ad. libitum (the usual seeds, of course—hemp, rape, canary, etc., in addition).

A Hen Canary (New Beginner).—You won't do any good until the hen gets into condition; pity she had that illness. I advise you to separate the couple for about 10 days, and feed the hen well, allowing a little hemp and niger daily, while into her teaspoonful of egg-food mix five or six drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. Shake together in a bottle a tablespoonful of best glycerine and good gin, and give for two days, and on alternate days afterwards, a small teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water (until paired up again).

A Feeding Matter (W.H.S.).—As regards breeding from Mules, note a letter this week in the correspondence columns. At a month old, Canaries are too young to do without soft food, but wean them from egg-food on to bread and milk sop (make sure it is always fresh and sweet). Give the crushed seed in addition, and gradually commence to leave uncrushed grains amongst it, which they will soon learn to shell. Give water sparingly at first, just lightly coloured with chemical food. The only green-foods I like for young birds are the seeding kinds.

A Young Magpie's Liberty (W. J. W.).—I have heard and read of hand-reared Magpies which have had their liberty about house and grounds, and not "strolled away." Personally, I have not tried the experiment. I should feel inclined to clip a few flight feathers. I can say this (though it sounds like fiction) that I recently opened wide the two doors of my own Magpie's cage (not a hand-reared bird) for three days, and the bird declined to accept its liberty—anyway, it is still with me. I wanted to use its cage for other birds.

A Linnet Matter (W.S.).—If you are certain of the sex of your Linnets (hens when in breeding condition sometimes sing quite well in captivity), then their "shy" singing must be due to shyness, which will no doubt wear off after they have been housemoulted. Your management is good. I can only suggest that you make a mixture of hemp, niger and maw seeds in equal parts, and give a small teaspoonful on alternate days for two or three weeks. They ought to have a little green-food daily—preferably seeding dandelion, chickweed, shepherd's-purse, or groundsel (or vary them).

Nightingales for Australia (T. E. P.).—I know that Nightingales have been sent over to Australia from England; therefore, there seems no reason why you should not personally succeed in taking one or two out, providing you have an adequate supply of a good insectivorous food, and whatever live foods you can accommodate—mealworms in any case. Of course, the 'Gales would need to be thoroughly "meated off"; well-caged birds would be the best. The breeding of mealworms is a lengthy subject, and you should get the back number of CAGE BIRDS containing an article on "British Birds," by Mr. C. Houlton, wherein you will find all the information you require.

From the Nest (Puzzled).—You have made a huge mistake. The Goldfinch does not breed in holes in walls, neither has it a "yellowish back, black head, and red breast." The owner of the nest was, in reality, a Redstart (a delicate insectivorous bird), and your Canaries will not rear the young should the two eggs you abstracted hatch out. As you frankly state you have had no experience with British birds, I cannot advise you to try to hand-rear any of the Redstarts. The method would be that advised "A.G.F." this week.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

Violet Tanagers.

"Thank You."—You appear to have either an adult female or an immature male, most probably the former. If, at the next moult, the plumage of the upper surface does not change to a deep violet-blue, then it is a female, the plumage of which is much as the description you give of your bird. Some species of Tanagers will not take mealworms; but if it eats heartily of the soft food mixture (one-third of this should be sponge cake), and takes plenty of ripe fruit, it will do well. I give all my Tanagers, Sugar Birds, etc., well-sweetened milk sop, to which occasionally I add a little Mellin's Food; this helps to keep the birds fit. I should say that the milk sop is best prepared with milk, sugar, and crumbled biscuit, and the whole boiled up together. Individual Tanagers of the same species vary in their taste for mealworms—most take them.

Budgerigars Not Breeding.

E.G.—While Budgerigars sometimes take longer to settle down to breeding when kept in single pairs, this is certainly what I advise you to do unless you can give them a cage at least double the size of yours every way. Very probably it will suit your convenience best to have two cages instead of one, and sooner or later they will settle down to breeding, but respective pairs are often a little erratic as to how long they take to settle down in new quarters. At this time of year, when it is so plentiful, let them have unlimited grass in flower (seeding grass); this, their natural food, will help to bring them forward as much as anything. If yours are young birds, it is all the better for them and your future stock that they are slack in making a start.

Parrakeets in Moult.

W.A.B.C.—Most Parrots and Parrakeets moult rather slowly, but so long as they keep fit this is but of small importance, save for their appearance, which has to be put up with for the time being. Let them have a liberal supply of green-stuff and fruit, as much as they will take in addition to their seed mixture, and they should be all right. While the moult lasts, well colour their drinking water, every other day, with Parrish's Chemical Food. Keep their bowels well regulated; the voidings should not be hard, neither should they be watery—you can easily regulate this by an occasional dose of Dinneford's Magnesia, one teaspoonful to each ounce of the drinking water. The moult is a more or less critical period for all birds, but yours should get through all right; let them have plenty of fresh air without draught.

Treatment of a Young Grey.

R.H.W.—Continue to give the boiled maize till the bird takes to other food, which it is sure to do later, of course, in the meantime letting it have as much boiled maize as it will eat; at the same time, I should keep a tin of dry seed mixture in its cage, and you will find it will ultimately take to this as its staple diet. It will also take to fruit later. Also nuts, and plain biscuit, I should offer all at intervals. As regards fruit, try it with grapes and apple. I should put from 10 to 20 drops of Parrish's Chemical Food on to the daily supply of boiled maize. Note: The boiled maize only keeps fresh one day; it must be prepared fresh daily, and the food vessel kept strictly clean. As regards water, permit the bird to satisfy its thirst three or four times a day, and for one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water (one ounce), repeating the dose after an interval of seven days. Seed mixture: two parts Canary and white millet, and one part each hemp, wheat, oats, and sunflower seed. Keep it where it will get plenty of fresh air, but keep it strictly out of draught. It should be occasionally sprayed with tepid water, choosing warm, sunny days, and guarding carefully against draught till dry.

What Parrakeet is it?

A.H.S.—The birds are two cocks, and, as I suspected, and stated in previous reply, are Madagascar Lovebirds; they are also known by the following names, some of which are not descriptive (this being often the case with dealers' and popular names): Lavender-headed, Grey-headed, and White-headed. The hen is all green, and thus can be readily distinguished from the male. Canary, white, and spray millet seeds, with a few oats, green food (flowering grass), lettuce, etc., cuttlefish, little fruit (consult their taste; if they refuse one kind, try another, but all species usually take apple), grit and water. Live branches with bark on should be supplied; these are one of the few species of Parrakeets which line their nests. They will strip off the bark and carry it into their log or box for this purpose. You should have no difficulty in obtaining hens; Madagascars are nearly always on sale, and most consignments consist of both sexes.

Mocking Bird Not Singing.

McNeil.—This Bird should certainly be singing now. Are you sure you have a cock bird? Your diet also is satisfactory, and I am really at a loss to understand its non-response to the fervour (at this season) of the songs of our native birds; this causes me to doubt its being a cock bird. However, I should not be in a hurry to part with it, as it may possibly be only a young bird, and not yet experienced the fervour of the breeding season. As with most of our native birds, the full fervour of song is only poured out during the pairing and breeding season, and your bird will possibly, a little later, burst into song. Vary its live food as much as possible, and let this be liberal. Your garden should supply a variety now if trapped and searched for; an occasional fly round the room will be beneficial to the bird, and the exhilaration of flight may hasten it into song.

Breeding Budgerigars.

W. E. Green.—Design is of very little account; it must be weather-proof, and, to hold four pairs, must be not less than 4 ft. by 2 ft. by 2½ ft. high. It should be close boarded at ends, back and top, with the front only half-inch mesh wire netting. If you let the produce of one pair only breed together, it means inbreeding and ultimate deterioration of stock; this can be obviated either by exchanging some of your young birds with some other breeder, or by having two or more breeding pairs. Then their progeny could be left to breed together. However, to keep up a robust stock, it is necessary to introduce new blood every two or three years or thereabouts. Do not overcrowd, as sometimes this causes the birds to maltreat each other and also their young, even with such a gregarious species as the Budgerigar.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free, a mine of information of use and interest.

Birds for Aviary.

C.E.L.—The birds I am about to name should breed, but not regularly; neither will the young hatched out be always reared, the difficulty being, as a rule, to supply enough live food in a mixed crowd. But space will not permit me to do more than give you a list of birds. Pope, Grey and Green Cardinals, Ruddy-shouldered Tropials, Silky Cowbirds, Orange-headed Thrushes, and any other Indian Thrushes you see on the market in pairs, Scarlet Tanagers, any species of Foreign Buntings you see advertised in pairs. With such a series you could put pairs of, say, Chinese and Harlequin Quails, Diamond and Crested Doves. Three-quarter inch mesh is small enough to confine anything not smaller than our native Bunting, such as the Yellowhammer, etc. Re the Budgerigars, cover the window over with wire netting, and leave it open day and night during hot weather. Also at top of gable ends take out one or two bricks, as is often done in such structures, and also to let pigeons in and out, cover them with wire netting, and you should get over the difficulty of extreme heat. You must take the precaution of so placing your perches and husks that they are not in the direct line of any air currents that pass through the loft.

Amazon Out of Condition.

Nurse L. B.—Continue to give the chemical food in the drinking water, and also from 10 to 20 drops over the daily supply of boiled maize; this latter must be prepared fresh daily, as it soon turns sour, and the food vessel must be kept strictly clean. Twice a week, so long as the voidings are not watery, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water in lieu of the chemical food. It ought to have ripe fruit, plain biscuit and nuts, as well as the foods you mention. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Whenever the weather is warm and sunny, spray the bird two or three times a week with quassia solution, and keep it carefully out of draught till dry. I prefer the following seed mixture: Canary seed, oats, wheat, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds in equal parts. Keep the bird where it will get plenty of fresh air, but it must not be subject to draught. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in its cage. Please report progress a fortnight hence.

Black-headed Mannikin, etc.

A. Wright.—Mannikins thrive on seed (Canary, white and spray millet), green food (grass in flower, lettuce, etc.), grit, cuttlefish, fruit and water for drinking and bathing. Some species are fond of a mealworm, especially the Bronze and Magpie, and one or two per diem are certainly beneficial, but if you can get them occasional smooth caterpillars, spiders, beetles, etc., are even better. You do not give me any particulars as to size, etc., of aviary. You must allow one square foot of floor area to each pair of birds not larger than a Norwich Canary—and, of course, my reply is based on the assumption that you have a weather-proof shelter shed attached to the aviary. Tricolour, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins; Silverbills, Spice Birds, Grey and White Java Sparrows; Zebra and Ribbon Finches; Grey and Green Singing Finches; Common and Green Avadavats; Grey Orange-cheek; Orange-breasted and St. Helena Waxbills, all of which are usually to be cheaply obtained, and will thrive on the above treatment, with the addition of a little soft food (see advert. columns), when they are feeding young.

Orange-Cheeked Waxbill.

W. Baker.—The outward distinctions are infinitesimal, and really of but little value unless you can be sure you have adult birds for comparison. But out of a crowd you should be able to pick a pair. The hen is a little slighter in build, and is not so bold a bird as the male; her plumage is of not quite so rich a hue. This is particularly the case with the Orange-cheeks, this being a little smaller in area, and distinctly duller in colour. Her beak also is of not so rich a red as that of her mate, and again she is more silent and not so demonstrative as the male. Some of these points are rather difficult to discern in a dealer's cage as the birds get stirred up during examination, and some of the distinctive features are then quite lost; but a little quiet observation from a little distance should enable you to pick out a pair.

Treating a Grey Parrot.

T.H.—I am afraid your quarters are altogether too warm; a better position would be in one of your sitting rooms. Again, if a screen is necessary to make secure against draught, a sort of curtain should be hung round one side, the bird should not be covered up in the daytime and even at night, a space at least six inches in diameter on the top should be left uncovered. With a camel-hair brush bathe its nostrils with diluted glyco-thymoline—well cleansing the brush and using a fresh portion of the solution for each occasion—twice a day till the running ceases. The bird ought to fare well for a time on the dietary you are giving, that is, providing it gets no slops, messes, table scraps, etc. But I should certainly half fill its seed tin with the dry mixture and put the boiled maize on the top. Put 10 to 15 drops of Parrish's Chemical Food over the boiled maize daily (boiled maize only keeps fresh one day), make its drinking water just saline with Epsom salts for one day only. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish hanging in the cage.

Grey Parrot Not Talking.

J.M.—I presume you have a Grey Parrot, and not a Rose-breasted Cockatoo? If it is really a Grey, and, as you say, strong and healthy, I should hesitate before getting rid of it. A Grey should certainly talk more or less. You must pet it, talk to it, fondle it, and afterwards give it some tit-bit (but not slops, messes, or table scraps), something of its regular dietary it is specially fond of, such as fruit, nut, piece of biscuit, etc.; also keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation and when the room is quiet, repeat to it, while you scratch its poll or fondle it in some other fashion, short sentences, etc., you wish it to utter. There is nothing needed but patience, and I should give a healthy Grey a lengthy trial before parting with it; the number of Greys that do not talk is very small, and these usually occur through neglect and lack of notice. As a rule, if they do not talk they scream!

Brevities.

Will it Talk? (A.P.).—It is a Cockatiel—an Australian species that is more often kept as an aviary bird than as a cage pet. They are hardy, and will live out of doors in a garden aviary all the year round, and are free breeders. It is an adult male, and I do not consider there is any likelihood of its learning to talk. Get a hen bird—the hen lacks the yellow cheeks, and the red patch on some is not so deep in colour as that of the male, also her tail on the underside is barred black, yellow and white, that of the male being blackish-grey—and rig up a small enclosure for them out of doors (something like a fowl pen), where they will certainly do well, and should breed.

What Parrakeet? (T.C.B.).—It is an Alexandrine, and a male. These birds are very cheap to purchase when newly imported, but an acclimatised specimen in good feather should be worth 25s., or thereabouts; more, if it has been properly trained, and is a good talker. It is not a rare species, and, of course, on the show bench the rarer species, if in equally good condition, would score. However, an Alexandrine in perfect condition, with the full bloom on its feathers (similar to that seen on ripe fruit) is a handsome fellow indeed, and quite likely to catch the judge's eye, and certainly has a sporting chance of being in the money.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary (Novice 40).—Septicæmia, or blood poisoning, or bird fever, giving rise to anæmia, and ending with apoplexy.

Roller Canary (Diaco).—Inflammation of liver, spleen, and lungs, all signs of septicæmia or bird fever.

Canary (G. Ray).—Yes, it died of septic fever.

British Finches (F.D.).—Severe chill or inflammation of lungs, possibly owing to cold wet weather.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Nesting Material (Nesting).—The nesting material you send is such a departure from the ordinary that we hesitate to pass an opinion without first submitting it to a practical trial. It may be right enough, still, it is not the kind of stuff we should select for use in our own birdroom. Doesn't it make the nest too "lumpy"?

A County Court Matter (F.J.W.S.).—We have submitted your letter to our legal representative, who will reply in the query columns in due course.

"Ladder of Progress" Postcards (J. T., Birmingham).—The postcards are being sent out in the order in which the forms reached us. We have an enormous number to despatch, and this necessarily takes time. You should get yours now, however, in a few days. The result of the competition we hope to be able to announce very shortly.

A Suggestion (W. H. Stone).—Many thanks for your kindly letter. We will see what can be done in the matter you mention.

The Cage Bird Union (A. Riddles).—The Sec. is Mr. J. Raynes, 9, Richmond-road, Chorlton-cum-Hardy, Manchester.

Recovering Money (David Price).—Your only remedy now is to sue in the County Court for the return of the money; issue a summons at once if you can get no redress without. And remember our deposit system in the future.

The Border Fancy in the South (Johnny Principle).—We cannot consider the publication of this letter until you furnish us with your name and address, and more definite particulars of the alleged winnings.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Cockatiels Hatched Under Budgerigars.

SIR,—The two young Cockatiels which were hatched under Budgerigars are still going on well. They will be out of the log nest, to which I have transferred them, in about a week. They were hatched in a cokernut nest, the eggs being put in with a spoon. If any of your readers would care to call at 154, Hutton Road, Handsworth, Birmingham, I should be pleased to let them see these birds, also some young Budgerigars which I have tamed, and trained to sit on my finger. I might say that the hen Budgerigar which hatched the Cockatiels is a yellow one, mated to a green cock bird. Although this green has a green mate as well, he is helping to feed two young Budgerigars off the green hen, and the two young Cockatiels hatched by the yellow one. My hen Cockatiel laid three eggs (commencing to sit on the first, as is usual), and was eggbound with the fourth. As she was quite prostrate, I had to take her in and give her a hot water bath. After the bath she got stronger, so I put her back into the aviary, when the cock bird promptly left the three eggs which he had sat on all day and night. The hen soon laid her fourth egg, but would not sit, so I put two under the yellow Budgerigar and threw the others away. In about a week's time the Cockatiel laid again, and has now three young ones.

H. LEWIS.

Brummagem Goods!

The Tale of a Nightingale Hoax.

SIR,—A fine joke has been recently played upon some of our residents in Birmingham, and I think readers of your paper, CAGE BIRDS, will appreciate it. This is how the local "Mail" describes it:—The prevalent popularity of the Nightingale and the sudden desire of everybody to hear this delightful nocturnal songster was made the subject of an amusing practical joke at Perry Barr recently. A couple of young fellows resident in the neighbourhood, knowing that everyone was anxious to hear the bird, secured one of those mechanical contrivances usually sold by the street hawkers at a penny each, and commonly known to boys as "bird calls." Locating themselves in a neighbouring plantation, they poured forth a volume of song which soon attracted the notice of the passers by and the residents of the district, who hurriedly left their supper tables and listened entranced in the night air to what they deemed must be the song of the Nightingale, a song which, by the way, is not known by one person in fifty among city dwellers. The deception worked so successfully that the joke was continued the following evening, when the fame of the supposed bird had spread far and wide. Between 300 and 400 persons put in an appearance, were delighted with what they heard, and would probably have turned up again the following night had not some inquisitive members of the crowd disoovered the origin of the song, and chased the "bird" away. When the crowd became aware of the deception they, too, were anxious to interview the songster, who, by the way, has not been heard again.

The Migration of Birds Studied by Marking Rings.

SIR,—Kindly allow me to draw the attention of your readers to an inquiry into the migration of birds, to be carried on for the next few years from the Natural History Department of the University of Aberdeen. The method employed is supplementary to others, and has already been employed with great success abroad, notably by Dr. Thienemann in Germany, at the Ornithological Station at Rossitten, on the Baltic, and by Herr Chr. Mortensen of Viborg, in Denmark, but has not been carried out on a large scale in the British Isles, except in the case of Woodcock. The method consists in placing aluminium rings—or rather, folded bands—on birds' feet. Birds may be obtained for marking in this way by capturing them uninjured, and immediately liberating them, or by finding them as nestlings. The rings are made in all sizes, and are too light to annoy the bird in any way. They bear the inscription "Aberdeen University" (contracted to "Abdn. Univ." on the smaller sizes), and a number, different in each case. These rings are to be placed on birds in different parts of the country, and full records are to be kept of the species, date, locality, etc., corresponding to each number, and it is the object of this communication to the Press to make as widely known as possible the method of our inquiry, in the hope that any person finding one of our marked birds will send full particulars of date, locality, etc., of the capture to "Migration Inquiry, Natural History Department, the University, Aberdeen, Scotland." We prefer that the ring should also be sent, or the ring and foot, or even the whole bird. Whenever desired, we shall be glad to refund postage. It is obvious that much exact information can be gathered in this way that would not be otherwise obtainable. We are able at present to define fairly accurately the breeding distribution of a large number of species, and, less accurately, the winter-quarters of many of them. But we cannot as yet say to what particular places the birds of particular districts migrate, and a knowledge of this is necessary before a solution of the main problems of migration can be attempted. Then, we have yet to prove that birds always return to the same place, or that birds from the same place seek the same winter-quarters; and there are many other points. But, principally, we need information about the routes followed by migrants, for a definite knowledge of these, even for a few species, would take us nearer to the heart of the mystery which surrounds the phenomenon of migration. ## Curious Eggs of Seagulls.

SIR,—A few evenings ago, during my walk around the cliffs, I came across a lot of Seagulls' nests, in one of which was, to me, a curious sight. Three eggs were in the nest, one of which appeared to be very small. On going down the cliff I found one egg measured 2⅛ins. in length and 2ins. in diameter, another 2⅞ins. in height and 1 15-16in. diameter. Now we came to the most curious sight: the other egg only measured 1⅝in. in length and 1¼in. in diameter. It was perfectly easy to get at this nest. But there was another which it was impossible to get at, there being a drop of about 300ft. In this nest also was a sight I have never seen before. There were three eggs here; one was of the ordinary colour, but the other two were a very bright green, and so highly polished were they that, looking at them from certain positions (the sun shining at this time), they appeared like reflectors. Now, what I want to know from any one of your readers who cares to interest themselves over this, is: Is this an ordinary sight, or has anyone seen such before? I have travelled the hills and cliffs for years, but have never seen anything like it before.

The Border Fancy Canary in the South.

SIR,—Mr. Patterson evades my question by taking exception to the way in which it was asked, and yet he can deal with other points asked him in the same way. Can it be that the main question is inconvenient to answer? As regards size, how the fact that the English Club was formed to combat size proves Mr. Patterson's theory, I leave him and his readers to determine, and the proof he adduces that there was a demand from England for these large birds. It would be interesting to know whether it was the exhibitor or the judge who demanded these large birds. It seems funny that England should demand large birds and then form a society to reduce size. Gentle readers, please note. I echo Mr. Patterson's pious wish that nothing will be misconstrued to suit "an insincere purpose," and would suggest that he examines his previous statement re show committees. He will find that he stated show committees elected judges, and not supported judges at other shows with exhibits as he states now. What a piece of impertinence it is on Mr. Patterson's part to say that once England had a light grip of the bird, seeing that England had a light grip of the bird long before it was known in Scotland. However, I think I had better stop before I write something true, but better left unsaid.

S. HADWIN.

SIR,—I have read Mr. J. Robson's letter in your issue of the 5th inst. Owing to pressure of business I have been unable to give the matter due consideration, but I hope to deal with the same in your next issue.

The Treatment Skylarks During the Moult.

SIR,—It has been suggested to me that I should write and ask other Lark fanciers through CAGE BIRDS to state their methods of moulting the Skylark. As the singing recommences in December the birds will want to be through the moult early. What extra food do they give, if any? Do they keep the birds covered? Do they keep them in a cold room, or moult them in the kitchen? What is the best thing to start them in the moult? Also, what is the best thing to do when they get "stuck in the moult"? There are a hundred and one ways of feeding Larks, but Lark fanciers seem to be afraid of telling their friends what they feed their birds on. And if one man has a bird which does all the winning, what is the use of others throwing their money away when they know beforehand they will be beaten? I hope Lark fanciers will favour some of us by answering some or all of these questions.

ALEX. DONNELLY.

A Classification Puzzle.

Where Should the Crests Go?

SIR,—Would some reader kindly answer these questions in CAGE BIRDS?

1. What does "Norwich Any Variety" mean?

2. Are the Crest and Crest-bred termed Norwich or not?

3. When there is a class given at any show worded "Norwich Any Variety," is the Crest and Crest-bred eligible to compete in same?

4. Should there be a class headed "Any Other Variety Canary," in addition to the one mentioned in question three. Are the Crest and Crest-bred eligible to compete in this class, or in both?

J. O. WILLIAMS.

(At such shows as the Crystal Palace, Nottingham, Gateshead, Newcastle, Plymouth, Bristol, and others, the Crests and Crestbreds are referred to as "Norwich" Crests and Crestbreds, and it would seem that they could certainly claim to compete in a class headed "Norwich any variety." Probably, however, the latter would, in intention, be meant to comprise Norwich Plainheads only, and in view of this dubiousness, we can imagine some judges allowing Crests to compete in the "A.O.V." class as well, if entered therein. Readers' opinions will be welcomed.—EDITOR.)

The Clashing of Show Dates in Scotland.

SIR,—I notice "Club Member," in replying to my letter of last week, says that it caused him some amusement. I am very pleased to hear he is so easily amused. He further says that a weaker reply he has never seen. I leave it to the fancy to look over the previous correspondence and judge for themselves to see which of the two is the weaker. Seeing that I admitted that we were not aware that Kelty had altered their date, he tries to make the most of it to cause us to appear as small as he can, and says: "Fancy any intelligent body of men sitting down to fix a date for their show without first consulting the Dates Fixed Column." Are all the shows advertised in the above? Seeing that our intelligent friend is so perfect, I think that he ought to read his own paper before attacking others. He says that we fixed our date for the 24th October, whereas we fixed it for 23rd October, so that the Forfar people are not the only ones who can make mistakes. He also fails to see where his selfishness comes in. If he cares to read over the correspondence he will see it for himself if he wants to. He says that I object to his calling the Forfar members stupid. Have I not already admitted that we were unaware that Kelty had altered their date? So there was no need my denying that some of the three shows would suffer if allowed to go on; in fact, I noticed the mistake the same week as our notice appeared, and fully intended bringing same to the notice of the members at our next meeting. I see that "Club Member" is still set on having us take the 16th October as the date of our show, and says that the Forfar people used to be well pleased if they had no competition north of Glasgow. Is that any reason why he should try to bully us into it to suit himself? He has also failed to tell us the reason Kelty altered their date to 23rd October this year, seeing they were on the same date as the City of Glasgow last year. As to the shows referred to in November, 1902, were they of the same importance as the City of Glasgow? I think not. Further on "C.M." says that I well know that everybody has not birds to exhibit at the City of Glasgow. Is the above meant as a sneer, or what? Or is it any reason why Forfar should hold an open show on that date? He also says: "I presume Forfar does not expect the same class of birds." Well, we should certainly expect to see some of them, and why not, providing that we give sufficient inducement to fanciers? Does "C. M." mean to say that it would be to our benefit to hold our show on 16th October, when we know that there are always a good number of the prominent exhibitors of the north with teams at the City of Glasgow? Is he trying to throw dust in our eyes when he says that he holds no brief for Perth, and tries to explain the reason why Perth have seen fit to alter their date three times within the last seven years? He says that other societies have treated Perth as Forfar have done. But have Forfar, or for that matter any other society, not as much right to hold an open show when it suits them as well as Perth seeing that Perth usurped the dates of other shows? I fail to see what they have got to complain of, although "C. M." is trying his best to blind the Fancy on that point. "C. M." thinks he has made a great catch in what he is pleased to term "the convicting of me on my own statements," because I stated last week that "when the last Forfar show was held there were no shows north of Glasgow in 1902. Perth, the following year, took the same date, knowing that Forfar were already fixed." And yet again he thrusts forward his favourite bait, the 16th October. I fail to see where I have convicted myself in the above statement. But he convicts himself when he says the other societies have treated Perth as Forfar have done. He finishes up with a great show of bounce when he says that, "notwithstanding all these facts. . . ." What facts has he presented other than the mistake we made in not noticing Kelty had altered their date? The only facts that have been presented were those of last week, which he has tried to twist about to suit his own ends. He says that I finish with the determination to stick to the date I have usurped, and have the audacity to suggest that Perth and Kelty should alter their dates to allow his society a clear field. Now, the above is not true. "C. M." in his first letter said that there was still time for Forfar to alter their date, but that Perth and Kelty could not alter theirs because they had their judges fixed. While I said that if Forfar had still time to alter their date, Perth and Kelty also had time to alter theirs, even although they had got their judges fixed. The impression "C. M." wishes to convey is that it is impossible to alter a date after you have got your judges fixed. Such is not the case, as they can be altered at any time to suit the circumstances. Which is altogether a different thing to what "C. M." would have us believe. He speaks of my complaining of the use he makes of a nom de plume, and asks why not? Because it shows the want of manliness and a fancier-like spirit of which he boasts. He says that it cannot alter the facts. Perhaps it would. Doubtless he says to himself that I like to see my name in print. My name has appeared in the Fancy Press pretty often for some years now, without needing to seek the correspondence columns to do so. Need I say more, is his despairing cry. Well, if he does not want to show off some more intelligence he ought to desist. Here is some more of the selfishness of which we have got too much. At our meeting on Saturday we decided not to run an open show this year, but to hold a Members' Show instead on the 23rd Oct. Mark you, not the 24th. Most certainly we will run an open show next year, when I hope we will not hurt "C. M.'s" feelings.

A Mule Bred from a Greenfinch Mule.

SIR,—I think the following may be of interest to some of your readers. I have a young bird two days old; its father is a Greenfinch and Canary Mulo (which I bred myself, so that I am certain it is a Mule). and its mother an ordinary Yellow Canary. I "put the pair up" as foster parents for Scotch Fancy Canaries, but as one hen Scotch Fancy died, I had too many foster parents. So I let this pair sit, and was surprised to find one egg fertile and another, which I wasn't quite certain about (which, however, had not hatched when I looked eight days after the hen was set, the father of this bird I bred from a Greenfinch, which was a great pet, as I had hand-reared him from the nest, and the mother was a Crest-bred Norwich Canary, also my own breeding. Could any of your readers tell me if they have ever bred birds from Mules, as I understand it is supposed to be impossible?

"ACTION HAY."

(A few apparently genuine instances of Mules having bred have been recorded in our columns. It has generally been held impossible for Mules to fertilise eggs, however, and opinion is still divided on this point. We have never personally had the good fortuno to meet with an unquestionable case.—EDITOR.)

A Successful Start with Yorkshires.

SIR,—I am sending you a record of my first round, as I believe I have been moro than lucky with same, this being my first season breeding Yorkshires. I have made a start with three pairs, with the first round resulting as follows:—Pair No. 1: Eggs laid 4, hatched four; No. 2: Eggs laid 5, hatched 4—one clear egg; No. 3: Eggs laid 4, hatched 3—one egg broken. All the young birds are doing grand, and the hens are now down upon their second round of eggs. I might mention that my birds were hatched April 16, May 1, and May 14 respectively. My mode of feeding is as follows:—While hens are sitting I give Canary and rape and plenty of green food. Directly the eggs are hatched I allow the usual egg food with as much lettuce as the bird will eat, with their seed pots filled with hemp, right from the first day the chicks are hatched, and I find the birds grow twice as quick. All my birds are strong, and in splendid condition. I flatter myself that my mode of feeding cannot be far wrong, as I now have 11 young birds (doing for themselves) from 13 eggs, and in the first round only. I am sending my way of feeding, as perhaps it may be the means of helping others. With every good wish to our dear friend CAGE BIRDS. STANLEY RICHARDS.

Affairs of the United Kingdom Lizard.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Greig's somewhat misleading letter in last week's CAGE BIRDS, he says I was as much in Mr. Thompson's letter as Mr. Thompson. I may tell him that letter was in CAGE BIRD'S office long before I knew it was written. He also says he took Mr. T.'s letter for what it was worth, and I for one believe him, and for a long time I have taken him for what he was worth as an hon. sec.; a cage bird man, and a man who wants to do as he likes with everyone. But everyone will not stand him. I may tell him there is no "Co." about me. I am on my own in this matter, and as for the bad feeling, who caused it, Mr. Greig? How many times has "fine old Lizard breeder," as you term him, been to my house and I to his, to see what could be done with you, and try to get you to do something? Why, man, did we not find you an assistant secretary to help you to do something, and then you would not let him do anything? How many times have you called a meeting, and never turned up, or only come just before the members from other towns had to leave by the 8.47 train, in order to get home? Your excuse was always the same tale, been asleep and forgot the meeting, as Mr. Hampshire and Mr. Dickenson can prove. Mr. Dickenson had a letter in CAGE BIRDS some time back on the same subject. You go on to say that Messrs. Ollerenshaw, Lawton, Fisher, and Hampshire, are members, also yourself; when did you or any of the above gentlemen pay their subs? Mr. Ollerenshaw told me he should not pay his till you started to do something for the society, and I told him the same. What about that, Mr. Grieg? As you have showed me up in the Fancy Press, I think I am justified in returning the compliment. You make free use of our "champion" breeder's name, who left the society for reasons best known to himself. Does Mr. G. want to make out he left through Mr. Thompson and me? I may tell you, Mr. G., it was through you coming late at that meeting, and he would not stand it any longer; and that is where the trouble started. You also say the old fanciers will not be talked to by us novices. It is now 33 years since I had first to do with the Lizards, in the days of the late S. Bunting, of Derby; Ritchie, Cleminson, Hethington, of Darlington; Hamer, Bardsley, to say nothing of so many other of my fine old friends in many parts of England. So where do the novices come in? You say there was nothing but dissatisfaction. Who caused it but you, Mr. G., by not trying to give satisfaction, and the members were disgusted.

E. FULLER.

We Are Seven.

A Fine Brood of Young Canaries.

SIR,—I am a breeder in a small way, and havo managed to rear a nest of seven young Canaries from ono hen Canary. I took a photograph of them in the nestbox when 17 days old. I thought this photograph would interest many of your readers, so have ventured to send you a copy. These Canaries were three weeks old on Saturday last, June 5. The hen Canary had made another nest, and was then sitting on five eggs. But apparently she has not done laying, for at time of writing I find she has six eggs under her.

The Treatment of Cage Birds in Transit.

SIR,—Respecting your correspondent "Cantab's" letter last week, I have seen the railway servants knock birds about whilst I have been waiting for birds on the platform. I have seen them throw birds on the truck the same as lumps of wood, wrong way up, as it seems to come natural to them to do it. I have often told them about it. But what I wish to write about is the bother you have when birds are lost in transit. I sent three Norwich Canaries from Leigh (London and North-Western Railway) to Luton, Beds., on April 7th, but they never arrived there. So I inquired at the station from which I sent them. They found they had got to Batley all right, and had been transferred to the Great Northern Railway there, as I saw their signature for having received them. Then, a few days afterwards they told me at Leigh station they could not find them, and they were making inquiries. I let a week pass, and then I wrote to the station-master at Batley, and sent my claim to the London and North-Western; but all that I can get from them is that they are still making inquiries. I think this is another thing the Cage Bird Union should take up, as it is rather bad for working men like myself to have their birds lost, and have to wait so long for payment of the claim. If I had been travelling on the railway, and had lost my ticket, I wonder if they would have been satisfied with "still making inquiries!" I think I shall have to spend a bit more to get it, which I have no doubt readers of CAGE BIRDS will think a case of hard lines.

A Remedy Wanted.

SIR,—I read with interest in your valuable paper both letters under the above heading. I saw also Mr. W. H. Thomas' kind notice in CAGE BIRDS last week. If he will refer to my own letter, my experience, there explained, may be somewhat the same. I noticed that the birds I lost went off more quickly after giving the oil. But, in my case, they were all hen Canaries; I have never lost a full-grown cock Canary. Note also, it is only this season I have had this complaint with my hens (what I call "going soft"). I have always cured it, if taken in time, with bread scalded in milk (see my letter May 8). In reply to "Incredulous," I may say that I did not write to get up an argument, but to obtain instruction. Would he reply to the last and most important part of my letter? Others also may like to know a cure.

ERNEST E. R. BRYANT.

Seaford, Sussex.

SIR,—With your permission I should like to thank your correspondent, "British Birds" who replied in May 29th issue, for his willingness and his prompt assistance. I might say that I have always kept a tin of sand (sea sand, too) in every cage occupied, and I have proved by experiment that I get a larger percentage of losses amongst the birds to whom I supplied boiled English rape and German seed than amongst those I kept on dry seed. I put the seed in a sievo overnight and let it drain dry; I did not dry it with a cloth. The two Linnets I mentioned previously as looking like Pouter Pigeons died the second day after I wrote, and I have some more that at that time were in good song and condition now passing through the same stages, and will undoubtedly die just as certainly, to my mind. Will you kindly forward my full name and address to Mr. W. H. Thomas.

A. WILKINSON.

(We have received two or three requests from readers, either for Mr. Thomas' address, or for their own addresses to be sent on to that gentleman; but as Mr. Thomas' offer applied to two correspondents only, we cannot accede to these requests without authorisation.—EDITOR.)

SIR,—I was very pleased and interested in the reply to the above by "Nil Desperandum." A day or two after sending my correspondence to you I had two Goldfinches taken thick. I caught them, put them in a cage, and brought them indoors (as I keep my birds out in aviary in garden, one with wire netting only in front, the other like a room window to open, facing south-west, and door opposite—they have large cages and also a flight) in the living room, where a fire is generally going. I gave them castor oil (two drops each), also some Epsom salts, plenty of Canary seed, extra niger and maw, also hemp seed and teazle; but they did not seem to improve. I caught and blew up the feathers, and found their bodies thickly spotted with white; it looked like down from new feathers, but on closer examination I found it was not so, but on the skin. One died, and I thought of sending it to know the cause of death. The other was pretty bad, and I expected it would "follow suit," so kept the dead one with the intention of sending both for examination. I put three or four drops of Birley's Sweet Phosphorous in water as a trial, and the bird has recovered (I kept the other dead one three or four days, and the white spots were showing then all over the body just as plainly, so I covered it over in a rubbish heap); but whether from that or the other treatment I could not say. I give plenty of sand, and put the egg-shells from table in oven, and when well baked crush them up finely and give them to the birds. I feed and water immediately after I have had breakfast, and give a look round to them several times during the day, as I have kept birds British and Canaries and also foreigners for the last 20 or 30 years. My especial hobby is a grand cock Goldfinch, and I venture to say few fanciers have been more unfortunate in losing dozens of birds as I have, as I seldom keep them long in my possession. Either their time seems to have come to "shuffle off," or they escape, and nearly always the best birds. I have had Siberians, Russians, and Welsh, and some from several different countries, but they seem to go the same; first, a bit thick, and then they tuck their heads in and waste away and die, although I always make a desperate fight for their lives, now and then succeeding in pulling one through. I have three or four good specimens in Goldies, also Linnets and Greenfinches, but my birds are exceedingly late this year, only two hen Canaries with their first nest; but I am trying for Mules and Hybrids, and "Patience" is right. In reply to "British Bird," in your issue of May 29, it is not for want of sand, as you will see by the above that I give the birds crushed egg-shells, as I consider grit is almost as essential as food. I give castor oil, Epsom salts, and common salt, just a pinch in their water. This last is from bird-catcher, who told me if any were mopy after he had caught them, and had got them homo and turned into cages, he put common salt in their water just sufficient to give it a salty taste, and it was very seldom he lost one, his experience being water was as necessary as food at such times. But the chief reason is to get at the cause and remedy, if possible, through other and more experienced fanciers, as to why apparently healthy and singing British birds should all at onee gradually go thick, mopy, and unable to satisfy the appetite, whatever kinds of seeds, etc., they may be tempted with, and die in a day or two after the attack by what appears to me inflammation of bowels (swollen and very inflamed stomachs), and indigestion (retching and throwing out food again). Many fanciers and others have said to me, I cannot think how you can keep on with birds after you have had such bad luck and losses enough to dishearten the most enthusiastie fancier. But with all disasters and losses I cannot give in, but am up and "at them again." I am well known about here, and in the surrounding villages and towns, and am often asked by people who come to me or meet me out if I would mind having a look at their bird, or they ask what they ean do to or give it, as it is not well. I never refuse to go, or to give what information I can, or cut the bird's nails for them. I hope to hear further from others regarding this question.

A Linnet Association for Castleford and District.

SIR,—We have started a Linnet Association, which we have called the Castleford and District Linnet Association. It includes Pontefract and the surrounding districts. There is a good number of us already, and we are mostly all readers of CAGE BIRDS. They have appointed me secretary, and I am therefore going to try and make it a success. We had an excellent contest at the end of May, 21 birds competing. Mr. J. Higgins won the first prize of 12s. 6d., and the third prize of 5s., the second being won by Mr. S. Scott, value 8s. 6d. So I don't think we did badly for the first sing. We hope for a larger entry from and attendance of fanciers on June 13th, when we hope to have another sing, which it will be worth any one's while coming to see.

Notes on Mule Breeding in May and June.

SIR,—Reading CAGE BIRDS, of June 5th, I noticed Mr. T. H. Kinch says that July is generally the month for Bullfinch crosses. I wish to inform him, and others also, that having a little property in the country I went out for a stroll 2½ miles with a friend of mine on Whit-Tuesday to see it. On my way home at about 4.30 p.m. in the afternoon, I accidentally met a friend of mine, a bird fancier. We began talking birdy matters over, as I am always on the look-out for something better than my own if I can find it, and I have been a bird fancier all my life, about forty years. My friend invited me to see his birds. He had several pairs of Yorkshire Canaries, with young, and eggs, sitting. After he said smilingly, "I am going to surprise you now." He then showed me a lovely yellow Yorkshire cock bird paired to a hen Bullfinch, a young hon caught last August. The hen had laid three eggs; two had dropped off the perch and had broken, and the other one she laid on the bottom of the cage. This egg my friend had put under a eommon hen Canary. The Canary hatched it out alright, and it was three days old on Whit-Tuesday. My friend got the little mule out on his hand for me to see. He also had a cock Goldfinch with a hen Bullfinch. She had laid three eggs when I was there, but had made a nest in a small bush which had been put in the cage, and had laid in the nest. I again saw my friend in Oswestry on the following Saturday night, and he told me the Bullfinch with the cock canary had laid three more eggs, but "I am expecting more eggs this time from her," he added. He is only a young fancier, but I consider a lucky one—very lucky, indeed, if he rears the mule which I saw. I wish him all luck. As Mr. Kinch says he would like to hear the results of the Bullies' breeding, I thought I would write you this, trusting it will encourage others to try. I will again send you the results of the other eggs should they hatch. J. HENNERY LEWIS.

HULL C.B.S.

The first of this season's nest feather shows was held at the Oddfellows' Hall on June 7th, it being one of the best ever held in the annals of the Society. The quality of the exhibits was excellent all round, and the entries totalled 84 in six classes, which is exceptionally good, considering the bad weather experienced in this part of the country. Messrs. J. Calam and Geo. Harland judged. Both judges' awards seemed to give every satisfaction. The judging being over in fine time, gave the members time for a good look at the birds.

LEEDS C.B.S.

A very successful nest feather show was held at "The Three Legs Hotel," Lowerhead Row, on June 5th. The total number of entries was 136, in the 22 classes, which stood two classes being cancelled. The room, which was kindly lent us by Mr. Powney, is an ideal one for a bird show, being well lighted and well ventilated. We had a very busy time, meeting old friends and making new ones; in fact, it was a real treat to be at such a well-attended members' show. Mr. W. Richmond (Rodley), judged, giving every satisfaction.

WESTERN COUNTIES O.S.

The first Nest Feather Show for 1909 was held at Plymouth, on May 26th. There was a very strong muster, both of exhibits and fanciers, the show constituting a record for a May exhibition. Of the 97 birds staged, Norwich, Crest and Crest-breds were well to the fore, Mr. Spillman's two winning Buffs being greatly admired. In Crest-breds Mr. Ryder's team were of exceptional merit. A gratifying feature of the show was an entry of three Border Fancies, in the A.O.V. Class, this being the first time this variety has been represented at W.C.O.S. shows. British birds were good in numbers and quality, but Mules were not up to the usual standard. Mr. W. Spillman judged Yorkshires, Mr. J. Rowe Norwich, Mr. C. Dart Crests and Crest-breds, and Mr. F. Snell the remaining classes, the awards appearing to give general satisfaction. Further shows are arranged for June and July, points gained in the three shows to count for W.C.O.S. Nest Feather Cups. The leaders at present are as follows:— Yorkshire Cup: C. Jewell, 19 points; Norwich Cup: C. Garland, 22 points; Crest Cup: J. Ryder, 16 points; A.O.V. Cup: J. Ryder, 11 points; Mule Cup: J. ## ROYAL CORNWALL (St. Columb).

This popular summer event in our most western county was held at St. Columb on June 9th and 10th, and entries came up remarkably well, whilst the quality was above the average. Many of the Canaries were showing signs of having been in the breeding cages, but, on the whole, the condition of the exhibits was splendid. The British section of this show is always a most interesting one, and some of the best Finches we have ever seen have come before our eyes at this fixture, and this occasion proved no exception to the rule. The exhibits were nicely staged, and all their needs well looked after by the following most excellent committee:—Messrs. W. M. Pethybridge (chairman), C. Jenkin (vice-chairman), J. Bond, R. Bonney, T. Bice, J. T. Brewer, H. Chynoweth, F. Cornish, J. T. Endean, T. J. Eva, W. Gatley, A. Gregor, A. F. Harvey, F. Hender, N. Hocking, P. Merrifield, S. Nockolds, J. Northcott, S. G. Pearce, J. Mr. Sydney H. Tamblyn made a most enthusiastic, courteous, and hard-working secretary, and the local fanciers were fortunate in securing the services of such a gentleman. Mr. J. Robson made the awards.

The Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

The changing of water has occasionally a bad effect upon birds. The exhibitor who is careful in every detail takes a supply with him. This is an excellent idea, and reduces the risk. At first this may seen a small matter, but there is a great deal more in it than is generally supposed. "Keep well" is a capital maxim. For Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries, water glasses are preferable to tins. They are easily kept clean, and in them the water is less apt to become tainted. Canaries are particular as to their drinking water. Drugs put into the water have been known to put a bird off from taking a drink, and a taint may have the same effect.

In the hurry of putting the birds away on the show bench, water is sometimes forgotten, and when the bird is put away among a large number, the omission may not be discovered until the judges come across it far on in the forenoon, when it is in a soft condition; then it is discovered that water was omitted. This, of course, spoils its chance of winning. In nine cases out of ten water in such an instance is supplied, and the bird is allowed to drink freely, with the result that it drinks too much. Inflammation may then set in, and the neglect may lead to death. In a plight such as I have described a bird should only have two or three sips, when the water should be removed and put back later on. This is a hint which judges would do well to note, as they will frequently discover the omission and will need to supply the want.

The system of carrying show cages in a bed mat has become obsolete, and owners of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries use handsome wooden or mahogany boxes, beautifully painted and varnished, and constructed to carry from one to half a dozen cages. The boxes open from the top, and the cages are easily lifted out. The birds themselves are comfortable and quite safe from danger. These boxes are handy at home for keeping show cages in. The enthusiastic Canary fancier spares no expense on his hobby, and the "carrying box" to the regular exhibitor is really indispensable.

Champion Exhibits.

Fanciers hear of "champions" galore before the show season comes on, which takes the heart out of the timid exhibitor. But when the test comes, it is remarkable how few "champions" appear, so that the timid man, had he only displayed a little courage, might have had a distinguished mention.

Champions do not all appear at the early shows. It would be an advantage were they to come together, because fanciers would know where they were. The different dates of hatching are responsible for the various times at which the best birds make their debut. An August-hatched bird (which admittedly is too late to be of much use for that show season) cannot be ready for the show bench until close upon the New Year. A bird hatched that month may appear at a late show, and completely upset what had come to be regarded as use and wont on the show bench. Surprises do arise, and it is well for the Fancy that that should be so. The cup winner in September and October may have to give way to the new comer in November and December.

All things considered, it is preferable to have a Scotch Fancy Canary gold medal and cup winner that is able to take that coveted position at the first open show, and maintain the honour till the end of the show season.

Food for the Show Season.

The diet should be the ordinary every-day diet, with a little egg-mixture. In mistaken kindness, exhibitors sometimes load the seed-boxes with mixed seeds, many of which the birds have never partaken of before, and the bad effects soon become apparent. I advocate the giving of plain, wholesome food, and where mixed seeds are occasionally given, say, on return from a show, or on days set apart for giving it, the mixture should be prepared by the fancier. The best seeds, it should be remembered, are the cheapest, and should be purchased at a shop where the merchant takes as keen an interest in the health of birds as if he were himself a fancier.

Having procured a supply of the necessary seeds, they should be put into a large basin, and well mixed; then put away carefully in suitable dishes where vermin will not be able to get at them.

When sending or taking birds to a show, the seed-box should be well filled. Also do not forget the drinking glass. At many places suitable drinking glasses are not procurable, and it is then awkward, having unpacked the exhibits, to find that the drinking glasses are wanting. At a two-days' show it is sometimes difficult to get stewards to turn out early in the morning to water and feed the exhibits, and as a safeguard against any possible failure in this respect, when it is possible, the exhibitor should look over and attend to his own stock. If he cannot do so, he might get a friend to do what is necessary in that way.

The general practice is to put sawdust or husks of oats into the bottom of the cage. Sawdust blows away if the bird takes a flutter, but that does not happen with the husks; therefore, the oat husks are preferable. They also keep the exhibit clean and tidy.

Necessity of Foster Parents.

In the breeding and rearing of the Scotch Fancy or Belgian Canary foster parents are absolutely necessary. True, Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries have brought up their own young, and the young of other Canaries, but the smaller cross—say, between a Scotch Fancy and a Norwich, or a Norwich and a Border Fancy, etc., seems to be capable of greater endurance. Certainly the latter stick to the rearing and turn out well-finished nests.

The choice of feeders rarely has the consideration of the breeder that it should have. How many seem to think that anything with feathers will do, and that as April and May come round they will be able to go to a bird shop and secure a stock of common Canaries that will rear every young bird that is hatched! The fancier who pins his faith to such a procedure will find by the close of the breeding season that he has made a mistake.

This is repeated year after year, and is responsible for the loss of a large percentage of the Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries that die young.

The wise course is to select foster parents as carefully as one does the high-class stock, not for the same quality and points, of course. They have to be chosen from prolific stock, must be smart in appearance, and give every promise that they will be suitable for the work for which they are to be set apart.

Foster parents or rearers should be in the home of the fancier who requires their assistance not later than the month of December. Fanciers who, more by accident than choice, happen to have reared a lot of common Canaries, are usually glad to get rid of them, and are prepared in September, October, November and December, to part with cocks and hens at moderate prices. In the spring the birds rise in price, and the same selection cannot be had. And when the summer comes on, and the intense desire possesses the breeder to have young at all cost from pet pairs of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries, there is nothing so provoking or discouraging as to be unable to get the young ones reared and brought to maturity. In nine cases out of ten failure is attributable to a want of proper arrangements to secure in the autumn or winter the necessary helps.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, LONDON, E.C.

The Yorkshire and Its General Management.

By J. B. WATERMAN.

The Essay which secured the Gold Medal in the recent L. & P.O.S. Competition.

In writing an essay on Canaries intended to be read before such a fine body of experts on birdy matters as the members of the London and Provincial O.S., I feel as much overcome by nervousness as Hall Caine, who tells us in his recently published autobiography that the writing of a novel was always a terrible business to him. However, I will endeavour to explain my own personal experience with Canaries, which extends over a period of a quarter of a century, and, although I have not enjoyed such a lengthy connection as this on the show bench, I have succeeded in winning a fair number of prizes, the most treasured of which are the coveted championship diploma and medal of your own society. I propose in this essay dealing with the Yorkshire Canary, as, while I have always cherished a warm affection for several other varieties, I have had the longest connection with the "bird of grace and beauty."

Advance of the Yorkie.

What wonderful strides this handsome fellow has made during the past three decades! Thirty years back the writer of a standard work on exhibition Canaries dismissed the bird of the county of broad acres in the following short note: "The Yorkshire is a fine strong specimen of Canarydom. Robust and vigorous, both of voice and form. It is a pale buff (our genial Mr. Ramsden was apparently not known to the Fancy in those so-called halcyon days!), blending into white towards the back, the hinder part of the thigh, the head and rump. He is brown capped, and the wings terminate with the same colour." Thanks, however, largely to the hard work of the many clubs catering for this variety, it has been improved beyond all knowledge, and a fairly typical present-day Yorkie is a bird of nice, long, sleek proportions, with small oval-shaped head, bold eye, close-fitting, silky feather, neatly folded pipe-tail, evenly-carried flights, and perfectly rounded back and chest, with good long legs (not stilty), showing plenty of thigh. He should look bold and defiant, like a typical Briton, and while colour is not so essential in this variety as in some others, a judge likes to see a nicely colour-fed Yorkie.

Well-defined Breeding Principles.

The object of every budding aviarist is, naturally, to breed stock as near the ideal as possible, but, while there is no royal road by which this much-desired goal is reached, there are certain well-defined principles which, if faithfully followed, are more likely to result in success than would the pursuance of any haphazard method. It should always be remembered that, while like does not always produce like, good stock birds are undoubtedly the foundation of success, as, in the great majority of cases, the best show specimens are bred from the best stock birds.

Thus in pairing I would recommend the mating of a nice long cock bird—not under 7ins.—of fine rich salmon-tinted buff feather to a sleek typical yellow hen of medium size. She must be full of style and quality, and have feather like boxwood, as in my opinion the hen, generally speaking, exercises far more influence on the progeny than does her mate. Let one of the birds, if possible, possess Liverpool green blood, as this will tend to produce the much-desired, rich, goose-like feather in the offspring.

On the question of feeding a great diversity of opinion exists amongst fanciers, some advocating this method, and others that. But, while one cannot dogmatise on this matter, I will give you particulars of the general dietary that I have found to produce the best results. The hoppers should always be kept well filled with good sound Spanish Canary seed, which may be termed the birds' "staff of life." Then about three days a week a teaspoonful of the following mixture should be given each bird:—Equal parts best German rape, maw, white millet, niger, and gold of pleasure. This last-mentioned is extensively used by Yorkshire breeders in the county of the White Rose, and it undoubtedly puts on the birds' plumage that nice sheen and boxwood-like finish which judges so much admire. On the days the mixture is not given, a tit-bit in the shape of a piece of ripe plantain or sweet apple may be offered. Treated thus, birds will not go far wrong.

A few old Yorkshire show cages should from time to time be hung on the birds' ordinary cages, so that they may become thoroughly accustomed to them ere being sent out to shows, as nothing pleases a judge more than to see a well-trained and steady Yorkie.

The Ultimate Reward.

The beginner in this fascinating and ennobling hobby is almost certain to meet with disappointments, but he must not in the least permit these to dishearten him, but, on the contrary, let them act as an incentive to further effort, and by dogged perseverance he is sure to see his labours rewarded by ultimately bearing off the much-coveted "First and Special."

The Insurance of Birds:

An Ambitious Scheme Floated.

What is probably the first scheme of Insurance for Birds ever attempted by fanciers, has just been initiated by the London Federation of C.B.S., for the benefit of all its members.

It has for many long years been recognised that some scheme of insurance which would cover—or even partly cover—the risks taken by the bird-lover in the sending of his birds to shows, would be a great boon, especially to the working-men who comprise so large a part of the Fancy, and to whom the capital sunk in their birds represents so weighty an item. The consideration of such a scheme has been urged upon the Cage Bird Union, which, in fact, at the present moment is pledged to deal with the matter.

But the honour of formulating what it is hoped will prove a practical and workable insurance scheme falls to the London Federation of Cage Bird Societies, a body brought into being not so many months ago, with the following laudable objects:—(1) To assist London Societies in the conducting of their work; (2) to maintain the honour of the cage-bird Fancy; (3) the maintenance of the standard points of Canaries and other cage birds; (4) the suppression of fraud and dishonourable conduct therein; (5) the advancement and protection of the interests of breeders and exhibitors of cage birds. At the present moment the Federation comprises the following affiliated societies: Battersea C.B.A., City and Suburban A.C.B., Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S., Lewisham and District C.B.S., Leyton and District C.B.A., London C.B.A., London and Counties O.A., North London C.B.A., Queen's Park and District C.B.A., Poplar and District C.B.S., Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S., West London F.A., and the Wimbledon and District C.B.S. The secretary is Mr. P. Adamthwaite, 142, Fernhead Road, Maida Vale, London, W.

The Council of the Federation has power, further, by the permission of the majority of societies (inter alia) (1) To employ a solicitor for the purpose of advising or otherwise assisting its members; (2) to prosecute defaulting committees of shows; (3) to prosecute railway companies and others for negligence to birds in transit, and, if possible, to obtain reductions in charge for carriage, etc. But in whatever other way the Federation may prove helpful to its members, unquestionably the scheme of insurance it has pledged itself to carry through is the one that will attract widespread attention and interest.

Can this body of fanciers meet all liabilities likely to accrue? That is the vital question. That the benefits conferred (going far beyond mere insurance at exhibitions), are liberal in the extreme, considering the humble "premium" demanded, a perusal of the coupon and rules, printed below, will show. We have reason to know that the officials of the Federation (which, by-the-way, has probably something under 600 members), are not over confident that the scheme will pay its way, though they hope so, naturally, and will pay every just due and demand until the trend of events proves its soundness or otherwise. In our next issue we shall publish a complete and exhaustive inquiry into the scheme in all its bearings.

CERTIFICATE OF INSURANCE. £1

No.

I Hereby Give Notice that I have this day, the _____ 19 , despatched _____ (Description of consignment.) to _____ (Station or Show only.) by the _____ Railway, from _____ station.

I hereby declare that the bird/birds, intended to be covered by this Insurance, (Strike out one not needed.) is/are, to the best of my knowledge and belief, in perfect health, and properly packed.

I agree to abide by the Rules of Insurance as printed hereon. _____ (Insurer must sign this personally.)

In the event of any dispute arising in connection with this Insurance, the decision of the Council in all cases shall be final.

The Council reserves to itself the right to refuse any member's Insurance without assigning any reason for so doing. (See Over.)

Rules of Insurance.

Insurance under the Scheme of the Federation shall cover:—

(1) Loss of birds in transit (throughout the United Kingdom) whether to or from Shows, or sent on approval, or returned from being sent on approval.

(2) Loss by Death or Theft at Shows (fire excepted).

(3) Loss by Fire on owner's premises, but this shall not apply to loss by fire, due to the use of any heating or lighting apparatus in the birdroom.

For the purposes of Insurance, hooks containing six perforated Insurance Certificates with counterfoils can be obtained from the Secretary of the Federation at the cost of one shilling and a penny per book. Each Certificate will cover Insurance to the amount of £1, and any number of hooks may be purchased.

It must be accurately stated on the Certificate the time and date of despatch, destination to which birds are being sent (station only or show), and the following declaration duly signed:—

"I hereby declare that the bird or birds intended to be covered by this Insurance is, or are, to the best of my knowledge and belief in perfect health and properly packed."

Certificates to the required amount of Insurance (but not more than five in the case of a single bird) must be filled in as stated above, and sent to the Secretary of the Federation before, or at the time of the despatch of the birds, failing which no claim will be entertained; further, the Certificate or Certificates so used will only apply to the railway journey or show definitely stated thereon.

No claim will be entertained, in the case of birds delivered by rail, arriving ill or dead, unless this is pointed out to the railway official at the time of delivery, and the "Way Bill" signed accordingly. In the case of birds arriving at Shows ill or dead, the Show Secretary's notification will be deemed sufficient. In the event of death to a bird or birds which have been insured to the extent of £1 or over, it (or they) shall be sent by the owner, or by his instructions, to the Pathologist appointed by the Council, for a Post Mortem Examination, the expenses of which shall be defrayed by the Federation.

The Federation will not hold itself liable for a larger amount than £5 in the case of any single bird. Where a number of birds are sent, either on a railway journey or to a show, compensation in the event of loss will only be paid on an averaged amount of the Insurance.

The liability of the Federation, from all causes, shall not exceed £12 to any one member during any one year. Firms shall be considered to be one person for the purposes of Insurance. In the case of fire Insurance, where separate studs are kept, each member of such firm, to participate in the benefits, shall be separately insured.

Fire Insurance.

In the case of loss by fire, any hook purchased, so long as it remains intact, will cover such loss to the extent of £10, but should a hook be partly used at the time of fire, the remaining Certificates shall cover loss to the extent of £1 per leaf.

All hooks will be numbered, and a record of the disposal of such hook kept by the Secretary of the Federation.

Books of Certificates shall not be transferable, and shall cover Insurance for the year only in which they are issued.

Members of the Federation residing outside the area of the London District will be entitled to participate in the benefits of the Insurance.

This Insurance will only apply to Canaries and Cage Moulted British Hardhills, and is not intended to cover Foreign Birds or British Softbills, except under fire insurance, when they may be so insured.

Concerning Rooms and Cages.

If possible, a room should be set apart exclusively for the birds, but it must be well ventilated and quite free from draughts. Of course, good birds can be bred in one's living room; and, indeed, the celebrated yellow Norwich hen, "Queenie," which was sold to Mr. Eckersley for £20, was, we all know, bred in a bath-room.

As regards cages, I favour double-breeders, 32ins. long, 16ins. high, and 10ins. from back to front, with removable wire fronts. These are good, useful cages, and can be used all the year round. Late in the autumn the cages should be thoroughly scrubbed out in very hot (not boiling) water, into which some carbolic has been placed, afterwards painting the crevices well with a mixture of equal parts spirits of wine and turpentine, and a small piece of camphor. This will effectually exterminate any lurking red mite, which are a wicked and insidious enemy of the feathered tribe.

Bobbie Not Bashful.

A Robin at Ripley, near Guildford, has built its nest and hatched four eggs in a dinner basket which a man in the employ of a local farmer recently hung on a stable wall. Every day the owner of the basket uses it to keep his lunch in, and frequently takes it down to show to curious friends. The bird, however, seems in no way disturbed.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insistedupon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

COLOUR-OX.

COLOUR FEEDING

NO LONGER A SECRET.

We have decided to put on the market a special preparation for mixing with colour food; it is no new thing, as most of the red-hot ones are fed on the same lines; no eggs required. All you need is to mix your colour feed with Colour-Ox once a week, and keep your pots filled, and you will not only get a deeper colour, but your birds will come out of the moult in show condition, plump and fat, and not like those fed on egg and bread, purged to death, and half the show season gone before you can get them into condition. 1lb. sample 1/-, 2lbs. 1/6, 3lbs. 2/-, 7lbs. 4/6, 14lbs. 8/-, 28lbs. 14/6, carriage paid.—Cleminson and Taylor, Champion Norwich Breeders, 288, Aqueduct Street, Preston.

Your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, is so much in demand here, writes Mr. J. Tipton (Wellington), that one has to order it beforehand in order to be able to secure a copy. Being a lover of birds myself, and a reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS for nearly four years, I consider it the most interesting and practical paper of the day. The most experienced bird fancier can learn something fresh from it.

Your very prettily-bound volume of CAGE BIRDS, which I won at our last annual show, writes Mr. Joseph J. Cloke, chairman of the Y.C.C., of Ireland, has reached me, for which please accept my best thanks. I have taken CAGE BIRDS in regularly for I cannot say how many years, but each Friday makes me as eager to run to the paper-shop as if I were only just commencing. I wish the novices and even the champions would pay more heed to the Doubts and Difficulties columns, not forgetting the valuable notes given by our many noted fanciers and judges. I have been amongst the birds since I was eight years old, and although my father was not a fancier, he always encouraged me to keep birds and animals. If all I have had could be collected together, I could set up a zoo of my own. I still keep a few foreigners, of which I like my dear old Parrot (now 15 years old) the best. I reared him from a fledging on bread, milk, and sugar. He is in splendid plumage, and appears twice a year at our Dublin shows, always paying his way. I wish your journal an even wider circulation, if that is possible.

Two years last January I first saw a copy of CAGE BIRDS, and from that day I have never missed a copy. Each issue seems better than the previous one. Mr. Norman's pictures are splendid; everyone makes me long to possess such a bird. I often wonder how fanciers can produce such birds. I myself have never yet had the good luck to see a bird-show. I am a soldier, so, of course, my time is not my own, and I cannot very well take the birds along with me, especially abroad. At the time of writing, I have four young on the perch and nine fertile eggs. I have received all the information I possess from CAGE BIRDS, and I believe if the instructions given were followed out by people like myself they would not have so many disappointments. I may say that in my six or seven years' keeping of birds (Norwich) I have never had one die nor egg-bound; although this year I had a hen leave a nest of five eggs, all fertile, the day previous to their being due to hatch. These eggs I put in a Hedge Sparrow's nest, however, and three young were hatched out. Two of them perished on the fourth morning, and I found them dead in the nest—probably they died because of the nature of the food on which they were fed. I wish CAGE BIRDS all the success it so richly deserves.—F. E. HEWITT, C.S. (Cavan).

Read this Remarkable Testimony from Advertisers.

Kindly allow me to thank all who sent replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS of recent date, writes Mr. U. Callear (Dawley). They are too numerous for me to answer all.

Kindly thank all who wrote me respecting the birds I advertised in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. D. Barbour (Broughty Ferry). The replies were too numerous for me to answer personally.

Kindly thank those who wrote making offers for the hen Bullfinch, which I advertised for sale in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. A. Turner (Farnworth). I had replies from all over England, Scotland and Wales. The first reply reached me at 5.30 on the Friday night. This shows what an excellent advertising medium your paper must be. I shall never think of advertising in any other. I wish it still further success.

Kindly allow me to thank all who sent replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS. They were too numerous for me to answer, which speaks highly for your paper, writes Mr. James Graveson (Kendal).

I have taken CAGE BIRDS for two years, and I find it beats every paper for advertising in. I would not be without it for anything.—A. G. SCOTCHER (Cambridge).

All my Siberians are sold, writes Mr. E. French (Harlow), through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS. I could have sold four times the number if I had had them.

Kindly thank all who replied to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS recently with regard to the hens which I sold on the Friday, writes Mr. W. H. White (Cainscross), as I cannot possibly reply to all.

Kindly thank all who replied to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS recently, respecting my cock Linnet and my Canary, writes Mr. J. Harvey (Measham), as I could only reply to those who sent stamps. I had replies from Scotland and Wales, and the birds were sent to Scotland to a gentleman from whom I got a postal order the day after the date of issue. This speaks well for good old CAGE BIRDS, as it is the best paper to advertise in when one has any birds to part with.

Kindly thank all who replied to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS respecting an incubator, writes Mr. G. E. Smith (Lowestoft). It was sold by one o'clock on the Friday, prior to the date of issue, a gentleman coming fifteen miles by motor car to purchase it.

Please thank all who answered my advertisement respecting a Greenfinch, writes Mr. F. Brailsford (Mansfield). I received too many letters to be able to reply personally to each. Amongst them were some very good offers; and I am now supplied. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

I have received orders from all over the country through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS writes Mr. W. Ackroyd (Bradford), which shows that your paper has a very wide circulation.

I cannot speak too highly of your splendid paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. T. Mitchell (Dudley). It must be really a great boon to the present-day Fancy. I wish the paper every success.

I get CAGE BIRDS every Friday night at 7.30 p.m., writes Mr. J. Hands (South Shields). I got a letter from Thornaby-on-Tees in reply to my last advertisement before that time. I sent the bird on and received a postal order for same on the Monday. On the Saturday a well-known fancier from Newcastle bought a bird off me. This is smart work, and great credit is due to CAGE BIRDS.

I wish to thank all who so kindly answered my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS respecting her Bullfinches, writes Mr. H. Riddington (Newmarket), as I had so many replies that I could not answer them all. These replies poured in from all parts of the country. This speaks well for CAGE BIRDS, which I wish every success.

The number of answers to my advertisements in CAGE BIRDS were greatly above my expectations, writes Mr. Robert Fox (Penzance). I could only reply to a mere tithe of them; if I had answered the whole it would have cost me fully 50 per cent. of the value of my birds in stamps. I have taken in CAGE BIRDS from the first, and have been greatly pleased with the progress it has made. Having met with an accident nine years ago, I have not been able to stand since, so I have to be content confined to my room and enjoy my birds in their cages. I hope that the time may come when I may be able to again enjoy the Britishers in their natural haunts. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

I have for the past two years been a subscriber to CAGE BIRDS, and I look out for it every Friday. In fact, I would rather miss the daily paper than miss your valuable Fancy journal. I have also had CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL and several of the books published through your office, and I advise all my fancier friends to do likewise. I have only gone in for birds since getting your various publications, and I have been helped very much by same.—WM. M'INTOSH (Glasgow).

I am pleased to say I have picked up a lot of valuable information since I have taken in your grand paper, CAGE BIRDS, and I advise all bird keepers and bird lovers to have in their possession CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, for it is a great help to all beginners such as I am myself. I am trying together a singing cock Greenfinch and a hen Norwich Canary, and a cock brown Linnet and a hen German Canary, and I hope I shall have luck with them. But if I do I shall only have CAGE BIRDS and CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL to thank for it.—R. MILLIN (Sutton Coldfield).

Monthly meeting held June 5th, at Airlie Arms Hotel, Kirriemuir. Mr. J. Stevenson presided. At a meeting, held May 27, it was decided that we have a ramble in Epping Forest on June 19, with Mr. J. S. Clarke as guide. Mr. Clarke will not want introducing; but to those who have not had this privilege of being with him, I may say that with a fine day, a treat is in store for them. Friends (ladies especially) are cordially invited. The train leaves Gospel Oak at 2.4 p.m. and Harringay Park 2.17 p.m., and reaches Chingford at 2.50 p.m., all to purchase their own tickets.—GEO. H. NEAL, Hon. Sec.

WOOD GREEN F.F. & A.

Usual monthly meeting held at headquarters, June 8th, when Mr. Geo. Gardner treated the members to a very instructive and interesting lecture on Cage Birds. After questions, Mr. Gardner was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. The attendance of members was very good, and our society is growing so fast that our meeting-place won't hold us much longer. Final arrangements for the cage bird young stock show, July 13th, in the Parish Hall, St. Paul's, Station-road, Wood Green, are being made. Birds will be staged by 5 p.m. We hope to make a success of this, our first show. A number of new members were made. Arrangements are being made for an outing later on. Tickets for admission to the show can be had from the secretary.—T. CALLEGARI, Scc.

BORDER CITY (Carlisle) O.S.

General meeting held at headquarters, June 2nd, and was fairly well attended. The chairman remarked on the doings of society and the committee since last general meeting. The pair show, dinner, and ramble were mentioned, and the enthusiasm shown in each reveals the good feeling existing among the members. It was proposed by Mr. W. Davidson that the nest feather show be held on Bank Holiday, August 2nd, and seconded by Mr. McWilliams. The classes for the said show were left to the committee to formulate. A rough draft of classes for the annual show on October 26th and 27th had previously been drawn up by the committee, and this was unanimously passed by the meeting in its entirety. We are providiug 46 classes, viz., Borders 10, Norwich 8, Yorkshire 5, Scotch Fancy 2, A.O.V. 2, Mules and Hybrids 3, British 11, and Foreign 5. Silver cup presented to society by Mr. Holmes was on exhibition. Another ramble to take place on June 27th was proposed by Mr. Holmes, and seconded, our destination being left to Mr. Gco. Davidson, the secretary, to notify members through the Fancy Press.—J. BELL, Scc. (pro. tem.).

SCOTTISH CREST CLUB.

Committee meeting held in Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Glasgow, on June 5th. Deep regret was expressed for the loss of our late secretary through death, whose office will be hard to fill, as he was ever courteous and obliging, and no work seemed too much for him if it was in. the iuterests of the S.C.C. The secretary was instructed to write a note of sympathy to the widow and family in their sad bereavement. Electiou of office-bcarers for 1909: Presideut, Mr. G. F. Adamson; vice-presidents, Messrs. H. Moreland, W. Cairns, G. Mackie, C. Campbell, J. Noble, and J. McLay; auditors, Messrs. J. Young, G. Smart; secretary, A. Chalmers, 27, Hillhead, Kirkintillock. Letters of apology were read from Messrs. H. Moreland and W. Griffiths, who were absent through ill-health. Applications were read from various societies soliciting the patronage of the club show. The following were selected for club's patronage: Dundee (where the club's annual show will be held in conjunction with that society's November show), City of Glasgow, Perth, Kilmarnock, Glasgow and West of Scotland, Aberdeen, Scottish National, Dunfermline, and Paisley, if they add a selling class for Crest or Crest-bred Limit £1 to the classification already granted. A letter of complaint was read from Mr. R. Whitton to the effect that members were winning club's specials and not conforming with the club's standard show cage, nor having them uniform in colour. The committee not having any information the secretary was instructed to ask the complainant by whom and where the specials were won, and to write Mr. C. Roberts anent the points cup, and also to issue a circular to members on behalf of a special fund for club show. The next meeting is to be called for August 7th. Usual monthly meeting held in the Hall Cafe, Stockton Heath, on June 10th, when there was a very good attendance. After the usual business we were favoured with a paper on colour-feeding by Mr. C. Dukes, followed by two very stirring addresses on the same subject by Messrs. E. Houghton and F. Walter, the discussion following showing how much the paper and the addresses were appreciated. The meeting was closed by a very hearty vote of thanks being proposed to the three gentlemen for so kindly coming to our assistance.—BENJ. Moss, Hon. Sec.

On June 14, the first lecture on Cage Birds was given by Mr. T. L. Castree, of Mountain Ash, at Coole's Restaurant, Arcade. There was a fair attendance, and the lecturer dealt with the management, breeding and moulting of Canaries and British birds. Questions were asked, and satisfactory answers were given. The best thanks of the society were accorded to Mr. Castree for giving us such an entertaining lecture. It is hoped these lectures will be the means of considerably increasing the membership. The next lecture will be duly announced.—McLUCAS and JAMES, Secretaries.

CLAPHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Presentation to the Late Secretary, Mr. Stephen Baker.

On June 7th, at the headquarters of the society, The Landor, Landor-road, Clapham, in the presence of a large number of members and friends, the chairman, Mr. W. H. Vale, presented Mr. Baker with a handsome gold watch, subscribed for by the fellow members and other fancier friends of Mr. Baker as a slight recognition of the valuable services he had rendered to the society from its commencement down to the beginning of the present year. Mr. Vale said everyone knew that a society without a secretary was of no use, although he was the most blamed, most sought for, and, after all, the most beloved officer of the society. No secretary was more thorough or hardworking than the late seeretary. Through the secretary a society was either made or marred, and in our case it largely owed its popularity to Mr. Baker. When we thought of the hard work entailed by the first open show, and the thorough way in which even the smallest detail was carried out, we could only marvel how he did it, with little or no experience of such undertakings, and it was evident that our friend was not an ordinary but an extraordinary secretary, and on behalf of the soeiety he had very great pleasure in handing Mr. Baker the watch, and hoped he would live long to enjoy the use of it, and that he would wear it in remembrance of the society.

Mr. Baker, in reply, said he was very pleased to hear the kindly remarks of the chairman, and that he thought he had hardly deserved all that had been said of him, and he could not have received a gift he could more appreciate. He would value it, not for its intrinsic value, but as a souvenir, as it would remind him of the many pleasant evenings he had spent with his fellow members. He thonght a secretary was not of much good unless he had a good committee to back him up, and he had found the committee of this society aways ready to assist him, and he wished the society very great prosperity in the future.

Mr. Sandy, Mr. Yeoman, and Mr. Silver supported the chairman, and all spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Baker, who, Mr. Yeoman said, had put the society on a footing that was second to none, and it would he their own fault if it went back from the pinnacle on which Mr. Baker had placed it by his long spell of hard work.

A Rumour Refuted.

A meeting will be held on June 21st., at headquarters, "The Sessions House Hotel." Clerkenwell Road, E.C., at 8.30. Notice of a resolution has been given proposing the withdrawal from the Federation of Cage Birds Societies. A member has stated that it is common property, that owing to the resignation of our late secretary (Mr. Pretty) the Association is to be wound up or dissolved. Mr. Pretty has informed me that, although he has resigned the secretaryship, his interest is still as keen as, if not keener than ever, and will do all in his power for our welfare. Will the members please rally round, and make a good entry for the forthcoming Young Bird Show, and bring home to our traducers the lie direct? —W. GILBERT, Hon. Scc.

NATIONAL GREEN-MARKED YORKSHIRE C.C.

General meeting held on June 5th, at the Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. W. H. Shackleton (President) in the chair. Although the weather was wet and unseasonable, a representative gathering assembled. The following additional officers for the ensuing season were unanimously elected: Mr. Thompson Ogden (Ogden Bros.), Vice-President; Messrs. F. Hammond and S. Dean, Auditors; Messrs. F. Townsend and H. Walsh, Scrutineers; Committee: Messrs. F. Hodgson, F. Townsend, H. W. Walsh, J. Wilcock, F. Hammond, S. Dean, H. Hill, H. J. Chittenden, W. Firth, W. A. Cowgill, F. C. Crawhall (Newcastle), A. E. Bishop (Worcester), and J. Curric (Barrow-in-Furness). A unanimous vote of thanks was passed to Mr. T. C. Crawhall for his kindness in presenting a gold-centre silver medal for the novice competition. It was decided that the club's patronage be granted to not more than 10 shows during the season, and that no judge be allowed to judge at more than one show. An early application by societies for the club's patronage is desirable; societies desiring same must make at least four classes for green-marked Yorkshires (ticked birds are not included in this classification). The classification is: 1, Green-marked or variegated yellow Yorks (cock), including evenly-marked; 2, ditto buff ditto; 3, ditto yellow hen; 4, ditto buff hen. Foul or heavily variegated Yorks classes are optional. The first four are compulsory, and the latter at the societies' discretion. The method of counting points in the competition created a large and earnest amount of discussion. At length it was decided that only three birds be allowed to compete, and these must be starred. Several members objected to this, but eventually it was carried. Only seven highest birds are to count in each class, and these must be supplied by the judge. The rules and regulations as submitted by the committee (pro tem) were unanimously passed, subject to slight alterations. The annual subscription is 2s. 6d., which is now due, and may be paid to me or to any member of the committee, and which will be returned in case of non-acceptance as a member by the committee. We have now enrolled exactly 60 members, and are desirous of having not less than 100 before the show season. We desire it to be national in every respect, both in membership and representation. The club is a specialist one and belongs to no Union, so that all can join without risk. The committee is an all-England committee, and we are desirous of still spreading it. The following gentlemen and exhibitors have already joined: Messrs. F. Armstrong, H. W. Battye, A. E. Bishop, L. Briggs, W. H. Berry, Bailey and Swanger, W. A. Cowgill, A. Cooper, H. H. Clarke, B. Cowell, L. Casey, Greaves and Crabtree, T. C. Crawhall, J. Crowther, J. Currie, W. Cruise, R. Croft, J. E. Clarke, E. J. Cundall, E. Clegg, Halliday and Chittenden, S. Dean, E. B. Denton, R. Drake and Son, A. Firth, W. Firth, H. Hill, F. Hammond, L. Hodgson, F. Hodgson, Messrs. Hartley, D. Hollors, W. Jones, F. Murgatroyd, J. Moorhouse, P. Mason, H. Myers, Ogden Bros., T. Pickup, W. H. Shackleton, R. Sutcliffe and Son, F. Slater, E. Smith, W. Simpson Stansfield, F. Townsend, J. A. Taylor, H. N. Towers, J. Wilson, J. Wilcock, L. Watmough, H. W. Walsh, J. W. Wharton, and J. Waterworth. Yorkshire fanciers, support the club that is supporting you by enabling you to have a classification for those birds you have previously been practically unable to exhibit through lack of chance, especially the even-marked birds. Join us at once and show your appreciation of our efforts.—F. ARMSTRONG, Hon. Sec and Treas., 78, Pear-street, Halifax.

CRESTED CANARY CLUB.

I have to thank you for granting me space in your columns to ask societies to apply for C.C.C. support. The response has been widespread. I place the shows in alphabetical order.

Nov. 5th and 6th, Blaydon-on-Tyne and Dis., judge J. Robson; Oct. 27th and 28th, Bristol, judge T. Heath; Nov. 11th and 12th, Cambridge, judge J. Robson; Oct. 12th and 13th, Dulwich O.S., ditto; Dec. 2nd, Frome, ditto; Dec. 4th and 6th, Leicester, judge J. Roe; Nov. 26th to 29th, London Cage Bird Association, judge J. Robson; Manchester,* judge E. Godley; Oct. 31st, Nov. 1st, Norwich, judge W. E. Greeves; Nov. 13th, 15th, Nottingham, judge T. Heath; (uo date), Plymouth, judge J. Robson; Dec. 31st, 1909, Jan. 1st, 1910, Scottish National,* judge T. Taylor; Nov. 19th, 20th, Sunderland, judge T. Heath.

* Socicties marked thus, are in default, as not having elected a club judge. If they can re-arrange their judging I trust they will do so. The club judges are (in the order in which they were cleoted): T. Heath and J. Robson (by an equal number of votes), W. E. Greeves, R. Rhodes, T. J. King, J. Tyson, Revd. Joyce, R. L. Crisp, R. B. Tope, J. Robson, G. Colledge, and J. S. Clarke.

I would respectfully draw the attention of all socicties to Mr. Ley's scheme, promulgated at the last Palace Show. I hope to lay a workahle scheme before the Fancy in the near future, wherehy it will be necessary for clubs receiving C.C.C. support to provide not less than eight classes. In return the C.C.C. will partially guarantee the classes in such a way as to make the total loss (under the worst possible conditions) to the society holding the show not exceed 2s. 6d. per class, or 20s., on the total number of classes. Shows at which the club's trophics are offered will he asked to provide 15 classes, and the C.C.C. will extend to them a similar guarantee.

I trust that all fanciers interested in the Crested Canary, especially memhers of the C.C.C., will follow this scheme carefully. Criticism and advice will he welcomed. It must be constructed on a commonsense, comprehensive, and, ahove all, an equitahle hasis.—J. S. Clarke, hon. secretary and treasurer, Sunnyside, Prospect Road, Woodford Green, Essex.

LONDON FEDERATION OF C.B.S.

Meeting of the Council held at "The Feathers," Great Chapel-street, June 4th. Present: Messrs. H. E. Tringham (in the chair), R. L. Crisp, F. W. Thorpe, A. C. Burn, W. H. Mugford, J. W. Cook and J. Dewhurst; F. Boxall and T. Miller (L.C.B.A); A. W. Curtis (City and Suburban); F. Easterling (Battersea C.B.A.); J. Wyatt (Poplar and Dis. C.B.S.); J. C. Birch and W. Clark (Queen's Park and Dis. C.B.A.); W. Penton and R. Harper (North London C.B.A.); C. H. Cooper (Leyton and Dis. C.B.A.); E. S. Lugg (Lewisham and Dis. C.B.S.); J. Turner (West London F.A.); J. Carson (Wimbledon C.B.S.); A. Cunningham and F. W. Tomsett (Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.); E. Meades (Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S.); F. W. Hamer (Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S.); R. J. Pretty (London and Counties O.S.); and P. Adamthwaite, the Hon. Sec.

A communication from the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. was read in reply to a letter from the Federation, suggesting that the Union co-operate with them and the Cage Bird Union, in the upholding of each other's disqualifications, and in the endeavour to obtain some concessions from the railway companies. The Union agreed not only to fall in with the suggestions, but also to bear their share of the expenses involved. The Union considered that the Federation were better placed than either the Yorkshire Union or the C.B.U. for dealing with the railway question, as they were "on the spot" as regards the headquarters of the principal railways. In refereuce to the disqualifications, it was agreed that all such notified to the Union from the date of that letter (May 24, 1909) by the London Federation, would be upheld by the Union. The Union further suggested that all the specialist clubs in Yorkshire be approached on the question. The Secretary of the Federation was instructed to write thanking the Union for their reply, and the suggestions contained therein. Mr. Raynes' reply, on behalf of the C.B.U., was also read, and was to the effect that he would bring the subject before the next meeting of his Council to be held shortly.

The next business was the considcration of cases of defaulting members of the London and Counties O.S. One of the late members attended, and left a written statement. The Council found that three of the cases were those in which the last subscriptions due to the society were in respect of 1907, and it was unanimously agreed that the Federation had no jurisdiction whatever in the matter as regarded the years 1907 and 1908. In regard to 1909 a great deal of discussion ensued. Some of the delegates were of the opinion that the cases in question did come within the jurisdiction of the Council, while others were just as strongly of the opinion that they did not. In the end it was decided that the rules could not be made retrospective, and that therefore the Council could not adjudicate upon the matter. The Council, however, while they could not deal with the 1907 and 1908 cases, made it known that they intend putting the rules respecting defaulting members into full force as from January 1st of the present year. Defaulting members will be allowed five months' grace in which to pay off their arrears, after which the Secretary of the Federation will write offering them another month in which to make good their claims to membership of the respective societies. A communication from the Secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. was next read. It concerned the non-payment of subscriptions and levies due by certain members, the latter in respect of a fund for the liquidation of the debt incurred in the holding of the last open show. As the chairman of the Federation was also chairman of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., he vacated the chair for the time being, and Mr. Crisp (vice-chairman) presided over this particular business. It was decided that in the matter of the subscriptions the Council could not act at this stage, as the time limit under Rule 6 had not yet expired, and that the secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. be instructed to write to the defaulting members, giving them one month in which to meet their liabilities, and to report further to the Council. This decision also applies in the case of the levy imposed by the Council. The Chairman then presided over the remainder of the business.

The report of the Insurance Committee was adopted, together with the several minor alterations recommended by it, and the two following rules: "In the event of any dispute arising in connection with this insurance, the decision of the Council in all cases shall he final"; and "The Council reserves to itself the right to refuse any member's insurance without assigning any reason for so doing."

According to the agenda, Mr. Easterling was to have asked for the ruling of the Council in the case of Wade v. Battersea Open C.B.S., but as the matter had been settled in the society, leave was given for Mr. Easterling to withdraw his motion.

Mr. R. J. Pretty's motion "that the Council, in view of the increasing amount of correspondence which the office of secretary to the Federation involves, consider the advisability of appointing an assistant honorary secretary," was allowed to lie on the table. Some discussion followed Mr. W. C. Penton's motion, "That the appointed time of Council meetings be 7.45 p.m., business to commence at 8 p.m. prompt, and close at 10.30 p.m., or such less time." A letter from Mr. Cook, secretary of the Poplar and Dis. C.B.S., submitting cases of defaulting members was read, but this was withdrawn for the same reasons holding good in the case of the London and Counties O.S.

At the close of the business Mr. Burn suggested that the Federation have a convivial evening to commemorate the anniversary of the formation of the Federation in October. This was agreed to. It was also suggested by Mr. Thorpe that a ramble be promoted, but this matter was not decided upon. This closed another important and admirably-conducted meeting.

Morley and District C.B.S.

The members held their first annual ramble on Whit Monday, when about 30 members and friends joined us. We left Morley at 6 o'clock, took car at Churwell for Leeds, and another car to Rodley, where we were met by Mr. John Kinder, who then took the lead. After breakfast we went along the canal side as far as far as Calverley. Walking along the canal it was a real pleasure to see the fishes racing and jumping about the water. It was here we had our first bit of fun. Four or five of our number were missing, and on looking back we found them in the water, their clothes piled up on the canal side. It was here, too, we first saw the Chaffinches. We heard the Blackbirds and Thrushes singing, and felt we were out in the country. Leaving the canal we found ourselves in Apperly Bridge. We went along the main road for about two miles, and then had lunch. We afterwards went across the fields to Eshult estate. Here there was some lovely country, and to listen to the birds singing was a real joy to us birdy men. It was here we found plenty of nests, but neither eggs nor young were in them; they seemed all to have been forsaken. We now came to one of the nicest villages in Yorkshire—Eshulf itself. To see the houses all of about the same pattern, and to see the gardens, some of us felt sure the people must have great delight in the place. Leaving Eshult, it commenced to rain, and we were glad to run under the trees. After the rain had given over, we went on to Hawksworth, where we had dinner and a little rest. We then journeyed on to Menston, where it started raining again, so we turned back and went to Guisley, and from there to Horsforth, where we took the car again to Leeds, and then back to Morley, being then about tired out. But we had had a very good time, and much enjoyment.—Robt. H. Turner, hon. secretary.

Torbay O.S. (Paignton).

The annual outing took place on June 2nd, in the beautiful and well-wooded grounds of Berry Pomeroy Castle. Unfortunately the weather was none too encouraging. Nevertheless, a fairly good muster put in an appearance. A start was made at 2.30, when, under the guidance of that well-known British bird fancier, Mr. P. W. Mugford, we started off at a rate that might not disgrace many Marathon runners. It was soon evident, however, that pace was beginning to tell on some of the "old 'uns," so it was not long ere we arrived at a more comfortable going. We were soon taken to a spot where the scenery attracted out attention for some time. Its magnificence was great. We looked in one direction and saw that vast and ruddy stretch of land, Dartmoor. In the opposite direction we saw Torbay, with Torquay and Brixham on either side, and in another direction traced the wooded valley of the river Dart. In all it presented a wonderful scene. Our journey was continued until 5 o'clock, when we had tea at Berry Lodge, very ably provided by Mrs. Rowden. After full justice had been done, photographs of the party were taken by Mr. W. Hodges. The ramble was continued through the lovely wooded grounds in which the Castle stands. Several nests were found on our way home, which, after a very enjoyable time, was reached about 8.30.—C. Parnell, secretary.

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1909 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

This has not heen a very good seasou round here so far, the fault being in most cases with the hens not sitting out the time, or refusing to feed.—J. H. O'Neill (Lurgan).

I am having fairly good luck at hreeding this season. The second round is just hatching out, and numbering more per nest than the first, out of which I have saved a score.—H. E. Parrott (Weybridge).

We are having a poor hreeding season generally speaking; hut the novices are the exception, one in particular having hred 12 young from 12 eggs in the first round. The second round resulted in 11 young from 12 eggs. All these are from one pair of Norwich and two pairs of Borders.—D. Hann (Fencehouses).

I think for young heginners our case will compare favourahly with most in the matter of breeding results. This is our second year. We have 5 pairs of Canaries, aud up to the time of writing have 32 young hirds, all doing well, and 3 hens sitting. I think our success partly due to having good birds to start with. We bought them at the heginning of last year from a well-known Norwich firm, and paid a good price for them. We did well last year, hut, of course, had not so many hirds to breed with. Our birds were all in good trim to start with this year, and have done well. Cage Birds has helped us very much.—M. Plank (Shepton Mallet).

The Young Naturalist.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

*The Orphan Larks.

One day some men were cutting grass in a field, when the machine cut off a poor mother Lark's head. She had sat on her nest to protect her young. The man who was on the machine picked the nest up and put the young ones in a Robin's nest, and the Robins looked after them until they could fly.—Taken from a story hook, and sent by Wm. Boram, 4, Auckingford Gardens, Shelly, near Ongar, Essex.

A Raven's Instinct.

In a Christian home in Poland great poverty had come, and one day the man was obliged to move out of the house. While he and his family were kneeling in prayer, there was a tap on the window-pane. They opened the window, and there was a Raven that the family had fed and trained, and it had in its bill a ring all set with precious stones, which was found to be a ring belonging to the Royal family. It was taken up to the King's residence, and for the honesty of the man in bringing it hack, he had a house given him, and a garden and a farm.—Taken from "Good Words." Sent by Elliott Tilley (age 12), 84, Station Road, Gorsty Hill, near Halesowen.

*The First Cuckoo.

Yesterday I heard him say,
Dim, and faint, and far away,—
Cuckoo!
Heard him whisper it in dreams,
By gay fields and hidden streams,
Cuckoo!
Cuckoo's hard to hind or find,
Hear him shout on every wind,—
Cuckoo!
Every copse and every hill
Echo his vagrant shouting still,
Cuckoo!
Round the house when day is dim,
Hark the sounding cry of him,—
Cuckoo!
He it is that wakes the woods
And the lovers' solitudes;
Cuckoo!
What delight! that wild delight!
Hails me from the fields at night!
Cuckoo!

In the Courts.

Taking Young Thrushes.

T. E. Broughton (19), All Saints' Road, Leicester, was summoned, on June 12th, at the County Police Court for having in his possession, after March 15, four Thrushes, recently taken contrary to the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1881, and also with giving his wrong address at New Parks, on June 4.

Defendant admitted bird-nesting, but said he gave one of his two addresses.—P.C. Kirby spoke to accosting defendant subsequent to seeing him walking by the sides of the hedges. On searching him he found the Thrushes, and on asking defendant his address, Broughton gave a wrong address, but subsequently gave a different one when at Glenfield police-station.

Defendant wished to say nothing and was ordered to pay the costs, 10s.

The speed of the Peregrine when striking the quarry must he tremendous. So fast do they stoop, that in many cases, even when following a swift flier, they strike and are unable to bind, heing carried onward; but if they strike fairly they either knock the wind out of the quarry, hreak a wing, or in other ways damage it sufficiently to hring it to earth, when the Falcon quickly follows. It is on record that a Peregrine has struck a flying Grouse sufficiently hard to cut the head clean off.

The National British Bird and Mule Club, judging by the balance-sheet embodied in the annual report, which reaches us from the secretaries, Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr (2, Broad Street Station, London, E.C.), had a remarkably prosperous season, financially, during 1908-9. The previous year saw a sum of £1 6s. 9d. due to the treasurer, but this has been transformed into a balance of cash in hand of no less than £12 11s. 5d., bringing the total assets of the Club (including medals, cups, etc.), to £27 17s. 7d. This should enable the Club to put up a good list of medals at the 1909 shows, and fanciers desirous of joining the N.B.B. and M.C. should notify the secretaries at once.

The Pudsey, Stanningley, and Dis. O.S. have issued a list of the members' shows to be held during the 1909 season. The shows are to be held at the Oddfellows' Hall Hotel, Stanningley. The First Feather Show is to be held on June 26th, and the three second feather shows on October 27th, November 24th, and December 26th.

The judges selected for our open show, to be held on November 10th and 11th next, are Messrs. J. H. Payne (Gloucester), and Chas. Houlton (St. Helens).

Arrangements are in hand for the holding of our autumn Members' Show, on our usual dates, November 4th and 5th, in conjunction with the Members' Show of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. A sub-committee from each society has been appointed to confer and to arrange all details in connection therewith.—H. E. TRINGHAM, hon. sec. London and Provincial O.S.

I am well satisfied with the results of my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. P. Macfarlane (Manchester). I could not supply all applicants. I had letters from all over the globe, including a large order from Switzerland, which I could not supply, as I was sold out. Your paper, "C.B.," must have a very large and wide-spread circulation indeed.

OBITUARY.

Much sympathy will be extended to Mr. and Mrs. Peel on the death of their youngest daughter on June 8th, after a brief illness, writes Mr. John Kay, secretary of the Deans and Dis. C.B.S. Mr. Peel is vice-president of our society. It is chiefly to his earnest endeavours that the society owes its origin, and the members at this time extend to him their warmest sympathy.

It is my painful duty, writes Mr. S. J. Kent, hon. secretary, Dulwich O.S., to report yet another loss to an official of our society. Mr. Smith, a member of the committee, has lost his little daughter, Ivy, aged five years, after a short illness. Much sympathy will be felt for Mr. and Mrs. Smith in their sad bereavement by all who know them.

"Bronchorine" has a high reputation amongst fanciers who have given it a trial, as a reliable and permanent remedy in cases of colds, asthma, wheezing, and loss of tone generally, in all kinds of birds, and as a tonic during the moult. It is sold by Dr. Rodgers, Radford Boulevard, Nottingham, and only requires adding to the drinking water.

Absolutely alone stands Sandiford's Royal Red. So say Messrs. Baker, Barnes, Cook, Rennie, Hodder, Spillman, Grey, Dobinson, Booth, Howard Davis, Irons, Eckersley, Towers, Roe, Battye, Bexson; and these are a few of our leading judges and exhibitors. I can't give further proof than I have already done in back numbers. Other's Feeds are only 3rd class.—(ADVT.)

I was very pleased to see the reproduction of my buff pied Scotch Fancy hen on the front page of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Robert Willison (Barrow-in-Furness), and great credit is due to your artist (Mr. Norman) for so lifelike a sketch, the markings especially being exact. The said hen was only a last year's young one, and was first every time shown, with the exception of the Palace, where it seemed to contract a cold, and died two days afterwards. But such is a fancier's luck; we have to put up with these sad losses.

The members intend having their annual ramble on June 20th, to Asquith, where dinner will be had at the Black Horse Hotel, writes Mr. D. Marsden, hon. secretary of the Shipley O.S. They would be pleased to see other fanciers and friends. The train leaves Bradford at 10.15 for Ben Rhydding. Should the weather be favourable, they will undoubtedly have an enjoyable time.

The City and Suburban A.C.B. has placed another successful show to the credit of the society, the balance-sheet of their recent British and Foreign bird exhibition showing a small profit. You will notice that by the aid of the profit made upon the sale of CAGE BIRDS ANNUALS (which were all sold out on the night in less than ten minutes), we have again come out on the right side, remarks the hon. secretary, Mr. V. Wynn, when sending the balance-sheet to us.

At the Jubilee Palace Show over 300 awards were won by birds moulted solely on Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Reference to the show catalogue will prove the truth of this statement. Ramsden's Pure Peppers are unequalled for purity and richness of colour. This season's Tasteless is of marvellous colour, and the Hot is richer in colour than ever, being a blend of carefully selected Spanish and Natal capsicums. When you ask for Ramsden's Peppers, see you get them. If the dealer offers you something "just as good," don't have it. Insist on having Ramsden's, the best the world produces, and fully guaranteed. Prices: Tasteless, 2s. lb.; 5-lb. canisters, 7s. 6d.; 22lbs., 30s. Hot, 3s. lb.; 5lbs. 12s. 6d.—J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London, S.W.—(ADVT.)

At our annual show, to be held on December 11th, writes Mr. J. Forrest, hon. secretary of the Whitburn and Dis. C.B.S., Mr. Allan Chalmers will judge the Crests and Norwich, Mr. Anthony Hay the Border Fancies, and Mr. Sam. Ward, the British birds and mules.

The June number of "British Birds" (one shilling net, Witherby and Co., 326, High Holborn, W.C.), commences a new volume, in the preface to which the Editors state that in future they hope to devote special attention to the subject of the migration of birds. Accordingly there is an excellent article by Dr. J. A. Allen, giving a summary of the views held by American ornithologists chiefly on the general aspects of the migration of birds. Readers of "British Birds" are also promised a series of articles by Commander N. Lynes, dealing with the migration of birds in the Mediterranean. The "British Birds" Marking Scheme is fully described and explained in the present issue, and Messrs. F. Barber-Starkey and J. Walpole-Bond contribute notes on the nesting habits of the Woodlark in North Devon, and the Lesser Redpoll in Sussex respectively. The number is one of the best yet issued.

One to the Sparrow.

Who says the Sparrow is destructive? He has been busy all the morning clearing the aphis off my rambler rose climbing over the porch. For every rose I gather he will be welcome to a feed of corn; surely one good turn deserves another.—J.H.

Poison Blamed.

At the examination into the affairs of Mr. A. A. Pool, of Bristol, well-known as a breeder and exhibitor of Crested Canaries, Mr. Pool (according to the "Western Daily Press"), attributed his position to, amongst other things, "losses through death of Canaries through poison."

No Green in his Eye.

A certain farmer was strongly prejudiced against birds and trees. The birds ate his wheat, and he had commenced a crusade against them. He was told that in France the destruction of birds had brought on a plague of caterpillars. "Ah," he answered, "that's in France; that ain't here."

Born Beakless.

Perhaps it may interest some of your readers, writes Mr. A. Rigby, in a contemporary, to hear of a curious nest of Canaries I have just had hatched out in my aviary. There are three in one nest born without beaks—merely a hole through which the parents feed them. The fourth has only an under beak, no upper. Can any of your readers furnish me with a cause, or tell me if such a case has been known before? All the other nests are perfect. They are born and bred out of doors, and are all healthy and well-coloured birds. We had about twenty hatched in May, and the parents are now laying again. I may add they are out all winter, and I've had to break the ice in their baths and troughs many times in the day.

Scottish Norwich Plainhead Club.

Societies desiring the patronage of this club are requested to forward their applications not later than July 31st. To obtain the club's support, show committees must provide eight classes for Plainheads, exclusive of limit, selling, and novice classes, and the judge must be a member of the club. Will members please note that subscriptions for the current year are now due, and should be paid as early as possible? Members are also requested to keep the special prize fund in mind, as it is from this source that the extra expenses incurred in connection with club show and international contest are met. All donations will be promptly acknowledged. Fanciers desirous of joining are invited to communicate with the secretary.—J. BROWN, 97, Petershill Road, Glasgow.

A Caterpillar Paradise.

Spending a day with a farmer friend, says a writer in the "Elgin Courant," he took me over his fruit garden. In the centre of this garden there was a large plot of ground, enclosed around its four sides and overhead with wire netting. This area was thickly planted with currant bushes, but all as void of fruit and leaves as if it had been mid-winter in place of summer. I asked my friend the meaning of this phenomenon, and somewhat shamefacedly he confessed that for some years back the Sparrows had been making too free with his fruit, and, to put a stop to it, he had erected the wire netting, little thinking that by so doing he was about to create a caterpillar paradise. The caterpillars had simply cleared off everything, and, it need hardly be added, the netting was about to be put to some other use.

"CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

Breeding & Feeding for Colour.

By JOHN W. BANCROFT.

When to Reduce the Strength.

When the birds have moulted so far as the neck, it is advisable to reduce the strength of the colour-feed gradually. If it were to be continued on full strength the birds would moult out a much deeper tone of shade about the head and neck; which would altogether spoil the evenness of colour so much desired and admired on a show specimen.

When it is convenient I like to give my birds during the moult a few marigolds or nasturtium flowers. Two or three per bird daily are sufficient—of the nasturtiums at all events. I have a theory that if birds are overdone with these latter, they have a tendency of imparting a harsh look to the feathers. But as a tonic both kinds of flowers, I believe, are excellent.

Another handy thing to use in case the birds are at all backward in casting their feather at the proper time is saffron. The best way to prepare this is to place six-pennyworth into a noggin of rum, cork it tightly, and allow it to stand for seven or eight days, when it will be ready for use. Add from six to eight drops of this (according to the size of the water-glass used) to the birds' drinking water daily, until they are nicely advanced in the moult, when it may be discontinued. Cork the saffron well up each time after using, then you wont lose its strength or quantity by evaporation.

If a bird appears listless or mopy, or feels thin when handled, or inclined to hoarseness or wheeziness, as many are at the end of a trying breeding season, I have found a good conditioner which will brace the birds up for the ordeal of the moult to be "Angier's Petroleum Emulsion," given in the proportion of one small teaspoonful to eight of egg-breed or egg-food. Beat it well up with a fork, and give to each bird one teaspoonful of it daily, in addition to the usual seed diet. Add also to the bird's drinking water from 16 to 20 drops of "Fellowe's Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites." This preparation I consider superior to the "Parrish's Chemical Food" so often recommended. I claim that I was the first person to bring the Fellowe's preparation before the notice of bird fanciers. This was on the occasion of my giving a lecture on "the Goldfinch" before the Bolton and District C.B.S. on May 5th, 1902. Of late years I have noticed others also have recommended this capital preparation in the Fancy Press.

Feeding and Preservation of Colour.

Coming now to the seed, the best to use is Canary three parts, linseed one part, and about four or five cracked sunflower seeds for each bird daily. The linseed and sunflower help to put a sheen or gloss on a bird's plumage. If any difficulty is experienced in getting the birds to eat the linseed, the difficulty may be easily overcome by adding linseed meal to the colour-food. About two good teaspoonfuls added to each gill of the feed will about answer.

Some Canary breeders make a practice of giving "tit-bits" in the form of maw seed, as an inducement to the birds to eat up the colour-food. This practice is, I think, quite unnecessary, and will be the means of a good deal of the feed being scattered about and wasted by the birds when searching for the maw seed. I contend that no tit-bits are required if a good wholesome feed is made up, as the birds will partake of it quite freely without any coaxing whatever, if, that is, it is started in a mild form at first.

Important Provisions and Precautions.

As all vegetable colours fade quickly when exposed to the sun's rays, it is necessary, when moulting and colour-feeding cage-birds, to sheet up either the bird room windows, or else the cages, with fine calico or muslin. If this precaution is omitted, the bright light will draw the colour out of the birds. I prefer to have these sheets coloured with the "Dolly" tints advertised, either cream or pink, the latter for preference. One dyeing will usually suffice for each season. Sheeting up the cages is doubtless the better plan, as this tends to keep the birds cleaner and warmer, at the same time protecting them from draughts. Then again, they don't flutter about so much when the cages are sheeted up, which prevents their doing damage to their plumage.

For those who have an objection to using eggs when making up the colour-feed, a good nourishing food (though not, of course, the equal of egg), may be made by adding a powder "Bird Milk" in the proportion of one part bird milk to three parts egg crumbs. This to be used in place of the hard-boiled egg and bread crumbs previously recommended.

A little sulphate of iron is very useful during the moult—a piece the size of a split pea dissolved in the drinking water every day where the egg is omitted in the colour-feed, and two or three times a week in cases where egg is used. The iron helps to fix and fasten the colour in the bird's system, and being an astringent, helps to keep the birds from getting too loose in bowels.

"Wet" Feeding.

That form of colour-feeding known as "wet feeding," I don't believe in at all. This is prepared by first soaking dry bread in cold water, squeezing out all the superfluous moisture, and then adding the colour-feed. This, at best, makes, to my mind, a great deal of mess and dirt in the cage. Also the food gets stuck on the bird's feet, on the perches, and very often on the plumage as well. It is also liable to bring on diarrhœa, a complaint greatly to be avoided. I need scarcely add, that during the moult the birds should be disturbed as little as possible, and I suggest that the cages be cleaned out at night time, leaving just enough light turned on as will enable you to see what you are about. If the job is done in a quiet manner the birds will not be disturbed to any great extent, with the result that there will be fewer broken tail and flight feathers amongst the stock than would be the case were the cleaning-out process to be carried out during the day-time.

Saw-dust is what I prefer as a covering for the cage floors during moulting time. By using this one's cages do not require cleaning out half so frequently as when sand is used. Sand or grit may easily be given in a spare egg-drawer. Great cleanliness must be observed in regard to the egg-drawers, which contain the colour-food. These should be scalded out at least every other day, so as not to allow of any of the feed getting mouldy in the crevices. A commendable plan is to have a spare set of egg-drawers, so that each day, when one is giving a fresh supply of colour-feed, this may be given in a clean drawer, whilst the other can be removed and cleaned for the next day. Water should be given fresh every day, and two or three times per week the drinking glasses should be thoroughly cleansed to prevent the appearance of the slimy deposit which so quickly accumulates when the glasses are not attended to in a proper manner. This slime I consider is nothing better than poison, and I rather fancy it has been the cause in many instances of septic fever or bird plague amongst many fanciers' stocks.

The Need for Clean Hands.

Another thing I would like to draw attention to, the neglect of which has been a cause of wretched breeding and moulting seasons with lots of fanciers, is that they should always wash their hands before mixing egg-food or colourfood for the birds. Plumbers, painters, workers in brass, copper, etc., I should especially caution, as the poison carried in the pores of the skin of the hands of persons who follow any of the aforementioned occupations is bound, sooner or later, to be harmful to the birds if it is not removed previous to placing the hands amongst the food. A capital plan is to use a glass or enamelled spoon in the distribution of the egg or colour-food, as then there is no risk of contamination, as these articles are so easily keep sweet and clean.

Warmth is another very helpful factor towards a successful moult. A nice temperature at which to keep the bird room is 65 degrees Fahr. After the completion of the moult this should be reduced by degrees until no artificial heat is used at all, except it be on odd occasions, such as a very severe sudden frost, or damp muggy days. A little heat at night when the birds are at roost, on such occasions as these, is beneficial to them. But anything approaching coddling I don't believe in.

To sum up the whole matter of colour-feeding:—Commence on healthy specimens possessing good, natural colour; give the food regularly and the same quantity each day, made from fresh season's pepper, from a reliable vendor; make the food palatable; sheet up the birds from the strong light; keep them warm and free from draughts, also your cages and perches clean; give fresh water daily; allow the bath on suitable days in the mornings only. Then I will warrant that the novices will stand just as good a chance as any of the crack exhibitors of annexing the special cups and medals during the next show season.

Under the White Rose.

GREAT Horton O.S. hold their Open First Feather Show to-day (Saturday), and this being the only open event of the season in Yorkshire, they are confident of having not only a good show, but also a numerous attendance of fanciers. It is to be hoped that they will not be disappointed, as should their venture be a success, it will probably lead to a revival of these fixtures. It is not many years since from four to six such shows were held in the Bradford district, and as a rule they were fairly well patronised.

MANY fanciers would like to see these open first feather shows again, as they help considerably to keep up the interest throughout the season. About half-a-dozen societies were holding members' shows on Saturday last, and it is expected that most of the "top holers" will be out at Great Horton to-day, to see what they can do when they get into open competition.

THE C.M.Y.C.C. are to hold a committee meeting in conjunction with the show, and as there is some important business on hand, a full attendance is required. Time and particulars will be found among "Club Notices."

MANNINGHAM C.B.A. had a very enjoyable ramble on June 13th, a party of sixteen gathering at the Hare and Hounds Hotel, Heaton, and proceeding by way of Cottingley and Cottingley woods to Harden, over Beckfoot to Bingley, then via Cottingley Bridge and Hirst Wood to Saltaire, for a homeward car. The party were very fortunate in having with them such a student of wild bird life as their worthy president, Mr. H. Grange, he explaining the habits of those birds met with; and in such a district they are very numerous, many species being located here that are not considered common. His efforts were greatly appreciated. The party arrived home in good time, after a very enjoyable outing.

To Fix a Blind on an Outdoor Cage.

Sent by E. Dews, Park Street, South Ossett, Ossett.

Enclosed sketch shows a method of fixing a blind intended to cover the front of a small outdoor aviary, or an outside cage. It is easily made. A piece of canvas of the required size is obtained, and to each corner is stitched a piece of strong elastic (such as catapult elastic) to make loops. Four hooks are then fixed at convenient points, and should be about six inches from the elastic loops. The latter are then stretched over the hooks, when the canvas blind will be kept very taut over the front of cage or aviary—no wind can drive it up. In the sketch underneath is shown how the holes in cage backs should be cut, to make it impossible for the cages to slip off the nails.—E. Dews.

A Novel Hinge for Cage Doors.

Sent by F, Parlby, 146, Hodge Lane, Salford.

A novel and very good hinge for a cage door can be contrived out of two small pieces of punched bar, such as is used for the making of cage-fronts. Any waste pieces will do providing they have three wire holes. The pieces of punched bar are first fixed to the door, and the latter is then put in the opening in the cage side (or wherever the hole is cut out) in its open position, when the strips of punched can be readily nailed to the cage wood-work, the result being an easy-working hinge. The small French nails are the best to use. The drawing shows a suitable piece of punched bar; also the door fixed in position.—Frederick Parlby.

Some of the Common Foreign Birds.

By WESLEY T. PAGE.

A Lecture Delivered before the City and Suburban A.C.B.

Interesting Groups.

We now come to a most interesting group of birds, some of the smallest and most exquisite of the feathered tribe, viz., the Waxbills. These minutely feathered gems are quite harmless to growing plants, etc., and a garden aviary might well contain the following species:—Common and Green Avadavats, Zebra or Gold-breasted Waxbills, St. Helena Waxbills, Common or Grey Waxbills, and Orange-cheeked Waxbills. Such a combination of birds flitting to and fro amid the growing greenery, their irridescent plumage flashing out in a thousand different lines under the influence of light refraction, will supply a source of continuous interest and pleasure. They have quaint habits, soft, sweet songs, and a vivacious demeanour, for they are never dull, and are but little trouble to keep in condition. The charming Zebra and St. Helena Waxbills and the Green Avadavat are the most ready to nest. Rush nests and cocoa-nut shells must be provided for them to nest in, as well as growing bushes.

The next group I wish to notice is what I shall term "the fragile group," viz., those species which arrive at our shores in such a debilitated or infected condition that a very large portion of each consignment die within a very few weeks of arriving in this country—such species are Firefinches, Cordon Bleus, Lavender Finches, and Pintail Nonpariels. These, I am told, have only a short life when caged in their native country. I will grant you that when once acclimatised Cordon Bleus, for instance, can be kept out of doors all the year round, even in a northern county; but before this is attained the loss of life is truly awful, and I pause and ask myself and all present the pregnant question: Are we justified with such species in purchasing our pleasure at such a cost? For myself, I reply most emphatically that we are not, and for many years I have not kept these beautiful and fragile species on this account; and I appeal to all present to boycott these frail and beautiful species, i.e., Firefinches, Cordon Bleus, Lavender Finches, and Pin-tailed Nonpariels; there are a whole host of other beautiful species we can keep without such waste of life. We must remember the responsibility is ours. Dealers will only import what they can sell, and if we do not buy, the trade in these fragile species will ultimately come to an end.

GRASSFINCHES.—With the Waxbills could well be associated the lovely Gouldian Finch in its rainbow-hued garb, also the Long and Rufous-tailed, the Masked and White-eared Grassfinches, and the Grey and Green Singing Finches. All these first-named will breed in cages as well as in the aviary. Several of them have been so bred this past season, while as to their beauty and interest this is unquestionable.

I can now only briefly enumerate a few handsome species, probable cage breeders, and most desirable and handsome birds:—Crimson Finch, Ribbon Finch, Pectoral Finch, Cuba Finch, Diamond Finch, and many others.

The Mannikin Group.

We will now notice another group, viz., the Mannikins. The birds of this group, with one or two exceptions, are heavily built, and if kept in small cages are of a dull or lazy demeanour; nevertheless, in roomy cages or an aviary, they become very different, and have many interesting and quaint characteristics. I can only mention them in passing, time not permitting a description of them. None can be called really plain, while the first half dozen are really handsome birds:—Yellow-rumped Finch, Chestnut-breasted Finch, Rufous-backed, Magpie, White-headed, Tricolour, Bronze and Black-headed Mannikins, Spice Bird, and Silverbills. Except the Silverbills none of this group have any song. They are all easily catered for either in a cage or any aviary, and the Bronze Mannikin is little larger than a Waxbill.

I find I have said nothing about Parrots or Parrakeets, and I have already spoken at too great a length. The great mistake made with most bird keepers is that they seem to imagine that because these birds have the power of speech, they can be given anything which their owners eat. Leaving out the pollen-eating species, the others must have a diet of seeds, ripe fruit, biscuit, nuts, greenfood, and the other regular essentials for all granivorous species—cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing. The diet of pollen-eating species should consist principally of milk-sop and ripe fruit. There can be no general mixture for all species; such is not merely an impossibility but an absurdity. Time will not permit me to go further into details as regards these interesting birds. Their name is legion, and they have many admirers. They are so essentially different from any of our native avifauna, that this alone is an attraction, and the majority of them become very companionable. These features, combined with their powers of mimicry, speech, and also skill as acrobats, have won for them world-wide favour.

The list might be much longer, but I think I have said sufficient to give you an idea what a fascinating and all-absorbing hobby, the keeping of Foreign birds is—whether the birds are kept in cages or in aviaries, for breeding or for exhibition purposes. Neither section of foreign-bird keepers should sneer or look down upon the other, and I trust I may be pardoned if I remark here that, in the various Fanciers' societies there ought to be more of the "give and take spirit." Fanciers are too apt to become heated and personal over matters which should be amicably discussed in all their aspects for the general good.

The Exhibition of Foreigners.

Now, a last word as to exhibiting. If foreign bird exhibiting is to be popularised, we must have classes in which birds can meet on equal terms, i.e., all entries in a given class must meet on the common ground of purity of colour, form and general excellency of condition, according to their respective species. There must also be classes where the rarer and more costly birds can meet on common ground. Exhibitors must remember that if we are to get such reforms as these they must support the respective classes.

I would emphasise the fact that at London shows the classes for common species have been the worst supported of any, and only the forbearance of secretaries in several instances can have saved their cancellation.

The Discussion.

How can twig perches be fixed in cages without nails?—By a small screw eye in woodwork, ar a small split ring on wire front.

Is there any way of lessening the mortality among newly-purchased red-faced Lovebirds and also the Blue-winged? — This must be numbered among those species which arrive here in a very debilitated condition, and but a small percentage are saved out of each consignment. Nothing can be done, save warmth and quiet at first, for it must be admitted they are very easily scared, and many die from sheer fright from sudden movements in their vicinity.

Is there any cure for septic fever?—None; as palliatives, a cooling aperient may be given, such as fluid of magnesia. Keep the bird in a warm, but not stuffy, atmosphere. Infected birds must be strictly isolated from other stock.

With regard to the various varieties of millet, why white in preference to others?—It may be prejudice on my part, but save for immature birds, which should be supplied with the small French millet, I always use white millet, and I find that the majority of foreign species prefer this also, judging by the choice when having access to all kinds. Spray millet should, however, always be supplied, the exercise alone of picking out the seeds being very beneficial.

I notice in your remarks re Parrots and Parrakeets you refer, among others, to Rosellas. I had always understood these were aviary and not cage birds. Are they kept at all as cage birds?—Yes, but they are essentially aviary birds, and show to best advantage in an aviary, and also their call note becomes monotonous and annoying in a room. Nevertheless, they are so kept, and a bird, when thoroughly fit and in tight plumage, is a handsome bird indeed. I have seen many such.

Is green food good for nestlings? That is, should the parent birds have unlimited access to same? If so, what kinds?—Yes; green food plays an important role in the rearing of young birds, but it must be fresh, and should be supplied several times daily. Grass in flower (seeding grass), tender lettuce, flowering and seeding chickweed, rape, and Canary seedlings, general garden and hedgerow (non-poisonous) herbage. I have given these in order of merit.

Messrs. Crabb and Prior made some remarks on exhibition topics, stating that show secretaries would not retain classes that would not pay, and also that they would give classes which appeared likely to be supported. Mr. Crabb also raised the question, "Could aviary-bred specimens compete with any chance of success against the wild caught bird?" Mr. Page replied that he had already covered the points raised re special classes, but pressed the point that exhibitors could only get the required reform by supporting the initial steps—in other words, by giving adequate support to existing classes for common species which already exist, and so show that there was a real demand for additional ones.

In reply to Mr. Crabb re aviary-bred specimens, Mr. Page stated that in many instances such were the superior, but many of the larger Parrakeets tried their owner's patience by the lengthy period which elapsed before they were fully mature.—The usual vote of thanks closed the proceedings.

A Trio of Buntings.

Hints on the Management of the Reed, the Corn and the Yellow.

By Jos. B. Moore.

"Tom said I had to tell you that he had been out catching, and had caught a 'Bessie Blackcap'; will you have it?" These words greeted me when I got into the house one night, and being very fond of birds and anxious to see the "Bessie Blackcap," I went to see it, and found on arrival that the bird in question was a very nice specimen of a Reed-Bunting, a young cock-bird apparently, and in very good feather. I got the bird, took him home, put him into a good roomy cage, and found that he took kindly to cage-life, and soon got fairly steady (that is over 12 months ago at the time of writing), and I had him until a week or two since.

The Reed Bunting.

I find the species is easily kept. Canary appears to be the only seed the birds are fond of, with the addition of a few mealworms two or three times a week. These the Reed Bunting is particlarly fond of. On the appearance of the tin containing them, he comes down from the perch into the bottom of cage and there waits patiently for them. At the present time his black head and gorget are streaked with grey-coloured feathers; last spring they went much blacker; I expect that would be his nuptial costume.

He is a bit of a ventriloquist. When he is singing, you hear a very faint warbling, and have to pay very particular attention before you are able to locate the songster. The song appears to come from all over the room—now here, now there. Nothing pleases him better than a good bath. Fill this up for him and he is into it directly, and splatters away as long as there is any water in it. A good covering of grit on the cage bottom is also much appreciated. He spends a lot of time in going through it. The value of Reed Buntings as show birds, does not appear to be much, the Yellow Bunting and Cirl Bunting getting the preference.

The Corn Bunting.

From the same party I also got a Corn Bunting. The local name is "Stubble Bessie," but after keeping mine for four months I let him have his liberty again. The standard of the National British Bird and Mule Club allows 50 points for steadiness in the Corn Bunting. The compilers of that standard must have had some experience with birds of the temperament of mine. I tried him in a large cage, also in a small cage; he was alike in both. You had only to go into the room where he was, and immediately he would start dashing about the cage in all directions, finally ending the performance by getting into a corner of the cage, from which he watched you as long as you remained in sight.

He was a fine, well-marked bird, and could I have got him sufficiently steady he would have been worth exhibiting. I fed him on similar lines to that prescribed for the Reed Bunting. Canary seed appears to be the only variety the Buntings care for, with the addition of oats, both whole and crushed, a handful of which I gave them every three or four days. This they seemed to like very much, eating it readily. Outside in the open the Corn Bunting appears to be a hardy bird.

While out for a walk on New Year's day, the weather fine and frosty, I stood and listened to one singing his harsh, monotonous song, perched on a rail near an open barn; and judging from the quantity of birds about, the place was a capital feeding-ground.

The Yellow Bunting.

The last of the trio is a Yellow Bunting, or "Bessie." It is a very fine, well-marked young bird, that seems to be taking kindly to cage-life. Here let me say, that unless your British birds of whatever species take kindly to cage-life, you will scarcely succeed in making show birds of them, however good they may be otherwise. It is better to open the cage door and let them go; though to keep some over the moult may steady them sufficiently as to warrant you in keeping them. If you get a young bird, well marked, fairly steady, and of good size, stick to it; the longer you keep it the better it will get. The V-markings on the head are a most important point in a good Yellow Bunting. They get more pronounced and the dark feathers in the centre of the head and at the throat moult out more clearly at each succeeding moult. They are fed similarly to the Reed Buntings, not forgetting plenty of water for bathing in.

Your bird will well repay you for your care and attention. Should you not exhibit you will still have the pleasure which all good lovers of birds have of watching the beauty of your favourites develop more and more each year.

As regards the song in captivity, my birds never gets beyond the call-note as yet, though I expect some will get into full song as the season advances. It is a song that doubtless is well known to all lovers of our wild birds. It is sometimes translated as "a little bit of bread and no cheese." In our part of the country, when I was a lad, we called the song: "Divil, divil, dee, tek all away but me." In my experience of British birds in captivity, there is nothing to equal the bath for getting them into condition. Some fanciers, I know, object to hand-washing the birds for show, and where you have plenty of room, good pure air, and sunshine, perhaps there is no need for it; but under the conditions in which I keep mine (and scores of other good fanciers are in similar situations), viz., living amidst the smoke and dirt of a town, you have no choice in the matter if you want a fair try for your entry fee. If your bird is healthy and well, and in good feather, you need never be afraid of washing it; the result will surprise you agreeably.

CANARY QUERIES.

Fractured Leg.

Very Anxious.—It would undoubtedly have been much the best thing to have amputated the foot at the time, but now matters have gone on so far I cannot advise you to do this now. The best thing is to leave it severely alone, and let nature repair the mischief. The foot will probably never be of any more use, and even if the leg is flexed and stiff, and of no use any more, the bird will doubtless learn to get about on one leg very tolerably. Being fast in the feathers may be no disadvantage, as it is not unlikely a little bleeding may have occurred which saturated the base of the feathers, and caused them to dry upon, and form a natural sling-bandage to, the leg, and in that case the bird will probably release it without your help when the leg is well enough to be interfered with, or, if not, the moult will release it, and in this case you may find that the leg is not really grown permanently stiff after all.

Losing Feathers.

J.O.—Your feeding is decidedly faulty, but there is also a great probability of the loss of feathers being due to either red mites or grey lice, or to the bird's being an old one. Keep a sharp look-out for insect pests about the cage, especially in the cracks and joints, for red mites, and on the bird itself for grey lice; and if either pest should be found, obliterate it at once. Let the staple diet consist of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and except when breeding, omit all the other seeds and give a pinch of hemp only twice a week, and a half teaspoonful of egg food about as often. When rearing young, feed as frequently advised here. Your egg food seems very deficient in egg unless the tea biscuits are very small ones. When the biscuits are crushed to powder, there should be about twice the bulk of the minced egg. When the cock is stopped breeding and caged alone, feed him on the lines named above; give a fairly liberal supply of chickweed; allow him to bathe freely in suitable weather, and give a pinch of Epsom salts and six drops of lemon juice in the water three times a week for a short time, and on each of the remaining days for a month ,twenty drops of chemical food.

Young Murdered.

Sproston.—Such casualties are to be expected in a mixed collection in a small aviary, and if they do not always, or very often, turn up it is no criterion that the risk of their doing so is not ever present. I am inclined to suspect the Javas, although it may just as likely be the cock Goldfinch. The best way to try to prevent a recurrence is to have plenty of cover in the way of bushes, and make every nest-box separate, and hang them in different places about the aviary. In such an aviary you would find German travelling cages with about four of the short bars removed, or cigar boxes with a third part of the lid sawn off, and the remainder nailed down, and hung up endwise, more convenient and better appreciated than a more elaborate close box. Give these a trial, and hang them up about five feet high. Your seed mixture is not at all suitable for Canaries. If you cannot manage to give Canary, rape, hemp, and millet in separate vessels, you should at least have two vessels, one containing millet, and the other a mixture of three parts Canary, one part each of rape and hemp. Of course, you should give a saucer of soft food when there are young Canaries to be fed.

Sore Feet.

Annoyed.—Your birds seem to be suffering from a quite unusual form of sore feet, and as you seem to think the complaint is spreading from one bird to another, I would advise sending any bird that dies, having a well-developed form of this sore-footedness, for a post-mortem. Personally, I am inclined to think something about the perches is chiefly to blame. Of what wood are they made? It may be too hard, and if obtained from old waste material may possibly be saturated with some injurious substance. Then, if the sketches you give are the actual size in section of the perches, they are much too large for the birds' comfort. Make some new ones with soft deal, about one-third less in circumference than these, and slightly oval in shape. Keep cage and perches perfectly clean, and bathe the feet daily for a minute or two in a warm solution of boracic acid, about a teaspoonful of acid in a half teacupful of warm water. Dry gently, and carefully anoint them with a little zinc or boracic ointment. Give those that suffer most severely a few grains of Epsom salts in the water for a few days.

Young Dying.

Puzzled.—Your feeding is largely to blame for the deaths, which, in my opinion, are due to constipation. As you have been a breeder so long and never had this trouble before, might I suggest that you may be using a different kind of biscuit this year, with the result that the egg food is of a more constipating nature than hitherto? And against this I notice your supply of green food is very small indeed, and that little not of the best kind for correcting any constipating effect of the food. If you make the following changes and modifications, I feel sure you will find the trouble disappear. Use only the yolk of egg in making the egg-food, until the young are about a week old, and after the first four or five days make up the egg-food of equal parts egg, crushed biscuit, and sponge cake. Add no sugar to this, as the sponge cake will make it quite sweet enough. Give a little groundsel, or chickweed, on the third day, and from the fourth day give this green food freely, fresh twice a day, and omit the dandelion leaf altogether. Continue the seed diet of Canary and rape, but omit the maw and hemp, and do not begin to add hemp to the daily fare until the young are eight or ten days old. The maw is not needed at all, unless a hen should be a fickle feeder, when a sprinkling may be added to the egg-food to tempt her to eat it more freely.

Danger of Infection.

"Anxious."—If the cocks you have isolated remain quite healthy for a month or six weeks, they should be fairly safe from suspicion I think, though I am not sure any really hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the length of quarantine to ensure absolute safety. The real danger lies in the cages and appliances which have been occupied by affected birds. The germs are terribly tenacious here, and apt to survive all ordinary forms of disinfection and set up another outbreak as soon as fresh susceptible birds are put into them. As you have sent for Dr. Clarke's handbook you had best keep the birds isolated until you have read and studied its contents, when you will know the best methods of dealing with cages and stock. You may as well let the hens take their chance of rearing their broods, but you will doubtless stand the best chance of saving them by reducing the egg portion of your food to a minimum. As regards the closed sacks of seeds in the room I do not think there will be much, if any, danger of the seed conveying infection, especially if you have not been using a common vessel to hand it about which might have been in contact with the infection.

The Desirable Gloss.

Puzzled (the third, I fancy).—That beautiful gloss on the plumage of Canaries, such as you see at the Crystal Palace, is just what everyone would like to see on his birds, but you must remember that in all probability it is not to be found on all the birds in the rooms of the owners of these birds. It is just one of those things which make these specimens stand out from their fellows and capable of beating them in good competition. To a great extent it depends upon the high condition of health and vigour in which the birds are kept, and to the quality of plumage possessed by the bird. For the rest it depends upon a good healthy moult, and proper management during and after that period, and, finally, to expert and skilful toilet preparations for the show. As regards the moult, you need no special method of feeding for this variety, except that colour food is not to be used. You should give a small quantity of egg-food three times a week, and during the progress of the moult any marigold or nasturtium blooms you can obtain, and a few grains of linseed regularly, alternately with the egg-food. Keep the temperature fairly equable, and do not let it get very low whilst the birds are deep in moult; also allow them free and ample bathing. For the rest, treat as you would any other variety. The real point is to get a quick and complete moult, without a check, vigorous health, and a skilful toilet before any show.

Cause of Failure.

Pankie.—I think practically all the failures are due to cock birds not being in good health and vigour. The condition of the Lancashire is strong evidence of this. Assuming the hens sat close and did not stay off the nest in the cold weather long enough for the eggs to get quite chilled, which, of itself, would sufficiently account for the eggs being addled, this condition of the cock birds is quite enough to account for the failure to hatch, as the germs would be too weak to develop properly. In the case of the Lancashires, the age also would tell against them, as they are rather young just yet. I would advise you to forego any further attempt at breeding with these birds this season, and to separate them and get them into good hard condition for next season. After separating, feed on plain Canary only, with a liberal supply of chickweed, for one week, and during this time give them each a pinch of Epsom salts in the water every second day. After the first week add to the diet half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days give the same quantity of crushed sponge or Medeira cake with two drops each of sherry and cod-liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and a few grains of maw or gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it, and a few grains of hemp about twice a week. Continue this for two or three weeks, then, for the ordinary regular diet reduce the sponge cake to twice a week, omit the sherry and oil, and give the rape daily. In the drinking water, after the end of the first week, give six drops of dandelion juice, and three each tincture of gentian and tincture of steel, every second day for a fortnight. Vary this treatment in the case of the Lancashire hen (which has diarrhœa) as follows: In the first week omit the chickweed, give no other green food, but give a little plain dry biscuit or crushed sponge cake twice towards the end of the week, adding twenty drops whisky and four of tincture of opium to the water, for one day only.

Hand-rearing Young.

E.G.—Continue to feed upon the moistened egg-food as long as they will allow you to do so. There is no necessity to moisten it in the mouth except in the case of very young and tender nestlings, when this plan may be of some advantage. But now you have got the young so far advanced, it will do just as well to mix the egg-food into a moist paste with water, taking precautions, of course, to mix it fresh at least twice a day to prevent its becoming sour. When the young are well out of the nest give them a small quantity of egg-food mixed crumbly moist in the cage, and you will soon find them picking it over, and as they get able to help themselves they will refuse your good office in the matter of feeding them. When they are picking over the egg-food nicely, add a little Canary and rape in another vessel, and you will see by the husks left behind when they are cracking the seed freely. When this occurs begin to reduce the quantity of egg-food, and gradually withdraw it. Though it is not quite clear, I read your letter to mean that your hatching failures occurred in the wire nests. This is rather what was to be expected in the weather we have had. Personally, I consider these nests only suitable for use in the hottest part of summer. Even then I never use them. Glad to hear previous advice has been so helpful.

Mopy Hens.

D.W.Y.—You are feeding the birds incorrectly, which is doubtless the cause of their mopy condition. As they will not be fit to breed with for a few weeks, and the season is already getting advanced, I think you would be well advised to reserve all their energies for next spring. Feed on plain Canary only as a staple, and give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, twice a week a similar quantity of hemp seed, and on two other days a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, or occasionally, as a variant, an equivalent quantity of bread scalded with milk and sprinkled with soft sugar. Give a little green food daily. Keep cages quite clean, and free from insect pests, and well strewn with clean, gritty sand. Allow birds to bathe freely in fine weather, and give them as much space for exercise as possible. Discontinue all the other seeds and foods you mention. For the first week give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and six drops of dandelion juice in the water every second day, and, during the first week, give the sponge cake every second day, and mix two drops each of sherry and cod liver oil emulsion in it. After the first week give two drops each tincture of steel and tincture of gentian in the water every second day for another week.

Crests Out of Condition.

Nil Disperandum.—I suspect the birds are out of condition, and that your treatment for colds failed simply because you omitted the most essential point of all, viz., to take steps to remove their cause. The bareness on Crests may be due to the birds pecking each other, or to red mite attacks. In the former case you can only wait for the moult to remedy the evil when the birds are separated; in the latter case the remedy is sufficiently obvious. See the cages are quite free from this pest, also that the birds are not troubled with grey lice, and see they are quite out of reach of draughts, or not affected by damp. At the same time see the air of the room is kept pure and fresh. You may continue to use sawdust in the cages, but you must supply a shallow boxful of gritty sand besides. On the whole, I much prefer well-sanded cages during the breeding season. Having duly attended to these points, give those birds now suffering from colds which have no young to feed twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus in the water (well shaken together) two days in every three for a week. Give the egg food only twice a week to birds that are neither feeding young nor being prepared for nesting. Supply a little chickweek daily, and allow the birds to bathe when weather is fine. I cannot say what the hen died of after laying her clutch of eggs without some particulars, even if I could then. A post-mortem is the only reliable evidence after death. Treat the hen that is sitting and makes a clicking noise at night for a few days with the above-named medicine, but stop it when young are almost due to hatch.

Septicæmia.

"Bird Fever."—I have no doubt you have septic fever among your birds, and would strongly advise you to send the next that dies for a post-mortem, to make doubly sure. Meanwhile keep your stock strictly isolated from any possibility of contact, either direct or indirect, with other birds. Do not import any fresh birds or appliances. As you appear to have kept your birds under hygienic condition hitherto, it is not unlikely you may have imported the disease with some recently-acquired bird or appliance. As regards treatment, you can do little beyond observing the strictest cleanliness and disinfection throughout. Cut down the egg-food—or of the proportion of egg in it—to a minimum, and substitute as far as possible bread and milk, scalded and squeezed nearly dry, crushed biscuit, or sponge cake, and an unlimited supply of Canary and summer rape. Keep cages clean, well strewn with sawdust, and clean out daily, and burn the refuse at once. Boil all food and water vessels that will admit of it for a quarter of an hour daily. Prepare all soft food quite fresh daily—three times, if convenient. In drinking water give thirty drops of brandy daily. This is about all you can do to help the birds to win when they become affected, or to prevent any more becoming affected. You may if you like try following decoction (I do not vouch for its utility, but have seen it very well spoken of by German breeders, and in any case it will do no harm): Infuse a handful each of blackberry and sanicle leaves in a quart of boiling water for fifteen minutes. Strain, allow to stand till cold, then add three fluid ounces of brandy to it, and give this decoction in the drinker, instead of plain water, daily as soon as a bird is seen to be affected, and three times a week to the remainder of stock.

Brevities.

Seed Samples (H. C. Maynard).—You state no definite query in sending the samples of canary and rape, but I suppose it was to get an opinion of the quality. But whatever your object, I fear the result will be a little unsatisfactory, as the seeds were mixed together, and the rape almost conspicuous by its absence. It is not possible to give a really fair and satisfactory judgment from a mere pinch of seed. I will only venture to say that the canary was small and thin, and not of very good quality. The few grains of rape were too small for me to criticise at all.

Canaries Dying.—(Arthur.)—Am afraid they died from septic fever, and would advise you to send the next that dies for a post-mortem to be made, and thereby settle all doubts. Meantime, why not send for Dr. Clarke's handbook on the subject, from the manager, 7d., post free? See reply to "Bird Fever," and adopt the precautions there given. The "white pimple" at roof of tail is probably the oil gland, which every bird possesses, in health or otherwise. It would have nothing whatever to do with the deaths.

Mating Birds (Puzzled, another of 'em).—It is quite likely the hen rejects the second mate. Some hens have idiosyncrasies this way, and will not mate with a second mate as long as their first is in sight or sound of them. If the first mate is within sight, try removing him to another room, and give the hen a few grains of niga and gold of pleasure in a little egg food daily. Also give a few dandelion leaves a day, and if she does not then quickly mate with the second you had better give her the first mate back, if he is in condition, if you want another brood off her this season.

More Samples (E.F.).—No. 1 is not rape, though what else it may be I do not profess to know. As it is quite cool and mild it would serve well enough for birds in large aviaries, but if given to those in small cages care should be taken to note how it affects the bowels, and if it seems too much discontinue it. No. 2, again, I cannot say whether the Canary is Turkish, viz., a seed grown in the Ottoman Empire. It is very small, and is, I believe, similar to that usually termed Turkish. It is very sweet, but a larger seed is more economical. No. 3 is a fair average sample of maw. No. 4 seems a very fair sample of hemp, but judging from this small pinch the bulk must contain a good deal of dirt and extraneous matter.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Items about Bird Catching.

Beginner.—In your question you mention "this district," but never tell me what that district is. I may say, however, that the close season prescribed by the Act (W.B.P.A.) is from March 1st to August 1st. But this can be varied by local bodies—thus in London (Middlesex, I believe) the close time does not end until August 15th. Then, again, some birds are protected all the year round in certain counties, but not in others. And the list of protected birds is often being altered (added to, generally) in various parts of the country. Lists of the birds protected in any given district can be obtained on application at any local police station, or town, or county hall, and before setting out to catch birds, one should always be studied. It is quite legitimate to catch birds in trap cages, providing they are not protected birds; the latter you could not legally catch, even in your own garden.

Sexing Young Goldfinch Mules.

G. P. M.—As I have often stated, there are no outward sex differences in young Goldfinch-Canary Mules which help a beginner to decide. The only really safe plan is for them to keep the youngsters until their song proves their sex. The cock Mule is always brighter in plumage than the hen; but this is only comparative and helpful in trying to sex youngsters which come out of the same nest. A young hen Mule, for instance, bred from a yellow hen Canary, will often look a much better colour than a real cock Mule, but which has been bred from a buff hen. The young cocks are longer beaded and have more "swagger" than the young hens, and these two things, in addition to the colour sign, help the old fanciers to decide with almost certainty between the cocks and hens in young which come from the same parents. After the moult, of course, the cocks easily out-do the hens in colour; and then they very soon begin to sing. Pleased to hear of your success.

Simply "Marking Time."

A Novice.—It is not easy to guess why your Linnet and Canary couple do no good, but simply mark time. Your feeding is right enough. You might give the egg food every day, and the "tit-bit" of hemp, etc., oftener, though these are minor matters. Does the cock himself make any attempt at mating? Has his beak turned blue, and does he sing lustily? A cock Linnet in breeding condition, and willing to make a match of it, is very fussy to his mate (if she, too, is willing), following her about the cage, and feeding her, and singing to her. If your bird doesn't do these things he is probably either not ready, or no good for Muling. Then, again, is your hen Canary in conditiou—lively, bouncing from perch to perch with much flapping of wings, and calling in a high-pitched voice? What do you mean by "squeaky noise?" If you have let her catch a cold (does she mope about the cage?) then you must try to cure her. The simplest plan would be to try one of the remedies advertised in our columns. It is often extremely difficult to satisfactorily advise; one needs to see the birds.

Feeding Muling Hens.

A Novice.—Greenfinch-Canary Mules should be fed in the same way as the other Canary crosses (see reply to "Roffe" this week), though they may have sunflower seed a little more freely. The feeding of sitting hens is quite a simple matter, as a general rule; only a minority give one trouble. When incubating the eggs, put only plain Canary seed in the hopper, but give on alternate days in the egg drawer a tiny half-teaspoonful of egg bread sprinkled with maw seed (one day), and a half-teaspoonful of mixed hemp and summer rape (the next day). When the young are due to hatch, I give the hen, to feed with, plenty of Canary and summer rape seeds, and lightly cracked hemp seed, with a little shelled sunflower and maw seeds. I offer ripe seeding green foods, such as chickweed and shepherd's purse, freely—but strip off all coarse leaves. If you cannot get this, give young lettuce and watercress leaves—but not freely until the youngsters are three or four days old. She may also relish a little soaked (just sprouting) rape. I don't use scalded rape; only that soaked in cold water, frequently changed. Don't give these things all at the same time, but offer them at various periods through the day—nothing like variety to induce hens to "pack" their babies. Egg bread, made by well mixing two crushed Osborne biscuits (or equal quantity of stale bread crumbs) with the minced yolk, and rather less than half the white, of a hard-boiled (ten minutes) egg, must, of course, also be freely offered; mix in the whole of the white when the young are five or six days old. Any hen worth her salt will rear fine, lusty young on this menu.

A Mule and Redmite.

W. Nevin.—It is rather early for a bird to moult, but that matters little so long as be does not commence to moult again later on. A good-sized stock cage for a Mule is one 18in. long by 9 wide by 12 to 14 high, wired at front only. If you think the bird has a slight cold, why not try the effect of one of the remedies advertised in our columns? I see no reason why the workshop you mention should not make an excellent bird room, providing it is thoroughly damp and draught proof. With regard to the red mite, the Mule should be moved temporarily into a clean cage (a small box, wire netted at front, would do as a makeshift), after being dusted with insect powder in the manner described in the reply given "E. Harris" this week. The old cage should be thoroughly gone over (every crevice, joint, and wire hole, perches as well) with a brush soaked in turpentine; stand in the open to dry for a few hours, Then distemper it with enamel. There will be no red mite left on it. An all-wire cage could be placed in boiling suds, if preferred. Afterwards spray the Mule daily with water made bitter by the addition of a little infusion of quassia (from a chemist) or let it bathe in such water. A hand wash (with soap) by a skilful fancier is very helpful in ridding a bird of red mite.

Is Egg Injurious?

Inquirer.—I am under the impression it is an indisputable fact that yolk of egg is a favourable medium for the cultivation of the bacilli responsible for septicæmia, or "bird fever," and this more or less applies to "preserved" egg (egg flake, dessicated egg, etc.), but to the "fact that hard-boiled egg (either yolk or white) is injurious to soft-billed birds," I am certainly not prepared to subscribe. I have used egg for years, and use it every day now, both for Canaries, British and Foreign birds, and for my Muling couples. I have never had the slightest trouble, and I think I may in all modesty claim a fair share of success in the keeping of birds and, what is more, in keeping them in the best of health and condition. Of course, I am not so foolish as to give stale or even doubtfully fresh egg food, and I always try to avoid eggs which are not reasonably new laid. I am practically never without soft-bills of some kind or other in my room. Mind you, I don't say egg is not to be dispensed with by keepers of insectivorous birds, for I have friends (very successful, too) who do not use it; still, for what seem to me very good reasons, I personally always mix minced egg with my soft food. Had I found it harm my birds, I should have dropped it long ago.

Stock Food for Ring Ousels.

E.B.F.—Ring Ousels thrive on exactly the same treatment as is meted out to Blackbirds and Thrushes. Very coarse-cut sawdust is a good covering for their cage-bottoms, providing a thick layer is used, and that the food and water vessels are high enough from the floor to prevent its getting "kicked up" into them. A turf is not needed. Let them bathe freely. You should read the excellent article on these birds, which appeared in a recent special number, from the pen of Mr. Burrows. As a stock food, here is one which any good corn dealer would mix you (store it in tins): Finely ground chicken (or game or pheasant or partridge) meal, six parts; ground silkworm pupæ, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, one part each, by measure. Get the chicken (or other) meal without grit. If you have any difficulty in doing so, finely crushed puppy cakes (or dog meal) makes an excellent substitute. Damp (just crumbly moist) quantity required for daily use with grated raw carrot, or finely-chopped lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or other green food in season, or cold boiled potato, and a little warm water, if necessary. Vary them frequently, and add a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake, or half a hard-boiled egg, finely minced up, occasionally. Give some mealworms daily, and any other live insects you can lay hands on, also ripe fruit and berries frequently, and according to season. "Blackbeetles" are very much relished, likewise snails, by the Thrush tribe.

Treatment of Young Mules.

Roffe.—The three white feathers in the tail do not quite make the Mule a "light" one of any value (the variegation is not sufficient), but they spoil it for exhibition as a "dark" Mule (it would be "wrong-classed," if entered as such). As regards the feeding when Mules are leaving their parents, all Canary Mules reared by Canary hens are brought up in very much the same way as young Canaries—that is, on similar food and treatment generally. When commencing to feed themselves offer (in addition to soft food) maw seed, lightly cracked Canary and hemp seeds, groats, or coarse oatmeal, shelled and broken up sunflower seed; also seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's-purse and groundsel; and thistles in season. Don't, at the same time, forget grit and cuttlefish, likewise old, crushed mortar. If any difficulty in getting seeding green food, steep summer rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a towel before offering it to the birds. All crushed seed should be prepared fresh daily. Wean them off egg-food as soon as possible, substituting for it home-made egg cake, moistened, if necessary, with a spot or two of milk, or of water; or a little stale sponge cake, or crushed sweet biscuit (maizena wafer, tea or Osborne) also moistened with milk. Egg-cake made and baked at home really does not need damping. Don't make the mistake, when dropping egg, of leaving off soft food entirely; that is the great point. A little of the "egg-cake" can be crumbled amongst the crushed seed offered to the youngsters.

Hand-rearing Thrushes, etc.

A.A.H.—It would do no harm to put a cock Chaffinch in the aviary, but a Jackdaw or a Magpie would "play Hamlet" (or, rather, the "King of the Cannibal Islands") with the small birds therein. I have several times this season told how to hand-feed Thrushes. They are easy to rear from the nest, and many people do so on nothing but bread and milk. Equal parts of stale bread and best ants' eggs (freed from rubbish), made very moist with new milk, would be a very fair food. To rear strong, lusty youngsters, however, I prefer to proceed as follows:—Boil a fresh egg twelve minutes, and, when cold, well mix with a fork the yolk and half of the white into two crushed Osborne biscuits; add to this a dessertspoonful of best ants' eggs (removing bits of stick and rubbish, if present), stirring all well together. Just before you feed, take the necessary portion of food and make it into a sloppy consistency with new milk. In hot weather (and at all time) be careful the food is always fresh and sweet. Feed a little at a time only, but very often, from dawn to dusk; and a feed after dark is not at all a bad thing. Cut a few mealworms into pieces, also, dip them into milk, and drop them into the nestlings' mouths. As the youngsters grow, too, add now and then a pinch of small but gritty sand to the food. It seems to act as a preventative of looseness of the bowels (or diarrhœa). Give also at all times flies and like small insects; and live ants' eggs if you can get them. Very young birds want feeding once an hour (do not "stuff" them at any time) at first; every two hours or so at later stages. Cease hand-feeding when they cease to "cry" to be fed, and are picking up food for themselves. Keep warm, cosy, and scrupulously clean. No special appliance is necessary for the feeding. I have used a large, blunted (with a penknife) match stick with every success; likewise a quill tooth-pick with all sharp corners removed, and a little bone mustard spoon, cut to a suitable shape and different sizes at each end (handle and bowl), and smoothed off with very fine glass-paper. Put the food well down at the back of the tongue, and always be careful not to bruise or lacerate the tender mouths of the nestlings.

Brevities.

Rearing Young Thrushes (H. J. Down).—This question you will find answered in the reply given this week to "A.A.H."

Identity of Bird (Greenhorn).—The bird is purely and simply a cock Greenfinch. How any "fancier" could hold that it was a "Mule" beats me entirely. There is not the faintest trace of any parentage other than the Greenfinch.

Breeding Matters (Lintie).—You will find the main question you ask answered in the reply given "E.B.F." this week. I hope you will have success, seeing that you have got so far towards it. It will not be too late for another round. The excreta of sitting hens is always of a copious nature, and you need not worry thinking she is out of health.

Weeds (J. Thompson).—When the weeds reached me, they were so squashed as to render identification well-nigh impossible. They should have been protected in some way through the post. The two with flowers I cannot make out; but the other is the oft-recommended shepherd's-purse, than which you can have no better green food for Linnets.

Goldie-Siskins (A.B.C.).—You need not worry; the hen will rear the young all right, even if she only gives them hemp seed and green food. You can't compel her to use things she doesn't want to, anyway. I notice that the two green foods the hen Siskin would be most likely to appreciate (seeding shepherd's-purse and chickweed) you do not mention. Five young out of six eggs is a remarkably good result.

Keeping the Eggs, Etc. (Novice).—If the Bullfinch eggs were quite fresh (not sat on), you can safely keep them seven to ten days before putting them under a hen Canary. Keep in a cool place, on bran, say, and give them a half-turn over every day (the latter is important). A "pink-eyed" hen denotes that she has cinnamon blood in her. A "Sih-bred" hen is one bred from parents who were closely related (though really the in-breeding is supposed to have been carried on through several generations). Don't apologise for your "ignorance"—I was once a very "green" fancier myself.

Skylarks' Spurs (W. Rolph).—A three-year-old cock Skylark undoubtedly has a longer and heavier (stouter) "spur," or hind-claw, than does a one-year-old bird. I have never personally had a hen Skylark which sang, but I read of a case where an old caged Skylark sang—but not a good or loud song—constantly, and then laid an egg, thus proving it to be of the female sex, though always thought a cock by its owner. Length of wing is a sure sign of sex; far more so than length of "spur."

Thrushes "Moulting" (Throstle).—I am afraid it is not the moult which is affecting the birds (they would not be "singing fairly well" if it were), but that you have unknowingly let cages and birds get pestered with red-mite. See two other replies on the question of "mites" this week. The plumage will come right after the moult, and the time for this is not far away now. Hints on feeding are given in the reply to "E.B.F." this week.

Goldfinch with Plumage Awry (W. Carlton).—There is only one explanation—red-mite. For the cure, note other replies given this week. I suppose you give the bird frequent opportunities of bathing?—or that you spray it? Red-mites multiply exceedingly quickly during summer weather, and thus if a bird is attacked by these pests, it takes but a short time (if they be not checked) for every joint and crevice in the cage to literally swarm with them. The bird's plumage then soon "tells a tale."

A Muling Difficulty (P.M.B.).—I should think the first round would very likely be too early for the Linnet; probably he was not in full breeding trim. It is curious the second lot of eggs should "turn," and then the embryo die. Did the hen stay off the eggs for an unduly long period during the early stages of incubation? That will spoil eggs. Let the hen be by herself when she again goes to nest, and let her be very quiet for the first week, and do not offer her a bath during that period.

Bramblefinch and Greenfinch (R.C.F.).—Bramblefinches are cruel fighters when they start, and especially vicious to other members of their own species. No doubt your two cock birds have been "scrapping." They ought to be separated. The place over the beak may come right at the moult; if it does not, you can't do anything, for if you burn off the "wart" with caustic, the place will always remain bare of feathers. You must cage up the Greenfinch, and gently anoint the patch twice daily with a little sulphur ointment; that will soon stop the irritation.

A "Funny" Hen (Brum).—It is difficult to say much about your hen without seeing her. Can she be very old, and past breeding? You do not seem to have been feeding her very highly. You ought not to have stopped the egg-food, and should have given frequent feeds of hemp, niger, and maw in addition. I advise you to resume the egg-food, and to mix with each teaspoonful five or six drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. If she does not then soon show signs of nesting, I am afraid she is hopeless. Your management is all right apart from the above.

Hybrid, Etc., Breeding (C.E.S.).—It is somewhat late now to pair up, but if the birds are already in condition (and they ought to be), you have plenty of time to get a nest from them. Hen Greenfinch to either cock Goldfinch or Linnet would be a very likely couple, affording an easily obtained Hybrid. I should be rather surprised if your starlings bred in a 42-inch cage. They would, no doubt, prefer a hollow log, with a hole cut in the front, to nest in. You would have to feed on a good insectivorous food, with whatever live foods (beetles, grubs, small garden worms, mealworms, etc.) you could obtain.

Skylark with Insects (E. Harris).—They are what fanciers term "grey lice"—wretched things to the attacks of which Skylarks are especially prone. You should catch the bird and dust plenty of Keating's insect powder thoroughly amongst its plumage, seeing that it goes well down to the skin (a soft camel-hair "mop" brush is handy to use). Then wrap the bird for five or ten minutes in a piece of clean cloth (old, soft calico, for instance), leaving the roll open at the head end, of course. After unwrapping the bird, give another light dusting, and return to the cage. Repeat in a week's time. A hand-wash with carbolic soap is very helpful.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

The Blue-eyed Mantle Cockatoo.

Folkestone.—Am not quite sure what species you refer to, and your letter reached me only as we are going to press, and there is not time to look the matter up. So far as I may venture a reply, I think it is at least very uncommon, if not rare, and it would be a valuable bird. However, values are comparative, and depend on how much one can induce an enthusiast to pay. As things go now-a-days, the rarity of to-day is common to-morrow, and this has made the acquisition of rare specimens very much of a speculation—though we do not buy to sell we do not care to buy to lose. The various species of Black Cockatoos are all valuable, and some of them still very rare. Please send me your address, I have mislaid it, and I will in the meantime look the matter up and then write you to save time.

A Grey with Indigestion.

J. Pye.—It is the table scraps, etc., that have set up the mischief, and will not be very quickly remedied. Continue the treatment as per postcard, but regarding the use of the magnesia, you must after the first two doses exercise care, as the voidings should not be allowed to remain watery, neither should they be hard. Keep up the chemical food, and also dust the boiled maize with flowers of sulphur. Your present diet appears to be wholesome. Of course, it is now too late to do anything, but did you sterilise your cage after the demise of the previous occupants? This should always be done, as infection often follows the failing to take such precaution. I should let it have a liberal supply of ripe fruit daily, and offer at present a little plain biscuit and a few nuts regularly, as well as keeping up the supply of maize and seed mixture. When it is taking sufficient of the latter it will be better without the maize. Please report progress about a fortnight hence.

Birds and Beetles.

G. A. Baker.—I do not think the birds, or rather the conditions of the aviary are responsible for the beetles. The ordinary cockroach (commonly called Black Bat) is ubiquitous and will find its way almost everywhere; they will enter rooms on the wing, and if undiscovered would soon increase behind the wainscoating, etc., and would then occasionally be discovered under green food and in any dark corners or shelter, the aviary provided. I do not think there is any other connection between the aviary and the beetles than this. There is one precaution it is well to take, and that is to secure an entire absence of damp arising from the use of the bath; place this on a watertight tray very much longer than the bath to catch the splashings. A demon beetle trap outside the aviary would soon test how many there were about; it has often occurred that these pests have been very numerous without their presence being suspected. Following them up with a trap and searching dark corners should soon reduce their numbers.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Parrot Pulling Feathers.

K.C.S.—So long as the toast is not buttered and the biscuit not sopped in tea, coffee, or milk, they are both wholesome, and can be given freely. If the bird prefers them moistened, moisten (not saturate) them with the chemical food water. Neither maize nor monkey nuts should form the staple diet (I presume the maize is boiled). I should keep a tin of the seed mixture in the cage and also mix a little with the maize, and it will ultimately take to this. Consult its taste and give it some ripe fruit daily; apple, orange, or grapes are usually preferred. Give Dinneford's every other day so long as the voidings are not watery; if they become so you must cease the magnesia for a few days, at any rate. The chemical food can be given on the days you are not giving the magnesia. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish hanging in the cage, also a cotton reel or two, and a piece of stout branch (non-splitting willow is good) so as to keep it occupied. I do not anticipate your bird is confirmed in this habit, but that its plumage will gradually improve; continue the treatment for a month and then report progress, giving full particulars.

Budgerigars Not Breeding, etc.

M.L.G.—(1) You are making the common mistake of comparing Foreign birds with Canaries. Even the free breeding Foreigners, even Budgerigars, prolific as they are, do not breed with the same precision as Canaries, that is, put them together and expect results in a month or thereabouts. This sometimes does occur, but it is not the rule. Your treatment is satisfactory, and you will have to wait for them to settle down. There is ample time for them to breed this year; it is quite safe to permit them to do so right up to October. I most certainly am of opinion they will settle down to breeding shortly, but individual pairs are very erratic in this respect—some do so almost at once, others take a few months to do so. (2) Give the Zebra Finches a box type breeding cage, say, 24in. long by 12in. deep by 18in. high; place a nesting receptacle at each end and do not interfere with these, but leave them to themselves; give them a little soft food or a few ants' eggs to pick over, and I do not anticipate you will have any further trouble with them. Their present quarters are too public. A C.P. aviary cage is no use for breeding purposes; it gives no privacy. Again, the company of other birds in such confined space is almost fatal to success. Of course, if the hen still persists in this vice under the altered conditions, there is nothing to be done but get rid of her and procure another hen.

A Budgerigar Unwell.

R.A.W.—From your details it would appear you have had two hens, as the cere of the female when out of breeding condition is blue. I am afraid nothing can be done; the bird is evidently wasting away, very probably from some contagious malady with which both were contaminated. I should most certainly not at present put another bird with it, and should advise well scalding the cage out before using it for another. The husk should be thrown away, and a fresh one put in. I can only suggest that you add to the birds' dietary a few oats and grass in flower (seeding grass), as much as it will take of the latter. Put a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every other day for week. In such small compass I should advise you to have another pair of Budgerigars with a husk at each end of the cage. A pair each of Green and Yellows would look well together. I have not found varnish or paint of any kind, once it has become really hard, harmful to birds, and I have had Parrakeets eat quite a quantity of putty which contained white lead, and had been painted with the same.

Dietary for Finches.

D.W.T.—Birds should only be permitted to go to nest when in finest condition, which your bird evidently was not, and this combined with the prevalent cold winds has brought about the catastrophe. Continue to supply the sand, shell, etc., and also if you can get it, pounded mortar rubbish. Diet: Canary, white and spray millet seeds, oats, paddy rice (rice in the husk), green food, such as grass in flower (seeding grass), lettuce, etc., and Ribbon and Zebra Finches and Nonpareils should do well. When they have young to feed, a little soft food should be supplied, and at any period a few ants' cocoons scattered over the sand make a welcome and wholesome change to most species of Foreign Ornamental Finches. Sprays from rose bushes, fruit trees, and any non-poisonous foliage that are covered with blight will also tend to keep them fit and contented.

Brevities.

Silverbill Unwell ("Silverbilly"). — These charming birds are usually very hardy and long-lived. Let its drinking water for one day consist of one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia and one ounce of water; repeat this after an interval of three days. Supply, while it continues in its present condition, a little milk sop, to be made with boiling milk only. Diet: Canary, white and spray millet seeds, green food, cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing. It is impossible to state if its complaint is contagious, but it certainly is unsafe to keep a bird in such a condition with your healthy stock. Isolation should always be practised as a precautionary measure. I fear the bird will be dead before these lines are in print.

Treatment for a Parrot (W. H. Jones, Everton).—Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever to your Grey. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary, oats, hemp, wheat, maize, and sunflower seeds in about equal parts. Also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuit, and nuts. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in the cage, and let it satisfy its thirst three or four times a day; this is better than keeping water continually in the cage at first. If the bird has been having boiled maize, you must continue to supply same for the present, remembering it must be prepared fresh daily as it soon turns sour.

PARK AND LAKE AVICULTURE.

Keeping Ruffs.

G. A.—(1) Yes, Ruffs would be very suitable inmates for an aviary 20ft. by 9ft., containing Cardinals, Foreign Thrushes, etc. (2) They are not at all shy or wild. (3) They do not damage shrubs. (4) They are hardy, but should have a shed, as recommended in this issue. (5) The dealer you mention could no doubt supply you with a healthy pair.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary Hen (J. Crawford).—Chronic softening of liver, consequent feverishness, ending with rupture of blood-vessel of that organ.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

An Address (T. Gillies).—The address you require is The Erith Patent Novelty Co., Erith, Kent. We do not know of any other.

A Cabinet (C. Lugton).—Sorry, but we have published one or two ideas for cabinets in the past. Your latest shall receive due attention.

An Aviary (Berkshire).—It certainly is not "against the law" to keep British birds in an aviary—you need anticipate no trouble on that score. Thanks for kindly remarks.

Address Required (J. McIntyre).—We cannot give the addresses of correspondents without their permission. If you will send us a stamped envelope containing your communication, we shall have pleasure in addressing and forwarding same.

Young Thrown out of Nest (F.E.S.).—The mishap was due to the desire of the hen to nest again. Had you supplied a second nest-box, she would have built in that and left the youngsters alone. When the cock bird is left with the hen, she invariably wants to go to nest again before her first babies can look after themselves. Both parents, however, usually tend to the latter until they can safely be taken right away.

A Macclesfield Matter (Fair Play).—This seems to us to be a matter of purely local interest; one which the society ought to settle amongst its own members. If it can be established that a mistake was made respecting the sex of the bird, it will surely be freely admitted.

A Benefit Singing Match in Lancashire.

SIR,—In answer to the letter in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, signed "A Novice Fancier," I shall be much obliged to him if he will meet the Secretary of the Wigan Linnet Club at the club house, Millstone Hotel, when he will give him all the information he wants about that benefit match that was held at Wigan a few weeks since. I shall be only too pleased to meet him, any time after six o'clock, if he will come.

The Taming of Wild Birds in the Open.

SIR,—The following may interest many of your numerous readers: A friend of mine has tamed some Robins, so that they fly into her house and into her bedroom in the early morning, and take the bread she puts there. Should she forget to put bread on the table, they go out immediately, but when bread is there they will come to visit her in bed. One laid an egg in her conservatory. Several visit her house and fly about anywhere, regardless of the inmates. A bird has laid an egg under the seat in a waiting-room of a railway station near here, and the porters are wondering if it will lay more. I do not know what bird it is. I have tame Gulls that will take food from me, and will hover over my head when I call them. They tap at my window and scream if I am late. I am a fair distance from the sea, too. Even the people here are astonished. I have tamed them so well. Crows, and all kinds of birds, fly to me in the garden. I feed the wild birds all the year daily, and I have a large number of cage birds, both foreign and Canaries—the latter being of my own rearing. I have had birds, in fact, all my life. F. B.

On Mating Birds with an Object.

SIR,—There will still be many matings carried out even at this belated season for late broods from birds that have been backward in coming in condition, and for a last brood from a "corrected" mating, so to speak. That is, when one has put together a pair of birds at the beginning of the season which have obviously failed to "hit," as shown by the quality, so far as it can be judged of the first brood, if another bird is available, to which either the cock or the hen—or other mates or both for that matter—seem to form a better balanced match, that pair are mated together for the last brood of the season instead of adhering all the season to the first selection which has clearly failed. Let us suppose, for example, that your stock consists of Yorkshires, and that there is a certain proportion of birds of both sexes with flat heads. These, in the ordinary course, will have been mated with the roundest-headed of one's stock, other things being equal. Now, in theory, the produce of this pair should show a fair proportion of birds which are a kind of go-between of these two types of heads, whilst the remainder may consist of one or other of the predominating type. Now, suppose that the youngsters from the first brood of the pairs mated on this principle show a decided leaning to the minority of good- headed birds, and, perhaps, but a small proportion of the go-between, too, the great majority of the young being replicas of the flat-headed parent, and mere "wastrels," then is the time for the breeder to look around and see whether he can revise his early matings, in the hope of getting a slightly improved type of young in the last round of nests. Say, for instance, one pair, consisting of a flat-headed cock, and a good dome-skulled hen, have failed to produce any decent-headed young, and the flat-head is noticeable throughout their young, and a second pair, consisting of a flat-headed cock and only a fairly round-headed hen, have produced a good average proportion of medium young, and a few good headed birds, the proportion of real wasters being but small. This latter case may show one of two things; first, that the fault in the cock is not of a strongly hereditary type; or, second, that the hen has a prepotent power over the fault, and is able to counterbalance it in the young, even though she herself is not conspicuously good in the point. Similarly in the first-named pair the fault in the cock is probably of a strongly fixed type, and the hen, although excelling in the same point physically, probably possesses but weak innate powers of correcting it. Now, if the cock from the first-named pair is mated with the hen of the second pair described, there will probably still be a fair average of medium quality birds, with a rather larger proportion of wasters, and a correspondingly smaller number of good birds, the influence of the hen being still potent enough to correct the fault of the cock to a certain extent. On the other hand, the cock of the second-named pair, mated with the hen of the first-named pair, may produce at least a small proportion of birds of medium quality, with a fair chance of a stray bird or two of good average quality, and at least as good in head points as the female parent. To sum up, the revision of two such fine pairs as those described will in all probability result in an increase of specimens of medium quality, a diminution of real wasters, and the addition of a sporting chance of really good outstanding birds turning up in the last brood. As an alternative to the revised mating just described, if the best of the cocks (that, in the case referred to would be the cock of the second-named pair) is a young and vigorous bird, he may be run alternately with both the hens for the last nest, and the cock of number one pair relegated to the flight for the remainder of the season. But if he is used, as already suggested, and the young from him when mated with the other hen still show a persistent trace of the fault through all the young, he should not be used another season. In many cases novices hold on to a bird of this type much too long. Naturally, the case taken in point as an object lesson is applicable to any variety, and also to any other typical failing, as well as flat-headedness. By doing this much may be done even at this late day to remedy errors and misjudgments which might have been perpetrated at the beginning of the season.

AN INTERESTED BREEDER.

More Twins.

SIR,—I am glad to be able to answer my friend's wish concerning twin birds which he saw in Mr. Barclay's bird room the other day. Two years ago I had a pair of Norwich. The hen laid three eggs, two rather large. She sat, and in due course there were five birds in three eggs—two eggs with twins in, all fully matured, but all dead. I have more than one witness who saw the birds. Perhaps this will help our friend. These are facts which were referred to in your valuable paper at the time, in 1907.

W. REDSTONE.

Lines from an Old Breeder.

SIR,—I have only been a purchaser of your paper from my newsagent this last few months. I may mention that I took some moderate persuasion to begin to read it. However, I am now doing so continually, as the articles put in each week interest me. I am an old breeder (on and off for a great many years), and I thought perhaps a few lines from a quiet sort of a breeder might be a sort of livening-up for the present day "upper ten." The one thing I always read with interest is what appeared the other week, headed "Breeding Season Troubles," and the many remedies there are for troublesome hens and the rearing of young. I have never experienced any great sorrows myself (maybe it's luck), and eggs are laid, hatched, and young reared without my ever losing more than three or four in a season. Perhaps my system may be smiled at with the present tip-top breeders; yet, if my routine was of any value I should only be too glad to hear of similar success though I agree there are hens of a curious understanding with Canaries. My system as regards egg-cake for young is strictly under the "old act" home spun (for five nests of young). Two eggs are boiled (hard, of course); I take the yolk only out of one, and use the whole of the other egg. I chop well up together very old loaf bread, two small handfuls well softened, mixed with crushed hemp seed and a little soft sugar (the bread, of course, with water well squeezed out). So far, out of eight hens I have 13 young ones (on perches, or nearly on). Three hens are on the point of hatching with four each (two just hatched four each). which, I hope by my ordinary happy-go-lucky "home spun" may be the usual success—usual dessert, watercress and lettuce. My general sort are Yorkshires, but this year I have added another Fancy (Norwich Plainhead), of which I have obtained two really excellent pairs from a fancier at Aylesbury. I have had a fine nest of young from one hen; the other is about to hatch. I have taken a great liking to this beautiful class. I think I shall forward a few this year to some of the shows, and see what I am able to do. Maybe I shall be interested more so; at least it will be instructive if I do not count. In conclusion, I might say I am a breeder, and find the hobby a very pleasant one. I have already enrolled a few of my friends as readers of CAGE BIRDS, and shall continue to do so at every opportunity.

JOHN H. JOWETT.

An Encouraging Record.

SIR,—In writing of my experience of the bird breeding hobby, I take my readers back to the time when I commenced some four years ago. At that time I was quite ignorant of Canaries, but Canaries themselves had such a fascination for me, that I decided to "have a go at them." Having purchased a "prize pair" for about 8s. 6d., I put them together in a cage altogether too small for the purpose. Taking the first year on the whole, it was an utter failure. The second season I started in "deadly earnest," and I must say before going any farther, that I commenced to take in CAGE BIRDS. Now, with the help of CAGE BIRDS I made wonderful strides. It helped me to have a better knowledge of how birds should and should not be paired; and as regards size and colour, too, it gave me most useful information. My second year was crowned with better success, and at the end of the season I had about thirty youngsters from six pairs of birds. I still continued taking CAGE BIRDS, and from this source got information which was most valuable to me. Last season, with eight pairs, I managed to rear about sixty young ones. This season I have ten pairs, and up to the time of writing have twenty young ones, and also three lots of eggs to hatch to complete the first round. I would like to impress upon young beginners the absolute necessity of cleanliness. It is most essential to bird-breeding. Also plenty of fresh air must be allowed. Don't be afraid of having windows open, so long as the draught is not directly upon the birds. Also, I find that giving birds with young ones food frequently, helps them considerably. My food for feeding young is, egg and biscuit, crushed hemp, plain Canary seed, and a little green food. Shepherd's purse is a splendid green food for birds. By the way, I saw one of your correspondents inquiring for a sample of this shepherd's purse. If he sends me his address, I shall be pleased to forward same on to him. In conclusion, I should like to say a word of praise about your journal as an advertising medium. Last season I advertised in your paper (my first advertisement for CAGE BIRDS) and by that means I sold to one person forty-five birds. I also had several inquiries from well-known bird fanciers, and could have sold double the quantity if I had them. My wish is that every success may attend CAGE BIRDS, and be the means of helping more "novices" like myself.

My British and Foreign Birdie Friends.

SIR,—It may interest (and perhaps some other bird lover will be kind enough to correct me if I am wrong in the treatment of my mixed bird family) if I describe my experiences. I divide my family into two sections, and will describe each. I.—Birdroom pets:—Hitherto I have been able to devote an empty room, facing east, and just over the kitchen, to the use of my birds. The room is large, lofty, and very airy, with two windows. The floor is covered with linoleum, and on this stands the whole top of an apple tree nailed to a board. Besides this, I have placed perches extending from point to point in the room, and at different heights. Here fly at their own sweet will Canaries, English and Siberian Bullfinches, a Goldfinch, Greenfinch, Goldfinch-Canary Hybrid, two pairs of Grey Java Sparrows, and a pair of white Javas. As a rule, the greatest harmony prevails amongst these various species, and yet I find it a fiction that "birds in their little nests agree." During the breeding season discussions are apt to wax warm, but the only weapon employed is the voice, and that is harmless. My method of feeding such a mixed assembly is to provide hoppers, filled with Canary, German rape, with sunflower and flax seeds, as a stock mixture for general use. In addition, I place a hopper of Finch mixture for the Goldfinch and the Greenfinch, also one of Canary, white millet and Indian millet seeds for the Javas. Millet sprays are also provided for those which like them; but I do not for one moment suppose that the birds keep strictly to the diet supplied to each species. Nevertheless, they are a healthy, happy lot, all in splendid condition, and are kept scrupulously clean both as regards their seed and water vessels and their room. Water is supplied in two large, self-filling fountains, and two large zinc baths (larger than the largest pie-dish used) are put on the floor every day in summer, and twice weekly in winter. These baths are very much appreciated, and I often see that every single bird has bathed. I buy the best seed I can obtain, and mix it myself, so that I know the food is wholesome and sweet. My Canary breeding results in such a mixed multitude were nothing last year, for there is too much life in the room, and one pair of Canaries interferes with another pair. Sometimes, also, the cock leaves the nestlings to the care of the hen, which finds domestic duties too slow, and goes a-courting on her own account, leaving the poor babies to their fate, the consequence being that they die. This year I propose to cage the couples, and to put blackthorn bushes thickly in one corner of the room for the use of the Bullfinches, and then see what happens. The birds are all perfectly tame, and are only caged for a month before the show season, just to steady them, and our show results are most satisfactory. This, I think, fairly describes my bird-room party. II.—Aviary pets:—Downstairs, in a quite cold room, stands a large home-made aviary, over 4ft. long and 5ft. high, made from an old packing case. In this I keep a cock Blackheaded Gouldian Finch, aged five years, a grand prize winner at shows, a hen Redheaded Goudian, called "The Merry Widow," and a very frisky, merry one she is. Also there are a pair of Cordons Bleus, a pair of Nutmeg Finches, and I have also had a pair of Zebra Finches there, but these have now a cage to themselves on account of domestic arrangements. This comprises my foreign element in the family. The British bird section consists of two young Bullfinches, which came to me in nest feather, and which I have watched develop into two beautiful cock birds. Also I have a hen Bullfinch, in process of turning black. This little family lives quite happily, as a rule, with no discussions, although I have seen the pigmy cock Cordon Bleu fighting with, what must seem to him, a giant cock Bullfinch. My method of feeding is to give a seed hopper of proper mixture for each section of my little community, the food being identical with that given upstairs in the bird-room, with millet sprays for those which wish for them. A bath of tepid water is given twice weekly in winter, and a cold bath daily in summer, and this, as in the bird-room, is greatly appreciated. All the birds seem happy, and in good health, and they all have room to fly, for the perches are wide apart, and they have a good flight from top to bottom of the aviary. Cosy cocoanut husks are provided as sleeping places for the foreigners, though, with the exception of the Cordon Bleus, I do not find they are used. The room is quite cold, and faces the north, so that the birds are quite hardy. They are also very tame, so much so, that I can take the foreign birds straight from the aviary to a show cage and send them off at once without any disturbance beyond a mild surprise at their sudden change of house being expressed on their faces. I should be very grateful for any criticism, or any suggestions.

A Food for the Wild Birds Wanted.

SIR,—For about 12 months I have been feeding the wild birds coming to my garden (not a large one). At first I had about a dozen to look after. Now, they come in scores—Starlings, Blackbirds, Thrushes, Tits, Robins, Sparrows and some Warblers. We have already Blackbirds and Thrushes, which we can feed by calling to them, and throwing the food on the ground—they come like chickens. I buy good fat meat (scraps) at 2d. a pound, bread and seed (whole and crushed hemp, maw, and millet). I get through 6lbs. of meat and 6lbs. of bread every week, and am beginning to think I shall have to increase my allowance. Can any of your readers inform me if I can in any way keep up giving them food they like, but at a cheaper rate? If they can do so they will greatly oblige.

The Progress of the Scotch Fancy Canary.

SIR,—I notice your issue of June 12 "A Breeder" says:—"I cannot understand why Canary fanciers do not enter heartily into the breeding of the Scotch Fancy Canary." I will endeavour to explain, and these same reasons may apply to cases which we bear nothing of. I started to keep Scotch fancies in 1904. I bought a pair for £5. I had four nests with four eggs in each all clear. In 1905 I added another pair to my stock. I got two young out of 28 eggs. I sold my first pair for £2, and bought another pair for £3. From these two pairs I had 17 young, but failed to raise any of them. That was the season 1906. I kept the same two pairs for 1907, but only got one young one—a hen. I sold the two pairs at the end of season for £2. Then, preparing for season 1908, I bought another two pairs, thinking fresh stock might bring me success. I had twelve eggs from one hen, and eight from the other—all clear. This season I have two pairs up, but so far with no results. In writing these lines I have no wish to discourage the breeding of the Scotch fancy, and "A Breeder" will admit, after perusing the above, I am not easily discouraged myself, because I'm "still having a go at 'em." I keep them in a cold room, which is free of draughts, and in which Yorkshires and Borders do well. I follow the advice of CAGE BIRDS, which I have taken for five years regularly. Still, I cannot "hit" the Scotch fancy. The worst you could do is to place the Scotch Fancy in a false position. If it is as easy to breed as other varieties, and you get such good prices, why don't more people go in for it? If "A Breeder" would give us a few hints as to how to breed it for pleasure, never mind profit, he would be doing good.

The Border Fancy Canary in the South.

SIR,—I have now considered Mr. John Robson's letter, and relying upon his assurance that his judging book proves his statement, I hereby unreservedly withdraw my letter to Mr. Hodson of the 2nd December, 1908, and express my regrets to Mr. John Robson that I should have written it, and apologise to him for same. It appears I have been misled by the cards being placed on the wrong cages, and, I am afraid, by the true circumstances not being fully explained to me. I have at no time been actuated by any malicious feeling towards Mr. Robson, otherwise I should have mentioned names when I wrote as to the unwisdom of anyone showing under a relative. With regard to Mr. Robson's rather strong remarks as to my query, i.e.: "What are the qualifications entitling one to be called a specialist judge?" I would remind him that a "specialist" is "one who devotes himself to a special branch of a science or an art," and therefore, on his showing, he is not a specialist judge, but what is commonly called "all rounder."

SIR,—There is little in Mr. Hadwin's letter that requires an answer from me except the misunderstandings. In the first place, why is he so anxious to re-open points thrashed out many, many years ago? How can they alter or advance the type of bird desired by our breeders just now? We cannot bring back to life those dear, humble and honest fanciers who settled this question; nor can we grind our corn with the water that has passed. These things may please some natures, but are away from the point at issue, and, in my opinion, only used to create a wrong impression, and stir up strife when there is no cause. Mere curiosity and jealousy we might well leave to our suffragettes! Curiosity can be carried to the brink of the grave. It reminds me of the minister who was called to the death-bed of someone, and who noticed, after praying for the guidance of his soul, that something was perplexing him. So he asked the cause, and was dumbfounded to receive the answer: "I was wondering how you got into that waistcoat of yours." The waistcoat was buttoned down the back! I quoted my letter word for word. The added sentence was used to show my meaning clearly. There was no "impertinence" on my part. If there were any it came from Mr. Hadwin in the first place. He states that everybody knows there are more good birds in Scotland than in England, etc. This is, as I have previously stated, taking the bird on an average. And, in this instance, I was writing of the international contest where points count. I would thank Mr. Hadwin to pay more attention, and not let me catch him every time. Arguments advance and expand our minds, but not pure "misunderstandings." Here is a point of more vital importance. The Editor of CAGE BIRDS has granted us his columns to settle this matter. If it is not settled now, are we not disregarding the opportunity? Re the size, my proofs in the first place were my own eyes. And the answer has been given likewise by Mr. Smith, who says: "Most of the judges down here (the South) seem to me (a novice) to want a thick-necked, stout-chested type of a bird." Mr. Hocking, in his straightforward letter, states that "the bird wanted down here in Wales is a rather shorter and more chubbily built bird." Again, from the number of letters I have received, I quote one penned on June 9th: "I may say I am a breeder, and a great admirer of the Border; but I am puzzled about the different types. Living as I do in the Southern Counties, is it any use my breeding for the longer, graceful, and more slim-necked bird? Here the judges take quite a different type." The writer finishes off by stating that only the distance would prevent him from sending birds where the societies employ judges who go by the standard. Now, Sir, those letters all point out that the fanciers want to breed the bird to the standard; but they cannot move further through the fads of judges who are years behind the times. Your opinion, fellow readers, is desirable on a question of such vital importance. I say, without the slightest hesitation, that the persons who are judges, and go away from the standard, are yearly driving the right sort of fanciers away. A little more attention to the points referred to might do a power of good.

The Japanese Waxwing.

SIR,—On opening my CAGE BIRDS on Friday, I was delighted to see an article on the Waxwing by Mr. F. Finn. I thought it might be interesting for Mr. Finn to know that I also possessed the Japanese Waxwing. I had the bird specially brought to me, by a friend, from Nagasaki. I treated this bird in exactly the same way as I had done my European Waxwing. It never appeared to thrive well, and my friend assured me that he had a lot of bother with it during the voyage—he fed it on some sort of paste and fruit. It was in a wretched condition when I received it, and I had only had it three months when it died. I will here endeavour to give an idea of its appearance. The length of the Japanese Waxwing is a little over 6ins., so it will be seen that it is a great deal smaller than our bird; in fact, it is the smallest of the trio, as I have also seen the American Waxwing in its native wilds. The Japanese bird bears an even greater resemblance to the Cedar bird than to the British Waxwing. The base of the bill is bordered by a black band, which passes to the back of the head, surrounding the eye on its way, and terminating in the lower crest feathers, which are of the same colour throughout. The chin and throat are black; the crest is long, composed above of feathers of an ashy reddish colour, with a lower layer of the black already referred to. The breast, upper parts, and wing coverts are of a brown ash, and a red band traverses the wing (about the middle of it); all the quills are of an ashy black, the greater quills terminated with black and tipped with white; the tail is of an ashy black, tipped with vivid red. The middle of the belly is of a pale or whitish yellow; the lower tail coverts, chestnut; shanks and feet, black. The bird differs from both the British Waxwing and the Cedar bird by the nakedness of the nostrils, which are not hidden by the small feathers at the front, like the nostrils of the other two species of Waxwings, and also by the entire absence of the wax-like appendages that tip the secondaries of its congeners.

The Clashing of Show Dates in Scotland.

SIR,—Mr. Grewar's reply in your last week's issue struck me as being like what, I believe, is reckoned a most undesirable Norwich Plainhead, insomuch that it had plenty of length but very little substance. Like the drowning man clutching at a straw, he states that in any event all the shows are not advertised in the "Dates Fixed Column." What concerns us is that Kelty and Perth were advertised. I am taken to task because I made a clerical error in stating 24th Oct. instead of 23rd. I stand rebuked! Your correspondent also reminds me that I have not explained why Kelty chose a new date this year. No, I have not; nor have I explained to him the way to reach the moon, for the very good reason that I do not know: Mr. G. does not like being convicted on his own statements, and pretends not to see the point. It is very simple. He condemns Perth for taking Forfar's date some years ago, and now Forfar Society commits the same breach. When I object, he cannot see anything wrong in their action! He rightly finds fault with a society which has taken Forfar's date, but he would give the latter a free license to take Perth, or any other society's, date. Forfar can do no wrong! He blusters forth that they have a right to hold a show when it suits them. Yes, Mr. G., they have a legal right to usurp another society's date, but not a moral one. However, all's well that ends well, and the best proof of the soundness of my argument, lies in the fact that Forfar Society has seen its error, and wisely abandoned the idea of holding an open show on 23rd Oct. Now, Mr. G., I trust you will be early in the field for 1910. Fix your date, and advertise it. If Perth or any other near neighbour selects your date after you have it fixed and advertised, I will be the first to take your side. Do not be anxious, Mr. G.; you have not hurt my feelings, nor are you likely to. Why should we make these matters personal?

Linnet Singing at Leeds.

Unvarnished Reports versus Bluff and Bounce.

SIR,—I see in last week's issue that Mr. Soloman's Linnet is the best bird that ever sung in Leeds. I wish readers to understand that this is far from being true. For instance, the bird can bullspink, and do three other ways of spinking, also can tweet enough to knock the window in, and can song-sing. He can go the wrong way as well as the right way, as he gets beat oftener than he wins, which readers of this paper will notice. The Linnet called "Chivvey" can tweet and spink and song-sing, and is full of clicks and jars, like the other. Both these Linnets knocked into one would not make a real one, as a true lover of the Fancy is disappointed when he hears the birds and then reads the report. It is all right when the the Linnets happen to get off the right way; they go mad, telling everybody what the birds have sung; but when they go the wrong way, they tell them the birds have not sung (when they have not got a prize). Readers of this paper will notice that they sang for the World's Championship, at the King's Head, for £20, and that a £5 contest was held at the Skinner's Arms, Buslingthorpe, and an All-England contest at the Prince Albert. Instead of its being £20 at the "King's Head," it was 15s. 6d. and a kettle, first prize. In the All-England contest at the Skinner's Arms, Mr. Soloman's bird did not win; he got second prize, which was 6s. In the English Championship he won first prize, getting 6s. Readers will see that the report has been nothing else but "bluff," and it turns the real fancier sick when he reads such. These two Linnets only win in their turn. When they are champion Linnets they keep on winning, and very seldom get beat. I hope this will stop such startling reports sent up from Leeds Linnet clubs, and that they will just put the first and second and third prizes and the men's names to them, as they do in other towns. It causes a lot of unpleasantness to the older fanciers when they hear the birds sing and then read the report. And I hope the Leeds fanciers will use better language when I go again.

Are Nightingales Decreasing?

With the object of controverting a statement that "the Nightingale is not increasing its numbers, and so not extending its range," a correspondent to "The Field" writes: In Worcestershire (Evesham) and Somerset (Glastonbury) where Nightingales are fairly abundant, I gathered that the numbers had increased much within living memory, and I have been informed that this is the case in East Glamorgan. We had several pairs reported in the neighbourhood of Cardiff yearly, and in 1906 I noted four pairs within a radius of a mile. Bridgend is often mentioned as the western limit.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

First Feather show held on June 12th, at Park Chapel Schools, when Mr. J. Bailey (Allerton) officiated as judge. This show was the first of a series of six shows, for members to compete for the valuable specials that bave been arranged for competition. Owing to the renewed generosity of our esteemed president (Mr. E. Suddards) the Society are in the position of being able to again place before the members a splendid list of prizes, and this will no doubt be the means of providing some good competition amongst the members before the series of shows comes to a close on December 27th. The members, one and all, feel proud of our president, who has stood hy us loyally, and helped to steer the Society into the front rank by his unlimited interest in its welfare. May be live long to hold the presidency of our Society is the earnest wish of all our members. The entry was very good, 88 exhibits facing the judge, and some grand young birds were staged in all three sections, the quality being well up to the standard of any previous shows. The trustees of the chapel kindly gave us permission to hold our show in the new school, where we hold our open show, and this is a vast improvement, and will enable visitors to see the exhibits with far more comfort and pleasure than was possible in the old room. The winners of most points were: Champion section, Messrs. Stables, Laycock, and Briggs; novice section, Messrs. Dinsdale, Greenwood, and Gelder; extra novice section, Mr. Walker. ## GLOUCESTER C.B.S.

The first of their young bird shows for the season was held June 10th, at headquarters, "The Saracen's Head Hotel." The entries were not quite so numerous as on some previous occasions, but some nice quality birds were staged. Mr. J. Houghton put down a nice level team and captured three out of the four first prizes in Norwich, also the special for best bird in show, with a grand feathered marked yellow of capital shape. In the A.O.V. class, Mr. G. Gwilliam made a clean sweep witb a nice team of Borders, the winner being a charming buff of much promise. The Hon. Sec., Mr. J. Hougbton, had everything nicely arranged. Mr. J. H. Payne judged, and gave the members satisfaction

LEYTON AND DISTRICT CAGE BIRD SOCIETY.

The Association embarked upon a new venture on June 5th by holding a Nest Feather Show. It proved a great success as regards the number of exhibits, close upon 100 birds being entered. The attendance during the evening was excellent, and the arrangements as usual were carried out in A1 style by the popular secretary, Mr. B. F. Forse, ably assisted by Mr. H. W. Burbidge. Mr. J. S. Clarke made the awards, which, as usual, gave entire satisfaction.

ORNITHOLOGICAL ODDMENTS.

By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S.

Author of "The World's Birds."

A Hardy Wader.

People who want to see the Ruffs at the Zoo at their amusing, not to say ridiculous courting antics, must not long delay their visit to the Waders' Aviary there, for I saw last Sunday one bird already beginning to moult his courting finery. This, as many of my readers will know, consists of a tippet and frill of long curled feathers, and varies astonishingly, it being difficult to find two birds alike. When out of colour, however, the Ruffs are all much alike, and then, as the rough sketch accompanying shows, look much like other Sandpipers; the Reeves, as the females are called, are always like this, though darker in colour in summer. The Reeve, however may always be distinguished from her lord and master by being fully a head shorter; she is only about as big as a Thrush, while he is nearly as large as a dove. Ruffs and Reeves are about the easiest waders to keep, being omnivorous, hardy, and long-lived, and not by any means wild. They have been offered this year at only five shillings each, and are very cheap at the price, as they are graceful and interesting even when out of colour.

Feeding and Treatment.

Being ground-birds, these need a good long run rather than a high aviary; they should have a shed to shelter under, and a large pan of water to paddle and bathe in. They will live on any decent soft food, and appreciate Canary seed and wheat also; this they pick up with quite extraordinary rapidity. Earthworms, mealworms, and gentles are all much appreciated, and in default of these a little minced raw meat should be frequently given. They nest on the ground, laying four spotted eggs, and have been reared successfully in confinement. For breeding, it is as well to have more than one female, as these birds are highly polygamous; but they do not bother a hen as pheasants and such birds will do. I have never seen them behave aggressively to anything but another Ruff, but have heard of other ground-birds being persecuted by them, so an eye should be kept on their behaviour. With birds which perch, and so could always easily avoid them, they can do no harm.

Intelligent Parrots.

Some time ago I saw such a remarkable instance of intelligence in a Grey Parrot that I hasten to put it on record here before I forget it. The bird, like Parrots generally, liked having its head scratched, and had invented a plan for getting this gratification without calling in human assistance. It would hold on to its swing with one foot and push this backwards and forwards across its poll as it stood on the perch below with the other foot. This was "going one better" than another Grey I read of, which used to give its swing a push and then hold its head under it as it swung to and fro. But since seeing the bird first mentioned, I have interviewed an even more accomplished specimen, which, its owner told me, would hold a small stick in its foot and scratch its head with that. This it unkindly refused to do before me, though it took and held a bit of wood; but after what I had seen with the other bird I had no difficulty in believing the account given me.

A Club for Budgerigars.

Speaking of intelligence, reminds me that I have noticed lately that the yellow Budgerigars, now so commonly bred, are much more lively in a cage than the green ones, and I have been told they are more intelligent. And this moves me to suggest that more serious attention should be paid to the cultivation of this pretty little Parrakeet. Surely a bird which is so easily kept and bred, can learn to sing and talk, and displays such a tendency to colour-variation, ought to be taken more seriously, and have a club to look after its interests, and see that it gets good classification at our shows. Budgerigars are just the birds for people who have not much time to look after their pets; they need no special food when breeding, and no nesting material; although they do not usually breed readily when caged in single pairs, they will do so sometimes, and the tendency would undoubtedly be increased by selection, while they are exceedingly hardy and always saleable. In fact, they could be made very serious rivals both to Canaries and to the larger Parrots, and I am sure this would have been done if they had been brought to the knowledge of those enthusiastic aviculturists of a few centuries back who domesticated our Canaries for us.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

Young Bird Show held at the Crown, Lavender Hill, June 10th. There was a capital collection of youngsters staged, the most marked features being the Norwich and Borders. Special for best in show was awarded to a rattling buff Norwich Plainhead, shown in the Novice section by Mr. W. J. Burgess. This bird possesses beautiful feather, rare type, a bold and well-shaped head, and is in every respect a bird of promise. Yorkshires were nice, and so were the Britisb. Taken all round, the quality was of a high average, and the arrangements well timed and ably carried out. Mr. E. A. G. Box is the hon. sec., and to him, Mr. F. J. Martin (Chairman), and their fellow officials is due great credit for getting togcther such a nice collection of specials. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged, and his awards gave general satisfaction.

Annual show of young birds held at the Cricket Player, Hyson Green, on June 12th. The Society is coming on in great form, fresh members being added to the roll weekly; and no wonder at it, as the room is one of the best for cage birds in England. The management is all that could be wished, and such a hard working committee deserves all that comes their way. Mr. Cottingham had everything in apple-pie order, and much credit is due to him for the way in which he managed the show. Mr. Tom Oliver made the awards.

A Fancier's View of the Scheme.

An Examination into what is probably the first scheme of Insurance for Birds ever attempted by fanciers, which has just been initiated by the London Federation of C.B.S., for the benefit of its members.

In our issue of last week we gave particulars of a scheme for the insurance of birds which has been initiated by the London Federation of Cage Bird Societies, a body comprising 14 metropolitan associations of cage bird fanciers, with a membership of probably something under 600 persons. Appended we publish some friendly comments on this notable scheme, from the pen of Mr. G. E. Weston. The insurance coupon and the rules (of which we gave fac-similes last week) will be fresh in the minds of our readers, though probably it will be well to reprint the chief rules governing the scheme.

An Extract from the Rules.

Insurance under the Scheme of the Federation shall cover:—

(1) Loss of birds in transit (throughout the United Kingdom) whether to or from Shows, or sent on approval, or returned from being sent on approval.

(2) Loss by Death or Theft at Shows (fire excepted).

(3) Loss by Fire on owner's premises, but this shall not apply to loss by fire, due to the use of any heating or lighting apparatus in the birdroom.

For the purposes of Insurance, books containing six perforated Insurance Certificates with counterfoils can be obtained from the Secretary of the Federation at the cost of one shilling and a penny per book. Each Certificate will cover Insurance to the amount of £1, and any number of books may be purchased.

Certificates to the required amount of Insurance (but not more than five in the case of a single bird) must be filled in as stated above, and sent to the Secretary of the Federation before, or at the time of the despatch of the birds, failing which no claim will be entertained; further, the Certificate or Certificates so used will only apply to the railway journey or show definitely stated thereon.

The liability of the Federation, from all causes, shall not exceed £12 to any one member during any one year. Firms shall be considered to be one person for the purposes of Insurance. In the case of fire insurance, where separate studs are kept, each member of such firm, to participate in the benefits, shall be separately insured.

This Insurance will only apply to Canaries and Cage-Moulted British Hardbills, and is not intended to cover Foreign Birds or British Softbills, except under fire insurance, when they may be so insured.

FIRE INSURANCE.

In the case of loss by fire, any book purchased, so long as it remains intact, will cover such loss to the extent of £10, but should a book be partly used at the time of fire, the remaining Certificates shall cover loss to the extent of £1 per leaf.

We have, I expect, all read about that learned man concerning whom Goldsmith tells us, "the wonder grew that one small head could carry all he knew." Well, personally I have not a small head, neither is this the only point of dissimilarity 'twixt my cranium and that of the schoolmaster of "Sweet Auburn," hence it is with considerable hesitation that I venture to write this "criticism" of a scheme which has been formulated by some of the wisest men in the Fancy to-day. As a fancier, and one-time exhibitor, however, there are certain points concerning it which I think might very well be put before my fellow-fanciers. I must first of all, though, declare myself as wholeheartedly in sympathy with the objects the London Federation's scheme of insurance sets out to achieve. Therefore, my criticism is friendly criticism, and not destructive. I realise, too, that it is not easy to suggest a means of overcoming some of the objections I shall mention; further, that probably they have been considered already by the Council of the L.F. of C.B.S. Still, maybe we shall have some discussion in our correspondence columns on the matter, and maybe someone will be able to lead us to the light.

The £ s. d. of the Matter.

Probably the first thing that will cross the mind of the average fancier is: Can the scheme pay? That, it seems to me, is a matter which only the future can show us. It is not an issue which, as in the case of human life insurance, can be more or less closely determined by the study of statistical tables dealing with the duration of life. The claims put up against the Federation must necessarily vary yearly. There may be fat years and lean years—years in which mishap crowds on mishap, and years in which the birds run smoothly, so to speak, at both the shows and on the railway journeys. If many of the lean years are experienced, then, on the present humble premium, the scheme cannot, in my opinion, pay its way. Six hundred books sold at 1s. (may the number be doubled) bring in £30; it will not take many dead show-birds to wipe out that amount, without counting the other risks entitled to consideration (the benefits are unquestionably liberal). However, it is satisfactory to know that the scheme will be financed for one year certain, whatever the result; that shows the sporting spirit of some fancier or fanciers connected with the Federation. May there be no question here of "backing a loser."

Some Dangers.

Leaving the financial problem in the hands of Father Time for solution, it occurs to me that a rock ahead is represented by the difficulty of ensuring that the funds shall be called upon to pay out legitimate claims only. It is not a "nice" side of the question to dwell upon; but that is no adequate reason for shirking it, and I have no doubt the Federation officials are alive to all that it means to their scheme. To put it bluntly, under this insurance scheme it will be quite easy for bogus claims to be made, and it will be the reverse of easy to decide which of the cases are not genuine ones. There can be no independent doctor's examination, as in the case of human lives, with a clean bill of health for the insured; the word of the owner of a bird has necessarily to be accepted as a guarantee of that said bird's perfect health. And if any owner chooses to insure a bird which is "sick unto death" (or, under certain circumstances, even dead), and declare it to be "to the best of my knowledge and belief in perfect health," what happens?

To put a concrete case: Everybody who has had much to do with the keeping of birds, and has bought or sold them, knows well enough that it is possible at any time to send away from a railway station a box labelled "Live Bird," which in reality contains a dead bird. Railway servants do not ask to see any small live stock: unless it is to be insured with the railway company, apparently this is not required of them. When the bird is insured, then they examine it, making certain that it is at least alive, and, to the best of their belief, in good condition. The Federation has not even the latter protection; a bird may be insured with them, and sent away without any examination. They cannot even claim the advantages which attach to the insuring of a bird with the railway company, i.e., the more careful handling of the package, and the checking while en route—the Federation bird takes its chance along with the crowd of ordinary parcels, although insured right enough in reality.

I will give this side of the matter fuller consideration later, as I want this week to get in a reference to the rules.

Are the Rules Sufficiently Clear?

The rules governing the insurance scheme are models of conciseness, but there seem to me to be two points, at least, whereon they are not sufficiently explicit—in fact, I think very open to misinterpretation.

Instance No. 1: It is stated that the liability of the Federation shall be limited to £12 per annum to any individual member. In the rule governing Fire Insurance, however, we find it stated very definitely that "any book purchased, so long as it remains intact, will cover such loss to the extent of £10, etc." Now, it seems to me that the words: "subject to the total liability being not exceeded, and in proportion thereto," ought to be added here. If a man takes out two books of coupons (as many no doubt will do, to enable them to effect insurance up to the full £12)—it seems to me that he is entitled to claim £10 on any intact book of coupons in his possession; and that notwithstanding the fact that he has already been paid claims upon coupons used out of his other book. The two rules as they stand at present are contradictory; and not only that, for it seems to me the alteration in the value of the coupons for fire insurance purposes (six being value for £10) removes the possibility of successfully contending that one rule governs the other. It can't. It would be an interesting point to argue out in a court of law. And heaven defend the Federation from getting into the hands of lawyers!

Instance No. 2: My own first impression on perusing the rules was that the filling in of any coupon insured a bird for one pound while out at a specified show, or on a specified approval journey by rail—that is, from the time it left my door, until the time it returned. And I do not think I shall be alone in putting this construction upon the rules; further (though this is another matter), I think one ought to be able to read this meaning into them, otherwise the scheme becomes complicated, and its usefulness stultified. Yet I understand (to my surprise) that one coupon covers the risks only on the outward journey and while actually at a show, or at some person's house on approval. To insure the bird in the return journey another coupon (or certificate) has to be filled in and sent to the secretary of the Federation. Now, where, I ask, is this made clear in the rules? Look at (1) under risks covered: "whether to or from shows," it reads. Then, later on: "the certificate . . . will only apply to the . . . . show definitely stated thereon." What other idea can this convey than that the whole risk of this particular show is covered?

Wild Bird Life.

Nesting Notes.

While rambling along the old country roads and across footpaths one can constantly hear the sounds of young birds being fed by the parents, and thus many broods of nestlings may be discovered. In a favourable locality one may gather more birdy lore by confining one's attention to a few square yards than by a long ramble. To watch the doings of wild birds with any degree of success one must remain perfectly still and silent. Birds will frequently allow one to pass within a few yards of them, if they think they are unseen; but directly eye meets eye, and detection is certain, then it is only natural for a wild creature to think danger will follow, although the strong maternal feeling of the sitting bird causes her to retain her position, she instinctively feels danger is nigh, yet clings to her treasures as long as possible. When forced from the nest by intrusion, a bird will spend the interval between leaving and returning in quest of food; possibly such action may prevent her having to leave the nest later. Roadsides and footpaths appear somehow to hold a certain fascination for nesting birds, and yet the danger in such places must be far greater than in the dense woods and plantations; but it is only the more wary, Hawks, Crows and Magpies, and a few others, that love to build among the tall trees in the big woods. If they did not their race would soon be ended. As this month slips by the first broods will be independent of their parents, although some remain with the parent birds for some time, and form family parties which roam the hedge rows and fields until Spring comes again. An instance of this can be found in the doings of the Long-tailed Tits, which are only single brooded, the others nesting a second time as soon as the first brood is safely launched. At the present moment a large family of Blue Tits are busy among my fruit trees and roses, the tiny dull-coloured young ones clinging and fluttering among the slender twigs with all the acrobatic grace of the adult birds. Green fly and the smaller insects form the chief part of their food at this period, and one is pleased to see them doing such good service.

Range of the Nightjar.

The Nightjar is found over the whole of Europe during the summer months. It spends the winter in South Africa.

A Beautiful Tern.

It is said that one or two pairs of the Roseate Tern breed regularly on the Farne Islands. This is probably the rarest British breeding bird we have.

Eggs of the Blackbird.

As a rule there is little variation in the colour of the eggs of the Blackbird; but occasionally a nest will be found containing a clutch almost spotless, or one with rich reddish-brown spots. These are very handsome.

Diminishing Woodcock.

Woodcock were at one time so plentiful that shooting parties were organised specially to shoot them. But now they have so diminished in numbers that they are only occasionally met with by sportsmen in quest of other quarry.

The Elusive Grasshopper Warbler.

The elusive Grasshopper Warbler—the bird that will dodge one for half-a-day up and down a small spinney, is said to be common in Cork and Waterford, frequenting the heaths, coppices, and other suitable places. As this bird is so seldom seen, it is difficult to persuade non-birdy people that the peculiar thrilling note is made by a bird. Some of our fairly common Warblers are rare in the sister isle, notably the Reed Warbler and the Lesser Whitethroat; also the handsome Redstart.

Where Rooks Prefer to Build.

It has been said that Rooks prefer elm trees to any others to build in. This may be so on account of these trees being more plentiful than others, and doubtless more Rookeries exist in them throughout the country, but occasionally we find exceptions to the rule. For instance, at Woodmansterne, in Surrey, out of one hundred and forty-seven nests, sixty-nine of them are built in chestnuts, and thirty-five only in elms, the remainder in oaks and firs. This is rather curious, because elm trees are more plentiful than others in the district.

A Curious Nesting Place.

For the sixth year in succession a pair of Blue Tits have this season built their nest in a two-gallon oil-can, which is suspended by a piece of string to the wall at Biel East Lodge, Prestonkirk. The birds are remarkably tame, and the tin can be taken from the wall and returned again without the birds being in the least disturbed. The adroit manner in which the birds drop in through the narrow neck of the can has been a source of much interest to onlookers.

Free Money-Saving Catalogue.

There you will find the best Flight Cages, Nursery Cages, Appliances of every description, Seeds of the very finest quality; in fact, everything that can be found in one dozen other places together. The cages are not an imitation lot, cribbed from somebody else's ideas, nor do they possess names that are taken from other people's catalogues; when this has to be done, it tells you plainly what the sellers and their goods must be made of, otherwise there would be no necessity to resort to such mean, dirty practices. This Money-Saving Catalogue of mine contains more matter than all the others published put together. There is not so much blank paper, just got up to make it appear to have size, but it is crammed full of matter from cover to cover. Every fancier living should see it.

W. RUDD, THE Bird Specialist, NORWICH.

Note, the back of these cages are made with one board, which is a great advantage, as there is nowhere for red mite to breed. Challenge breeding cages, 18 in. 2/-, 20 in. 2/6; double, with sliding partitions, 33 in. 4/-, 36 in. 4/6; for particulars see back numbers.—Henry Morris, Cape Hill, Birmingham.

Now please remember that during the last 18 years I have bred thousands of Budgerigars, and I publicly wager £50 that I have imported, manufactured, sold, and shipped more wired cokernut husk nests for Budgerigar breeding than any other man living; so have any bragging copyists, or so-called shippers sufficient British pluck to accept? If so, step forward; if not, don't brag, but stand down. For 18 years my husks have been unequalled. Don't be gulled by inexperienced shopkeepers; listen to what experts say:—"Cage Birds" says they are "far superior to the old husks." Feathered World says: "Undoubtedly, the new husks are very superior to the old." Again, Exchange and Mart says: "Those prepared by Mr. Harper are very superior to the old style, which often fall to pieces at the most critical time, with disastrous results for the nestlings. You had better order the improved form; even if it is a little dearer than the old-fashioned sort, it is cheaper in the long run." Fur and Feather tells its correspondents: "They have distinct advantages over the old sort." Poultry has said: "For Budgerigars we advise the use of the improved style of husks." Surely these are convincing testimonials.

Don't forget, you have the benefit of 18 years' practical breeding experience. I don't keep a shop; one quality only, the best. My "Improved Secure" husks are 4/6 dozen, smaller quantities 5d. each. Few Cockatoel nest boxes 1/6 each. Illustrated pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application.

The West of Scotland N. and B.F.C.M.B. and F.B.A held usual monthly meeting on June 5th, in Nelson's Hotel, Ingram-street, Glasgow. President C. Hnnter in tbe chair. It was agreed to have a First Feather Show on July 3rd, at 4 p.m. There will be classes for Crests, Plainheads, Borders and Yorkshires. ## YORKSHIRE C.C. OF IRELAND.

Committee meeting held on 18th June, eight members being present. The statement of accounts for 1908 was checked by Messrs. J. J. Cloke and C. A. O'Reilly, and signed as correct. The Hon. Treasurer handed over receipts and vouchers for said statement to Mr. Cloke. It was proposed, seconded and carried, that the resignation of Mr. Rooney as hen. sec. be accepted. A resolution was proposed, seconded, and carried unanimously, that the motion accepting Mr. Powell's resignation be rescinded. The Hen. Sec. was instructed to write to the Fancy Press re advertisements for coming show, also to communicate with Mr. Mundell re jndging show. This concluded the business, and the meeting adjourned.—JOSEPH R. HYLAND, hon. sec. pro tem.

MORRISTON & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held at Forward Movement Minor Hall, on June 19th. A fair attendance of members was present. It is strange that this most flourishing society cannot get a greater master of fanciers, considering the strong financial position it is in today. The Society has been very fortunate in securing the above-named hall in which to hold their meetings. Mr. Stamp, the chairman, a very faithful member, presided, when it was decided to hold the first feather show on Jnly 24th next, the same to be open for members and non-members. It is hoped fanciers will give us all the encouragement possible by giving us a bumping entry. Also it was decided to invite fanciers to join the Society irrespective of radius, providing they pay np 4s., the annual fee, two clear months before the day of our annual show, November 18th next. We give a hearty invitation to all fanciers to join.—W. H. LEWIS, Sec.

MIDLAND COUNTIES Y.C.C.

A well-attended committee meeting was held on June 17th, when a deal of business was gone through, the following being the most important: The patronage of the M.C.Y.C.C. was granted to Wolverhampton C.B.S. (who take the Champion and Novice sections conditionally), West Bromwich C.B.S. (champion section only), City of Birmingham C.B.S. (champion and novice), Tamworth C.B.S. (champion section only). Will societies who are holding their shows away from the dates of the ahovenamed societies, and are desirous of securing our patronage, please communicate with me at once, so that I can place same before my committee at next meeting, which will be held on June 26th. It was decided to give a trophy to be won outright the first season, in addition to many other valuable specials. Will members who have not paid their subscriptions and fanciers wishing to join kindly note that subscriptions are due June 30th, if they are desirous of competing for specials offered? Mr. Bishop, of Worcester, has consented to stand as President for the ensuing year.—W. H. UZZELL, Hon. Sec., 76, Draytonroad, King's Heath, Birmingham.

SWINDON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in the Lecture Hall of the Mechanics' Institution, on Jnne 16th. There was a good attendance, the meeting taking the form of a members' exhibition of British birds. Mr. T. Poole kindly judged. GOLDFINCH: 1 and 2, Hopkins and Allsopp; 3, Dale; res., Ottery; vhc, Pinnell; hc and c, Smith. VARIETY: 1, Dale, Siskin; 2, Hopkins and Allsopp, Greenfinch; 3, res., Ottery, Reed Bunting and Redpoll; vhc, Pinnell, Chaffinch; hc, Pinnell, Redpoll; C. Still, Bramblefinch. It was decided to hold a first feather show at the next meeting on July 17th, at 7 p.m., when it is expected a goodly array of Canaries, Mules, Hybrids, British and Foreign Birds will be benched. A vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Poole for his kindness in judging, and he was asked to act in the same capacity at the next meeting. Mr. Poole suitably replied, accepting the invitation to judge, and giving his reasons for his placing of the awards. Mr. Hopkins was too modest to give a lecture on the treatment of Goldfinches, but by skilful questioning on the part of the chairman, Mr. W. Greenwood, the members gathered that he feeds his Goldfinches on Canary, hemp, rape, linseed, teazle, with a little inga and maw. He also gives young dandelion leaves, and later the dandelion heads before they open, and thistle heads. To produce the beautiful sheen on his birds he gives a bath every day. He likes a fairly roomy cage with a door in front on which to hang the bath, and another at the end through which he can run the birds into a show cage. Judging by his results, it would be perfectly safe for fanciers to adopt his methods.—W. DALE, hon. sec.

SCOTCH FANCY NATIONAL DERBY O.A.

Half-yearly meeting held in the Grand National Halls, Main-street, Gorbals, Glasgow, on June 14th. Mr. Wright, President, in the chair. The secretary reported that Mr. J. D. Brown, of East Kilbride, had generously sent a donation, and as the membership is down from previous years, it was decided to add the amount to the general funds. The society highly appreciate this generosity. The following gentlemen have been appointed as judges for the show on September 18th: Messrs. A. Nisbet (Galston), A. Paterson (Edinburgh), D. Brown (Edinburgh), A. Sommerville (Neilston). Members for 1909 not already reported: Messrs. W. Wilson (Motherwell), G. Fulton (Partick), G. Byers (Dumfries), J. Young (Bargeddie), J. Smith (Hewwood), W. Prentice (Yoker), J. A. Stewart (Cathcart), P. Craig (Glasgow), D. Black (Govan), R. H. D. Bernie (Renfrew), W. Craig (Govan), R. Prentice (Clydebank), W. Baillie (Old Cathcart), Becket, Glover, and Wright (Greenock), J. Hart (Paisley), J. Price (Barrhead), J. Muir, and R. McQuillam (Glasgow), A. Martin (Maryhill), C. Lavery and J. Lavery (Largan). There are over thirty gentlemen who have not accounted for the tickets sent them, although written to three times. Should this meet the eye of these gentlemen, they will greatly oblige by accounting to the nndersigned with the least possible delay, to enable the accounts to be closed. A little attention on the part of fanciers would save the officials much work. I heartily thank all who have so ably assisted to maintain the status of the Scotch Fancy Canary, which is the primary object of the society.—THOS. SMITH, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN B.B.M. AND F.B.C.

At a meeting held June 16th, in Lockhart's Cafe, 65, Grainger-street, Newcastle, business was commenced by enrolling three new members, viz., Messrs. J. C. Bell, W. O'Neill (Carlisle), and R. Bewick (Chester-le-Street). All applications were considered regarding club's patronage, and it was decided that the following societies receive same: Newcastle, Blaydon, South Shields, Gateshead, Wallsend, the list being left open to add to after receiving answers to correspondence. Table show resulted as follows: FOR. (7/6): 1, McKenzie, good pair of bronze-winged Mannikins, in lovely condition; 2, Petterson, nice pair of orange-cheek Waxbills, in grand order; 3, McKenzie, Zebrafinch, feather like wax, will improve in size. Mr. T. Robson jndged, giving every satisfaction, anyone desirous of becoming a member please communicate with me.—J. BERTRAM, Sec., 95, Gainsbro'-grove, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

KIRKSTALL AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

General meeting held June 19th, at the Abbey Inn, Mr. Oakley in the chair. There was a fairly good turn up of members. The chief business was the election of secretary in place of the one who resigned last month. Mr. Bracken and myself have taken np the office of joint secretaries, and all communications should be addressed to us. It was decided to hold our young bird show on Jnly 17th, birds to be staged at 8 p.m. Judge Mr. King, of Leeds. At the show Mr. Yelland's cnp will be competed for, and also a set of carvers given by our Vice-President. There are also several other good specials. The business then terminated, but it was some time before we left, as there was the usual discussion on the breeding season difficulties, etc. Altogether, this was a very enjoyable meeting, and we are looking forward to better. We give a hearty invitation to any fanciers in the district to join us. —HORNBY and BRACKEN, Hon. Secs., 17, Noster-street, Beeston.

HAMILTON (Cadzow Oaks) O.S.

Meeting held in the Cloak Room, Town Hall, on June 19th, Mr. W. Haddow, President, in the chair. It was decided to leave the membership open nntil next meeting, July 3rd, the object being to give those fanciers who intend to exhibit at our members' show on December 25th, and who may have overlooked the matter, an opportunity of joining and so becoming eligible to exhibit. Annual subscription 2s. 6d. It should be borne in mind that all intending exhibitors must be paid-up members on that date. We are endeavouring to increase our membership to 50 at least, and have great hopes of succeeding. The following new members were proposed and accepted, Messrs. J. Roulston, A. Roulston, J. Lamb, D. Harper, W. Woods, T. Drysdale, D. Hepburn, T. M'Vicar, R. Reid, and W. Page. The following gentlemen were appointed to jndge at our annual show on December 25th, for Norwich, Mr. Watson (Kilmarnock), for Borders, Mr. Mossie (Annbank), for British, etc., Mr. Raine (Glasgow). It was decided to hold a table show for young birds on July 3rd, our next meeting night, in Lesser Town Hall. Norwich 3 classes, Borders 4, Mnle or Hybrid 1, A.O.V. Canary 1. Jndges, Messrs. T. Morrison (Burnbank), and W. Brownlie (Hamilton). It was proposed to have a ramble to Calderwood on July 31st, if a permit can he obtained.—A. CANT, Hon. Sec.

CITY AND COUNTY OF PERTH O.S.

Monthly meeting held in City Cafe. The classification for open show on October 23rd was gone into and settled as follows:—Scotch Fancy, 10 classes; Crests, etc., 9 classes; Norwich Plainheads, 14 classes; Border Fancy, 9 classes; British and Mules, 10 classes; and Foreign birds, 8 classes; 55 classes in all, with 6 judges. Members reported breeding results from first, and in some cases, second rounds. Mr. Borrie has 20 young Norwich, some of them toppers; Mr. Wylie 25 Norwich, bred from the best blood in Scotland; Mr. Brown several young Mules, doing well; Mr. McDonald, only 3 young Crests, bnt shaping well; Mr. Blythe, 14 young Crests, and is hopeful of some of them; Mr. Gilbert Malloch, 14 young Norwich, some of them of his winning clear yellow cock bird, and which are looking well; Mr. Forrest, 17 young Norwich (and he expects some of them to come to the front this season); Mr. Lundie, 3 young Borders; Mr. Sharp, 4 Borders and 5 Scotch Fanciers; Mr. Dougall, several Norwich and some good Greenie Mules; Mr. Cochrane, a few Borders and Crests. Mr. R. F. Duncan, one of our best members, has had his room completely emptied through septic fever, over 25 birds, and the members expressed their sympathy with him in his trouble. Country members had no good reports, Mr. W. C. Smith (Strourar) having few young and lots of trouble with his first round. For myself, I am doing nothing, having lost my best cock-bird before his partner had laid. Then the removal of my birds has settled them for this season, I am afraid. Next meeting was settled to be a table show of nest feather birds, on 28th June; entry 3d. per bird. Two new members were proposed and accepted, after which the meeting closed.—JAMES KERR, hon. sec.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Under the White Rose.

THE principal item of interest last week-end was, of course, the First Feather Show at Great Horton, and the affair must be voted a success, a fairly large entry being obtained, and the show during the afternoon being fairly well patronised. The Ticked Yellow winner was the bird to receive most attention, and was conceded to be a good one, as was also the Cinnamon-Marked Yellow winner, while the winning Clear Yellow found many adherents. The winners in the respective classes were, in fact, all good ones.

C.M.Y.C.C. committee meeting was held in conjunction with the show, for enrolling new members and arranging trophies for next season's competition. The first item was a big one; in fact the secretaries could not count the new members, they have so many names down, but they say somewhere between 70 and 80. It took Mr. Towers about two hours to write receipts ont for subscriptions, etc. The club expects to have fully 100 new members before the beginning of August. Next the trophies were allotted, and it will be seen from the secretaries' report that they are numerous and valuable. The novices have a good display, and they receive (in addition to those allocated on Saturday last), a 15s. gold medal presented by Messrs. Sutcliffe and Son.

THE National Green Marked Y.C.C. is progressing very favourably for a fledgling. The secretary informed me at Gt. Horton Show that he had booked 62 members up to date, and that he had a few more promises—waiting to see what they breed, I expect, before joining.

SHIPLEY members had a pleasant day's outing on Sunday last, a party of eighteen leaving Shipley by the 10.15 a.m. train en route for Ben-Rhydding. Then over the stepping stones across the wharfe, via fields and woods to Askwith, where dinner (and a real good one, they say) was taken. Afterwards the party proceeded to Otley. They were accompanied by Messrs. Thornton and Thomas (of Otley), during part of the day, the latter gentleman explaining much of the country and country-life to the townsmen.

SOME BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1909 SEASON.

Notes on the results of the present breeding season, or of any interesting happenings, are invited from the secretaries of societies and others, and must be accompanied by the sender's name and address in every case.

The majority of fanciers round here are only having poor results this breeding season.—W. PINCHIN (Marske-by-the-Sea).

Houghton-le-Spring C.B.S.

Some of our members are, unfortunately, doing badly. Mr. R. Wood heads the list with 27 young; Mr. Robt. Dixon comes next with 25; Mr. Peter Passmore 23, Mr. G. Green 22, Mr. M. Dixon 22, Mr. A. Widowfield 12, Mr. D. Hann 12, Mr. G. Gowland 12, Mr. J. Stable 10, Mr. A. Leich 7, Mr. J. Allan 8, Mr. T. Davison 8, Mr. Trowery 3, Mr. H. Cross 4, Linnet Mules (one nearly clear). There were a few whose results I did not get, and as Hetton-le-Hole and Houghton le Spring Societies are combined in their first feather shows, we hope to have a good show at both places.—D. HANN, assistant secretary.

Kirkstall and District C.B.C.

On the whole our members are doing fairly well. Mr. Bracken has 17 young from 3 hens. Mr. Hutton is doing well, as is also our worthy chairman, Mr. Chew. Two of our members have bred one or two nests of Green and Linnet Mules, which by all accounts are coming champions (let us hope so). Mr. Oakley, I hear, has a few good Norwich on the sticks and several in the nest. As for myself I have 14 young, all from the second round, and several nests of eggs down. My first round were practically all clear, but I think I shall manage as well as last year.—W. HORNBY, hon. secretary.

Spen Valley F.A.

Our members are having a very good season so far, and some very promising young birds have been bred amongst them, both Cinnamon ticks and Green ticks. So we can expect to have some good shows and keen competition. Messrs. S. Grayshon and T. Bentley have about 70 each, Mr. Ben. Wood 50, Messrs. G. Grayshon, F. Allen, W. Bedforth, Hadwin, and A. Fawcett, all about 40 each; Messrs. Gill and Son, and Mr. S. Binns, 27 each. Personally I have never had so many young hatch out from the same number of hens. Most have laid 6 each. Others of our members have been the same.—FRED ALLEN, hon. secretary.

Illustrated Ideas

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

A Brush for Cleaning Out Breeding Cages.

Sent by B. Wharton, 31, Parrett Street, Longsight, Manchester.

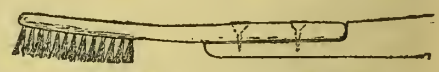
The enclosed is a sketch of brush for cleaning eages out, and which I think will be of some advantage to your readers. To make it, get a tooth brush, such as are sold at the penny bazaars, and bore two small holes in the handle. Then take a long piece of wood, about ½in. square, and round the corners off.



A Brush for Cage-Cleaning.

Cnt and shape it to take the handle of the brush at one end, fastened with two small screws through the holes made. It may be made of any length, to suit the width of one's cages. I have used these brushes for over two years, and find that one brush will last about four months (after cleaning 20 cages out each week). It is much better than a scraper, especially for breeding cages, when your birds are sitting.—B. WHARTON.

Combined Perch and Holder for Green Food, Berries, etc.

Sent by H. Terrett, 17, Wheatstone Road, Westbourne Park, W.

The illustration shows a useful holder for green food, grass, or a bunch of berries, etc., or for growing rape or other seed in. It consists of a jam-pot, with a perch attachment at top. The latter can be made out of a cornice pole ring, with two pieces of 14-gauge wire twisted round the neck of the jar, and fixed to the ring in the manner shown in the illustration. Or, failing a cornice-pole ring, the perch can be contrived out of ordinary wood perch material, if the ends are cnt (halved) and screwed together, as seen at the left-hand side of the drawing. Seeds may be sown in small flower-pots, and when up to a length of two inches, the pot can be put in the holder, and the whole be stood in the cage or aviary, where it makes quite an ornament; or it can be hung up.—H. TERRETT.

The Shows.

HARTLEPOOLS C.B.S.

The first of this year's series of nest feather shows was held in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms on June 16th. Mr. Ben Evans judged, and in responding to a vote of thanks for his services, remarked how pleased he was to see the great improvement made in regard to the quality and style of the stock shewn, especially was this applicable to the Yorkshire section.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

The first of our young bird shows for the season was held on June 15th, at headquarters, Swan and Peacock Hotel. The entries numbered 30, and some nice quality birds were staged. Mr. Willoughby put down a nice level team, and captured the special for best bird in show, with a grand feathered marked buff, of capital shape. In the clear class Mr. Garfield took first with a charming yellow of much promise. The hon. sec., J. Gibbons, had everything nicely arranged, and Mr. Crundell judged, giving the members every satisfaction.

CREWE O.S.

Annual Young Bird Show held in the ante-room, Co-operative Hall, on June 12th. The entries hardly came up to the average, but both quality and type were well represented in the different varieties. The Norwich classes were rather disappointing. Mr. J. C. Heaton, who put a grand team of birds down, was the only exhibitor in these classes. In the Yorkshire classes, however, competition was very keen. Borders also came up well. British were not so strong as we have seen them, but the Bullie staged by Mr. F. S. Cooper, and the Bramble of Mr. S. Potts, were grand specimens. Mr. T. L. Hancocks, the obliging and energetic secretary, to whom great credit is due, carried out the arrangements in a very able manner. Mr. F. Bate, Stoke-on-Trent, placed the cards and gave every satisfaction.

WATERLOO PROGRESSIVE C.B.S.

Annual nest feather show, held on June 19th, in the Oxford Hall, Waterloo, near Liverpool. Owing to a sad bereavement Mr. Houlton was not able to judge, Mr. Hadwin officiating in his stead. Owing to the poor season experienced by most fanciers, and the early date of the show, there was not a big entry, although two of the members had got into the neighbourhood of 100 each. Mr. Hunt makes a really admirable secretary.

BARTON C. AND B.B.S.

A most successful nest feather show, and also of British birds was held in the large club room at the Red Lion Inn, on June 19th. Mr. J. Calam, of Hull, judged, and gave every satisfaction. After the judging two special prizes were given for two best birds in show. 1, G. T. Beach, for clear Buff York.; 2, O. Pettit, for dark Goldfinch and Canary Mule.

YORK C.S.

At headquarters, All Saints' Schoolroom, North-st., a successful show of young birds was held. In the three classes provided 30 birds were staged. This was good for the time of year, seeing most of the members have had a very bad breeding season, owing to the cold nights and changeable weather. During judging the usual monthly business was gone through, and three new members joined. One of these is a lady, and it is hoped there will be more. Mr. T. Wright judged and gave general satisfaction.

DEWSBURY O.F.S.

First Feather Show, held at the Little Saddle Inn, on June 19th, when a fair number of young birds were staged, considering the indifferent breeding season some of our members have been having; but we hope to have a still larger number at our next show, to be held July 17th, when Mr. S. Wilcock (Eccleshill) will judge. Visitors pronounced the showroom one of the finest. Mr. Bird won special for most points throughout show. Messrs. J. Marton and B. Cook tie for second most points.

A curious nest of a Blue Tit is to be seen at Rock Ferry. Two ten-inch tree pots stand empty, one inside the other, leaving a space of about two and a half inches between the two. A sample of "Dryko" food for insectivorous birds reaches us from Mr. B. Hollins (9, George Street, Hull), whose invention it is. This requires no moistening, thus effecting considerable saving of time, while it will not turn sour, and Mr. Hollins states that he uses it very successfully with Nightingales, Thrushes, Larks, and all small softbills, likewise rare foreign birds.

I think it would be a good thing to hear more of fanciers' failures, writes Miss C. Bandock (S. Hackney). It would put more courage into heginners; at least, I think so. I have felt discouraged often, hut I don't think the following result is bad: 4 hirds from 5 eggs, and the first season for hirds and myself. All is owing to "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which I cousider invaluahle.

OBITUARY.

It is with deep regret that we hear of the loss sustained by that well-known judge, Mr. Chas. Houlton (St. Helens), whose mother departed this life on June 17th last. We tender Mr. Houlton our heartfelt sympathy; and the sympathies of the Fancy will go out to him in his hour of affliction. Mr. Houlton writes:—"I don't know how to tell you how my dear old dad and my sister feel this loss, to say nothing of myself. A hetter mother never more faithfully and lovingly looked to and cared for her family and household. The four of us have heen together half a century and over. My parents enjoyed the happiness of their married state for a period of 55 years. My sister, who has been a confirmed invalid during the last 17 years, is in an exceedingly weak state through the hlow."

The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries desire us to warn all bee-keepers that an outbreak of disease believed to be identical with the Isle of Wight Bee Disease, has occurred in several hives in Buckinghamshire. This disease which has destroyed almost all the hees in the island from which it takes its name, is due to a bacillus closely resembling the bacillus of plague, and no remedy for it is known. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that bee-keepers should take every precaution to prevent the disease spreading, and they are strongly advised to keep a careful watch for any signs of its appearance. A full description of the disease was published in the journal of the Board of Agriculture for February, 1909, and hee-keepers who find symptoms of disease corresponding to the description there given should communicate with the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries, 4, Whitehall Place, London, S.W.

Welsh Cage Bird Club.

The Welsh Cage Bird Club has had a highly successful season financially, a cash halance in hand of 19s. 10d. at the end of the 1907-8 season, having grown to a sum of £6 4s. 4d. at the end of last season. In addition the club has three cups, valuc £4 10s., as assets, The club show was a gratifying success. Last season's cup winners were Messrs. G. Harber (Leech Challenge), Lewis and Dymond (Leech Challenge), G. Gregory (D. Jones' Challenge), G. T. Jones (Sandiford's). Shows requiring the club's patronage must apply on or hefore July 24th. The secretary is Mr. G. T. Jones, Arfon House, Castle Street, Brecon.

The result of the hallot for the election of auditors, committee, and judges is as follows: Two AUDITORS: Messrs. E. J. Bevan (Tredegar), 13 votes and A. E. Brown (Merthyr Tydfil), 10 votes, the next on the list being Mr. T. Oriel (Abertillery), with 5 votes; EIGHT COMMITTEEMEN: Messrs. G. L. Harber (Merthyr Tydfil) 17, J. Pritchard (Mountain Ash) 16, B. Davies (Merthyr Tydfil) 16, T. L. Castree (Mountain Ash) 13, F. P. Dymond (Cardiff) 9, H. W. Sheldon (Llandudno) 9, D. Jenkins (Swansea) 9, and L. Lewis (Brecon) 8, the next on the list heing Mr. D. Jones, 7 votes; SIX JUDGES: Messrs. T. L. Castree 16, D. H. Tedstone (Brecon) 16, J. Pritchard 15, G. L. Harber 14, T. H. Melhuish (Cardiff) 13, and G. T. Jones (Brecon) 6, the next on the list heing Mr. H. W. Sheldon, with 5 votes. There were 18 voting papers sent in, one of which had to be disqualified through non-compliance with the rules.

"Bird Notes" for June sustains the reputation of this journal of the Foreign Bird Club for containing articles hy well-known foreign bird experts, and illustrations exquisitely produced from photographs." The Rufous Tinamou" is the subject of an article from the pen of Mr. W. E. Teschemaker, B.A., who gives an interesting account of four large, tame Tinamous, which were sent to him from the Argentine. A further account is given of the Yellow-winged Sugar Bird, hy Mr. Tinniswood Miller, F.Z.S., Mr. Wesley T. Page, writes on "The Bullfinch" He has had practical experience with the species, and none will deny him the privilege of this excursion into a new field for once. The same writer also contributes "Notes from the Zoo," of which the new flights provided for Birds of Paradise form the principal theme.

From Mr. J. Sandiford, the well-known fanciers' specialist, of North Road, Preston, we have received a handsomely illustrated catalogue of cages (both hreeding, stock, and show), and all kinds of up-to-date bird-room appliances, foods, seeds, etc. The quality is the hest, and the prices very favourable to huyers; readers should send for a copy and judge of this for themselves. Mr. Sandiford also sends us samples of his world-renowned colour-foods, of which he states he has had sales greater than ever this season, with orders for large quantities from many leading exhihitors. Inspection of the noted "Royal Red Feed" shows it to be of really astonishing colour, extremely deep, yet hright, and as may be expected from so experienced a firm, it is ground to just the right degree of fineness, and retains just the right amount of oil. Mr. Sandiford's hot Natal is also of remarkahle colour for a "warm" pepper, and will no doubt he in great demand amongst those who favour its use. Readers interested in colour-feeding should make a point of seeing samples of Mr. Sandiford's peppers.

Yorkshire C.C. of Ireland.

The secretaryship of the Y.C.C. of Ireland has heen resigned by Mr. J. P. Rooney, and that gentleman has favoured us with a lengthy letter concerning the affairs of the club, which, however, we have been unable to publish in this issue.

The Freedom of the House.

I have had a Jackdaw for four years, writes "J.B.," of Bristol, to a contemporary, and although at first I kept it in a cage, I now let it out into the garden. It comes all over the house with me, but goes away at night, returning for its meals.

Norwich Plainhead Club.

All clubs desirous of having the patronage of the above society must apply to me on or before Saturday, July 3rd, as the committee meet on that day, and give me full particulars as to classification, judge, etc. The judge must he one of the club's judges. I should also he glad to hear from those members to whom I have written, and who have not replied.—JNO. HOPKINS, hon. secretary.

Birds in a Greenhouse.

My young brother and I have a number of birds which were sold to us in cages, but which mother let loose in the greenhouse which opens into a room, writes Miss M. Schultess Young (Bedford Park, W.), to a contemporary. They sing all day long and fly ahout as they like. A Lark, which we were told must he kept in its little cage or it would not sing, began singing at once; and the Linnet that we bought for 4d. from a hird shop is always singing, too. A Tiger-Finch, which never sang before, now sings for hours every day. A young Canary we hatched in January helped its father and mother to build another nest in the cork, and helps them, too, to feed the young birds. It was very funny to see it try to do so at first.

YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

Will members please notify me of any change of address, and anyone desirous of becoming a member of the club send in their name and address for inclusion in the club's handhook? On behalf of the committee I heg to thank the following for their generous support, viz., Mr. T. Sandiford (cup value 5 guineas), Mr. W. Cruise (special value 1 guinea), and Messrs. Halliday and Chittenden (cash 5s.). Since my last I have received applications for the club's patronage from the following societies:—City of Wakefield, Laisterdyke, Halifax, Manningham, Scottish National, Rochdale. Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Rochdale Good Intent.—JOHN GREAVES, secretary.

The Breeding & Management of the Green Canary.

By S. HADWIN.

A lecture given before the Sale O.S. on April 26th.

I have very pleasant recollections of my previous visit to your Society and the welcome you so kindly gave me, and I am sure you will accord me on this occasion the same kindly attention. The subject we have before us—"The Breeding and Management of the Green Canary"—is an important one. It is important in that the Green Canary has made such rapid strides as a show specimen in recent years that it has come to be looked upon as one of the premier varieties. It is not only a beautiful variety in itself, but its uses for crossing with other varieties for colour-purposes, are now almost universally recognised.

Early Stages of Its History.

It is not necessary at this time to go into the history of this variety; to do so would only be to tell a thrice-told tale. Suffice it to say that the Yorkshire Green has been on the show bench for something like fifty years. The Norwich Green is of a much more recent date. There was a time when it was practically impossible to breed this variety.

Some fourteen years ago a certain Liverpool fancier had a team of fourteen pairs to commence the breeding season with, and a bonny lot they were. At the end of the season he had one bird left—not a youngster; and with this one exception not an old one was left. Other fanciers had similar, if less crushing experiences. And it looked as if the Norwich Green had definitely decided on its own extinction. But some ten years ago this state of things began to alter, and fanciers began to pair together their most heavily variegated Norwich. The Green Crestbred was also requisitioned, and so on. Thus, with slow and sure steps, the present-day Norwich Greens have been built up; and built up in such numbers that they threaten the supremacy of the Yorkshire Greens, especially in Liverpool and Cheshire. It is difficult to understand why this variety does not spread itself out more, but perhaps this will be remedied before long.

The Border Fancy Green is of a more recent date than either of the other varieties put together. The reason for this is not far to seek.

They are a variety thoroughly decentralized. They are spread all over the country and have made friends everywhere, and are certainly come to stay. I am quite sure if the number of Yorkshire and Norwich Greens were spread out more, and we could get rid of the present localizing tendencies, they would very much improve their position. One has only to look round to see the bad effect on any variety when its outlook is restricted.

Before going into the question of breeding, it is necessary that we first get clearly into our minds what we want to breed for, and for this purpose a short study of the standards of the three varieties will be of advantage.

The Question of Colour.

The first thing we meet with is colour. And the particular question we have to ask ourselves is: What colour is it we want? The answer I give to this is:—Don't be too particular about a certain shade of colour; but do be particular that you get depth of colour. The standard says "grass green," and there is no doubt that fresh young grass, especially in a shady place, has a very nice, desirable colour; but it has not the permanency about it which would fix the idea of that colour in the novice's mind, as it changes frequently with the seasons; as it ripens, too, it shows a lot of yellow. This, by-the-bye, gives a fair idea of the yellow greens, but it does not represent the rich depth of colour we see in a well-coloured buff. I, personally, prefer the rich dark olive of the evergreens; there is more permanency here, and this gives one a better idea of depth.

Whilst on this question of colour, it may not be waste of time to spend a few moments in considering which variety carries the most colour, and the reason for it. Premier place from a colour point of view is held by the Border Fancy, and the reason here is not far to seek. The Borders have years of superlative quality behind them; it has never been necessary to cross them with large birds for size. Consequently the quality has always been maintained, and it is this quality, this compactness of feather, which gives the Border such a smooth polished appearance, showing up the colour to such perfection.

The Yorkshire Green comes next. Years ago when this variety was bred practically for colour only, there is no doubt it was a much better coloured bird than it is today. When the old Green club was formed type was rather rushed into, with the consequent loss of colour. It is a pity type was not more slowly introduced, and the old rich colour kept more to the front. It is unfortunate that judges nowadays pay too much attention to type at the expense of colour; and so long as this is the case, colour will be neglected, it being much easier to breed a good typed bird than a good typed and a well-coloured bird. So long as breeders are satisfied with this state of things so long will it continue; but once breeders say (and determine) that they will have nothing but the best, the green will improve; and while fanciers are satisfied with merely winning prizes and don't care a rap about colour so long as the birds win, for so long will colour be a negligible quantity.

The Norwich Green comes last in the colour scheme, principally on account of the fact that it has had to be built up very largely from birds having practically no colour history. But there are evidences that the Norwich Green will eventually beat the Yorkshires in colour. This is largely due to the fact that the Norwich lend themselves to double-buffing, and neither of the other varieties does.

I have spent rather a long time in connection with this question of colour, but it is the most important matter on the standard, accounting as it does for 35 out of the 100 points allotted to the birds. Type and quality are the remaining outstanding features, but as they are the same as the other varieties of Yorkshire, Norwich, and Borders, it is not necessary to deal particularly with them at this stage.

Evidences of Colour.

It is quite possible to have birds with a large amount of colour in them, and yet this colour does not appear on the surface. It is latent, but it is lying dormant. The best guide in selecting birds where colour is principally wanted is to make a point of seeing that the legs and feet are dark. Some shine to such an extent that they look as if they were blackleaded. The quill of the feather which forms the pencilling or markings, should also be as black and shiny as possible. When these evidences of colour exist, the novice may be sure there is plenty of colour about.

A good deal has been said and written from time to time about trying to breed Greens without pencillings. Those who advocate this are very superficial observers. Anyone who wishes to prove for himself has only to examine a bird with jet black pencillings and one showing a brownish colour, to see for himself what a wonderful difference there is in the body or ground colour of the birds. It will be seen at once that the dark pencillings carry richness and depth, whilst the brown carry only a surface colour. The greatest proof, to my mind, that pencillings largely control colour, is the fact that buffs have pencillings very much broader and heavier than do yellows, and they carry the pencillings along the waist to a large extent, a thing which yellows very rarely do; and looked at from the point of view of beauty, a good pencilled bird is a joy for ever to the man who loves a really excellent bird without reference to the one whose cage it is in.

The Use of Cinnamon Blood.

We will now examine for a moment the question of Cinnamon blood and its use for colour purposes when crossed with the Green. This I know is a very controversial subject. It is also a very important one. I will say straight out that Cinnamon blood is bad for colour in Greens, except in an indirect way. Cinnamon blood supplies a beautifully fine quality of feather, and this fine quality of feather is capable of carrying a soft rich tone of colour, far superior to that seen on coarse feathers. So that, indirectly, the use of Cinnamon blood is good for colour. I will explain later how this good can be utilized.

The bad points are very numerous. One has only to examine the quills of the Cinnamon feather to note at once that they contain a pinkish pigment, and that the feet and beak are pink or flesh-coloured. I have previously pointed out that the quills, feet, and beak, in Greens cannot be too dark, and that it is this rich darkness that controls colour. Hence, the bad effect this Cinnamon blood has on green colour. Incidentally, too, I may mention that green blood has the same bad effect on Cinnamon colour.

The first bad effects noticed are light legs and beak, thus taking away two of the Green's best points. Later, when the stock gets more or less of the Cinnamon blood in it, we notice a general blurring, a smokiness, and an absence of clearness in the markings. When it is used to excess, a very nasty mousey greyness is observed, and when this stage is reached, green colour is practically non-existent.

Double-yellowing and Double-buffing.

Two other factors in connection with colour are double-yellowing and double-buffing. Double-yellowing is a bad factor in every sense of the word. It thins the feathers and makes them very brittle; consequently, there is not that boxeyness about the appearance of the bird with which alone it is possible to get a really good colour. Double-yellowing also gives the feathers an open, scanty, washed-out appearance. One often hears the remark "Oh, but it's a Yellow," implying by this that yellows are so much better in colour than buffs. This is a great mistake.

Double-buffing has a great deal to do with colour. The buff is in itself the predominant partner in this colour scheme. Hence the breeding from two buffs with their combined softness of texture of feather, deepens colour to a marvellous extent. The objections to double-buffing are, in the case of the Yorkshire Greens, thickening and shortening the feather, especially in the flights and tail; this, of course, is to be avoided in all Yorkshires. With Borders the objection is similar so far as thickening is concerned, and I would only advise its use where extra colour is required in the buff stock birds, i.e., birds required for crossing with scantily feathered yellows.

In the Norwich Green, double-buffing is of great advantage. It shortens the flights and tail, thickens the feather, giving them a much greater covering power; consequently, a cobbier alround specimen is produced. The objection to double-buffing is that no yellows are produced from this cross. But we may take it that the ideal stock cock bird is double-buff bred and paired to a yellow hen. Yellows and buffs will be produced of a colour far superior to those obtained from the ordinary style of pairing. (Yellow and buff or the reverse). (To be continued.)

Some Breeding Season Troubles Considered.

A Lecture before the Halifax O.S.

The Discussion.

The lecture gave rise to a number of interesting questions. Appended are a few of the more useful ones:—

What is Mr. Wilson's opinion as to the value of the niger seed as a preventative of egg-binding?—Ans.: I have used niger, or inga seed as it is sometimes known, over a long period of years (perhaps twenty) in moderation, and, for experimental purposes, to excess; and I never yet found that I had any less cases of this trouble through its use. I had cases of the sort before using it, and certainly not less of them since I used this seed. On the other hand, I found that if not used discreetly it has a most injurious effect on the whole internal viscera of the birds, but particularly on the liver. I much prefer giving a bit of mutton suet for them to peck at during conditioning time, and for a week after pairing. Then if I note a bird that is rather of a sluggish nature, I give it treacle water the colour of ale, to drink the day before I think it is going to lay.

An old breeder here gave testimony that he lost a lot of birds rather inexplicably many years ago, so he sent one up to a Fancy Press specialist for a post-mortem. The reply came that his birds had septic fever; so, of course, he at once resigned himself to the probable loss of all his stock. He took four dead birds to a local "vet.," who made a careful post-mortem, and reported that the livers of all four birds were practically destroyed. He promptly stopped niger seed, had no more deaths, and his whole stock gradually recovered. Other members said they believed the seed was of great service if used in moderation.

What is the lecturer's attitude towards maw seed?—I think it is a most valuable seed, that has many virtues all the year round. I don't mix it in egg food save in cases where the hen has lost a lot of strength through too close sitting, and requires something to soothe, tempt and tone her up, and help to induce her to take up her feeding duties with greater zest. I like a large proportion of it in in my mixed seed. Also I give plenty of it on milksop to soothe irritated bowels.

Does Mr. Wilson think hemp seed of use during the breeding season?—Emphatically, yes! During all my experience I have given an unlimited supply of this seed, crushed ready for the birds to feed with, and can safely say it has always been one of my best servants. I do not use it after the young are doing for themselves, as I have known youngsters to have inflammation of the bowels, which I have ascribed to their eating husks either accidentally or innocently. Neither do I put a great lot of it in my mixed seed, as it has a tendency to fatten old birds, a thing difficult to do with young, growing nestlings.

What kind of green food does the lecturer think best?—I have found dandelion, if carefully selected, very good, but I never want the large, strong variety, nor yet that which has a deeply serrated leaf. Watercress, too, is excellent, but I swear by lettuce. Many are the indifferent hens that I have coaxed to a better execution of their duty by a plentiful supply of tender young lettuce.

A member here related how last year he sowed some lettuce in a greenhouse and gave it to his birds, with the result that it gave them acute diarrhœa, or colic. This statement drew the prompt suggestion from Mr. W. that the speaker omitted to wash the stuff first, which he as promptly admitted.

How does the lecturer account for a hen laying an egg with a baked appearance?—It was probably a hen overfat, or of sluggish habit, that ought to have laid earlier. This remark elicited the rejoinder that the bird laid a second egg the same day, and a third on the following day.

Does Mr. Wilson think that using cod-liver oil tends to produce long feather?—No; in the very nature of things that is impossible. But it certainly tends to slackness of feather if used too freely, thus making the bird look as though that was the case.

What is the best thing to use in the nest to help to keep red-mite down?—A good insect powder, dredged in the nest when setting the hen, and also freely sprinkled between nest-pan and nest-lining. Here a member stated he had found that putting Stockholm tar in the nest pan was effectual; whilst another promptly rejoined that he had used it to little or no effect. The general concensus of opinion ruled in favour of the powder.

The Skylark: How I Keep it in Health and Song.

By THOMAS HANDLEY.

I think the Skylark is the king of British song-birds, and I feel sure there are a good many of the readers of CAGE BIRDS who will hold it so with me. I have read of instances where people have given this title to the Nightingale, but while I have heard both birds singing, I must say the Skylark is, to my mind, more deserving of the title. It is the surroundings that make the melody of the Nightingale sound so sweet; but I will leave it to others to judge for themselves. I hope, however, to see some little comment on this point. I am sorry to say there are above 90 per cent. of bird fanciers who have never heard a Nightingale sing, and I feel sure that at the speed with which Larks are being slaughtered to satisfy the palates of our so-called society, it will be a rare thing in time to hear a Lark sing. But I hope the day is not far distant when they will receive a little more protection from the guns of the so-called sportsmen. They can shoot them down in hundreds in the winter when the birds cannot get food inland, and so have to go in thousands to the coast, there to meet their dooms.

An Easily-kept Species.

There is no bird to equal a Lark as a house bird, providing it receives proper attention. Any one who wants to keep these birds and keep them up to perfection, can do so by observing the following instructions.

When purchasing a wild bird always select one that is not frightened—one that seems homely and not wild; in other words, a steady bird. Then you can rely upon your having a singer. If you have Larks that fly about the cage, and jump a great deal, it is a waste of good food to give it them. Turn them out, as they may make good singers when at liberty, but not when in cages. After you have got one or two steady birds you may be sure of plenty of music. During the winter it is mostly gas-light singing one hears. You can sit and hear as much music as you care for, providing they are kept as they ought to be; but when the days grow longer they gradually change to giving you daylight singing.

How to Feed Larks.

This is how I feed my birds for singing. I take 2lbs. pea-meal, ½lb. oat meal, ½lb. ground rice. These I mix altogether. Then I get a quarter leaf lard or mutton suet. These I put in an oven till they are melted. I pour it over the meal and rub well in with my hands. Then I break one fresh egg to every pound in a basin with honey or sugar, and beat it like a custard. Then I pour over the meal and rub well in. I then cook in a slow but hot oven. Do not burn it, but keep turning it over till it is a nice rich brown. Then put on top shelf to dry off.

When it is dry grind it out and then take the quantity you require for feeding. Add your seeds to it, and by doing this you will find out the different palates of your birds. Some may like hemp, others rape, others maw, and others dandelion. When you find this out it is a saving for you, and the birds, too, get that which they like best. Always spray the birds once a week, and always in the morning, as birds washed in the evening cannot take the same pains with their toilet as they can when washed early. Clean the cages also. Then run the birds into clean sand, and put them where they can "switter" the sand to their hearts' delight, as they do like to see it fly around. There is the missus who does not like to see this, but you must always have something ready for her, and she will forget until all is over what you have been doing.

The Song of the Skylark.

The bird in its wild state is worth attention without his song. You may watch him flicker from field to field in search of a mate. I might mention here that, judging from hand-reared Larks, there are from 60 to 70 per cent. of cocks to 30 or 40 per cent. hens. When the male wishes to claim, he flies about until he finds a mate. Then he begins to sing the best of his singing, the hen running about him, or very often flying at him. Then he will rise and pour out his love song. But that is not the best. Then he descends and flies to where the female is. Then you will hear him sing the sweetest singing it is possible for man to hear. It is vigorous singing. And it is then the female will call if she has taken to the male. On the other hand, they may commence to fight, and the male bird will afterwards appeal with his sweet song. Then, if paired, they commence to claim the bit of ground they intend to build upon, and soon commence to build. It is then you can see these small birds in their true colours.

Let any fancier who has a bird which will sing in a field while in a cage, take it and leave the cage uncovered on the grass, and he will see the gamest song birds living, both male and female. I have taken a bird of my own into a field, and as soon as it has commenced to sing I have seen other Larks, both male and female, at the cage.

Caging and Catching.

I always use a fine netted cage—1in. mesh. The cages are 1ft. long, 7½ins. high, and 7ins. broad. I put four wires, 72ins. long, one at each side the cage, and about 2½ins. from the cage; one end I fix in ground, the other about 5ins. from the ground. The wild birds which I wish to catch will face the cage-bird. Then they will strike like game cocks. The wild birds catch the wire, which is smeared with bird lime, and stay there until you take them off. The females are very often caught, but you can always tell a hen, if you have any other birds. A male bird is always longer cast than the female; also it is higher on the leg and longer in the spur. The ear feathers, too, cover almost as much again as in the case of hens. I have seen the ear feathers on the male birds meet on the backs of their heads. I advise amateur fanciers to purchase a hen and take special note of it; then to turn her out into the fields when pairing time comes.

The nest of the Skylark consists of dry grass. They lay from one to five eggs of a whitish grey colour, streaked and spotted with darker grey. The hens sit for from 14 to 15 days before hatching. Then they commence to feed the young. The hen gathers a few small insects close to home; then when the birds are four or five days old you can see both old birds carrying snails, grubs, beetles, etc. The beetles' wings are off. You can see the old birds rambling among hedge bottoms; they are then in search of spiders. A spider is the best medicine you can give a Lark; when all other things have failed, a spider will work wonders.

When the birds are moulting always clean the cage and put in a good supply of sand, with a small thimbleful of flowers of sulphur. Carry the birds from the room to one a little cooler, and then cover them up. Put plenty of shepherd's purse and chickweed around their cages, and do not move them again. But if the birds do not go into moult after a few days, give them two or three drops of sweet nitre, and this will do all that is wanted; but take care to keep them from all draughts. At all times you can give your birds green food, except in frosty weather, as frost has killed hundreds of birds in the house.

The Rearing of Young Birds.

To rear young birds, take them before they are full-fledged, as they are more easily got to gape than when about ready to run. Place them in an old hat until they begin to try and jump out. Then place them in close-wired cages with a cover over them. The birds will always come to one corner for food. When they are about four weeks old cage them off and run them in sand. Also use a bird-blower and blow water over them; it will then drop as fine as steam, but this will be found enough. You can but scarcely perceive young birds passing through the moult. They also eat their feathers if not taken out. Always keep a stick close at hand with which to play with them, as it keeps them from getting wild.

The food to feed young Larks on, and the best I ever used, is:—One tablespoonful of pea-meal, one thimbleful of maw seed. Tie these in a cloth and boil for one hour. Then add a slice of hard-boiled egg and a bit of potato (roasted or boiled), and make into a paste that you can roll in your fingers. Then place it on a stick, and as the birds gape for it it will break off into their mouths and will not dirty their feathers, as is the case with sloppy food. The birds will always then look clean and healthy. They will feed themselves at six weeks; but always play with them when they are about to feed themselves, as this is a most critical time. They will sometimes not feed from the tin, and their mouths go a nasty yellow colour, instead of being red. In that case get a drop of new milk and give them a few drops from the stick about every hour and in a couple of days you will find they are in the best of health. Never give a drink of water except what has been boiled—and then only when you are there, as they will over-indulge themselves if you don't watch them. When they have got used to it you can give them glasses regularly. It is this that kills most young birds. I never give my birds water until they are through the moult. You put food into them as soon as they begin to feed themselves, and then all your trouble is over.

Colour-Feeding and Moulting.

By H. E. Parrott.

A Lecture Delivered before the Wimbledon C.B.S. on June 7th.

Your secretary, Mr. Smith, has asked me to give you a few hints on colour-feeding and moulting, and I am very pleased to do so to the best of my ability. I must admit that I do not think it is possible for me to introduce anything new or original, but in the hope of helping or assisting any novice or beginner who may be present, I will endeavour to make my remarks as instructive and interesting as possible.

Breeding for Colour.

Before touching the question of colour feeding, I should like first of all to impress upon you the absolute necessity of breeding for colour, that is the introduction of dark or green blood into your stock, without which it is impossible to obtain that depth of colour which is so essential to stamp a specimen as perfection.

Taking my own breeding pairs, either the cock or the hen is ticked, marked, or variegated, or, if clear, bred from marked parents. By this means the youngsters are certain to possess that rich, bright, natural colour which is so useful in finishing them off into "red hot" specimens when the moulting and colour feeding period has expired. How frequently we hear fanciers say that they cannot understand why their birds are lacking in that deep glowing orange colour; but if you could only trace what they were bred from I am certain you would find the parents were clears and very pale in colour.

I should therefore like you to bear in mind how absolutely essential it is to introduce dark or green blood into your breeding rooms. Some may say that by so doing we shall get nearly all marked youngsters, but this is not so, providing they are properly paired. I have a heavily marked yellow hen which is paired to a clear buff cock that has produced clear youngsters from the first nest this season. I am of opinion that a marked hen paired to a clear cock will produce more clear youngsters than vice versa.

First Steps in Colour Feeding.

With regard to colour feeding, the first thing is to turn your birds into as large cages as practicable, and to place a piece of muslin over the window of the bird-room just sufficient to keep the sunlight out, but not to darken the room so as to make it impossible for the birds to move about freely, as at this period it is necessary that the birds should get as much exercise as possible, being out of condition, and to enable them to cast off their old coats and get their new ones replaced as quickly as possible.

The red pepper which is used for the purpose of colour feeding is, as you are no doubt aware, the fruit or pod of a vegetable which is grown in Spain. There are different qualities of pepper and colour feeds on the market, but I would advise you to procure the best obtainable. It would be unfair for me to recommend any special vendor, but there are, I think, doubtless more than one whose peppers may be used without any injurious effects upon the birds.

When commencing to feed, I give a small quantity of pure, tasteless pepper, mixed with egg food only sufficient to slightly colour the egg food, gradually increasing the quantity until I get it to the full strength.

In preparing the food, to every pound of pure, tasteless pepper I add one tablespoonful of hot Natal and one tablespoonful of olive oil. These blended well together in a basin completes the feed. The egg food I use when colour feeding consists of two hard-boiled eggs crumbled up with seven or eight large tea biscuits, to which is added a small quantity of sugar, all mixed well together. I frequently put a pinch of maw seed in this food, as I believe that maw seed is very beneficial, either where the old birds have youngsters or are heavy in the moult.

When colour feeding take care and not overdo it. It is far better to miss giving it one day entirely than to cram the birds with a large quantity of colour food day after day. It is much wiser to give each bird a good teaspoonful, and when this is cleared up, to let it partake of its seed, not forgetting linseed, the oil from which helps to produce a nice sheen on the new plumage of the bird.

During the Moult.

During the moulting season it is advisable to place a small quantity of sulphate of iron in the drinking water twice a week. This acts as a tonic, and also fixes the colour into the birds. No green food should be given during the moulting season to birds that are being colour fed, as the feed itself will be found to be sufficiently laxative. In the place of green food, I give dark nasturtium flowers during this period, and find that the birds relish this little tit-bit very much, and I do not think they are harmful if used judiciously, say, one flower per bird every day.

I usually start colour-feeding the youngsters at about seven or eight weeks old, so that they are well on to the feed when they commence to moult. It often happens that when youngsters have been running together in a flight that they get the tails damaged or broken. When this is the case, it will be found advantageous to pluck the tail feathers when the birds are half-way through the moult, and you will find that the new one will grow much better than the one that got injured or damaged. I do not think any advantage is gained by colour-feeding from the nest. If care and attention are given to the youngsters, and you commence colour-feeding them at seven weeks old, they will come out a better colour than those fed from the nest.

Is Colour-Feeding Injurious?

The next point I should like to deal with is whether colour-feeding is injurious or harmful to our feathered pets. I know there are a number of "anti-colour-feeding fanciers," but I must say that I have never experienced any undesirable effects from the process. In fact, I should think it benefits the bird. Let us look at one or two varieties that are shown as unfed, viz., Crests, Lancashires, Belgians, and Scotch fancies. Can anybody honestly say that either of these varieties are as hardy and strong as the Norwich Plainhead, Yorkshire, or Mule, which are now shown fed to perfection?

There are, I imagine, two reasons which will explain why colour feeding is so frequently alleged to be cruel and injurious—(1) time and trouble (2) expense.

I know there is a great deal of time and expense in bringing out a "red hot" specimen, but what a pleasure it is when perhaps at a certain show your own exhibit has just won a premier place through condition and colour. As an instance of how colour attracts the attention of visitors at a show, I may say that at the last Palace show I had a young Yorkshire cock bird entered in the Limit Class. He stood cardless, but was about the hottest fed bird in the class. A gentleman took such a fancy to the rich, deep colour that he claimed it to keep as a songster only. I merely give you this as an example of how colour-feeding increases the value of your stock, in addition to improving their appearance.

I thank you all for your kind attention, and if I have been of assistance to any of you here this evening I shall be very pleased. I hope you will all have a very successful moulting and colour-feeding season this year, and be able to produce some tip-top specimens like "balls of fire" ere the show season is with us once again.

At the close of the lecture questions were asked, and these were answered by Mr. Parrott. Appended are a few of them.

Mr. Rorke: Is it desirable to discontinue egg food to youngsters before placing them on to colour food?—Yes, the first round. They may be fed on seed only a few weeks, but the colour-feeding should be commenced at eight weeks. Mr. Rorke: Can a substitute be used in the place of egg food while colour-feeding?—I think it is advisable to stick to the old friend, egg and tea biscuit, reducing the quantity of egg, and adding more biscuit.

Mr. Whittome said he agreed as to the introduction of dark or green blood into the stock to obtain a good natural colour, and that the colour food should be used in moderation, not forced into the birds day after day right through the moult.

Birds Perish in a Furious Fire.

DISASTROUS EXPERIENCE OF A BROMLEY FANCIER.

A Fire broke out at Bromley (Kent) on June 21, which involved the premises of Mr. Dell, a well-known naturalist and fancier, and resulted in the loss by fire and otherwise of over 200 birds.

A disastrous fire, involving, among other live stock losses, the deaths of over a hundred birds, occurred on Monday afternoon last in the Old Market Square, Bromley, Kent. The premises of Mr. W. Dell, naturalist and seedsman, but for the efforts of Fireman Hunt, who played upon them incessantly with fire hose, would have been completely gutted. But if Mr. Dell was spared this catastrophe, he was not spared the misfortune of losing some two hundred or more birds, many of them being valued prize winners. The fire broke out in an adjoining granary, where, owing it is said to the dropping of a lighted match, some forty tons of hay and straw were quickly enveloped in flames. The wind soon whipped the fire into a fury, and the total damage done is estimated at £8,000. At the back of Mr. Dell's premises were two large aviaries in which he kept two hundred or more birds—British and Foreign and Canaries—together with others in cages. When the conflagration was noticed Mr. Dell's first thought was for his birds. He took a net out and succeeded in catching a few of them, but it was quite impossible for him to do more than this; in fact, to use his own words to CAGE BIRDS' representative, "it was a case of saving either myself or my birds." When he found it impossible to save them, Mr. Dell just managed to tear the wire netting down from the aviaries, hoping that the birds would take refuge in flight. Some did, and were seen the following morning in and about what was previously the garden; but the majority, it is feared, perished in the flames, which covered an area of considerably more than an acre, the birds being too scared to know how to escape. Next morn the dead birds were gathered together in a heap (over a hundred of them), and these included Greenfinches, Thrushes, Blackbirds, two prize Starlings, Goldfinches, Linnets, Yellowhammers, Reed Buntings, a Tree Sparrow, several Twites, six cock Chaffinches, three or four Bullfinches, a Siskin, a Ribbon Finch, an Orange-cheek Waxbill, and several Canaries. Altogether, out of about 250 birds, only about fifty were secured. Messrs. L. Harris and Co., of Wilson Street, London, E.C., valuers and assessors of fire losses, estimated the loss to Mr. Dell at between £500 and £600, but the whole of this, our representative was assured, is covered by insurance, the birds having been separately insured in the Union Fire Insurance Co.

Amongst the birds that were saved were Blackbirds, Thrushes, Larks, and a remarkably steady Nightingale. Also, Mr. Dell possesses, and was able to save, an excellent specimen of the Australian Cockatoo, known to almost everybody in the neighbourhood as a lovable pet, and a particularly fluent talker. Only about half an hour before the outbreak occurred, we were told, the birds in the No. 1 aviary particularly were perched high up along the front, and were singing "for all they were worth," so that they could be heard a mile and a half away; indeed, they had seldom sung so well before. Over and around the two aviaries grew some lilac trees which kept them cool and sweet, and in front of one of the aviaries was a large fish aquarium. The whole, surrounded by a grass floor, presented a "perfect picture," and yet half an hour sufficed to burn it all up—birds, fish, aviaries and everything.

Mr. Dell has lived in the Market Square for thirty years, and during the whole of that time he has kept birds. For more than 25 years he has been a successful dealer, breeder and exhibitor, and has won from 20 to 30 prizes at the Bromley shows. In all he has over 150 prize cards to his credit, besides having won a cup and gold medal at Bromley and other exhibitions, and which he showed us with characteristic pride. Asked if he had ever lost any birds at any previous time through accident or disease, Mr. Dell said he had never before had any misfortune whatever with his birds; in fact, he considered he was one of the most fortunate men in the cage-bird Fancy in these respects. Mr. Dell, in passing, referred to the eagerness with which all his Britishers looked forward to their daily feed of his "Nutritine."

Nothing daunted by his losses, Mr. Dell intends making a fresh start. "I wouldn't miss my birds on any account," he said, "and I shall not be long before I have my aviaries re-built and re-stocked." Our representative was then shown into the bird-room, where he found most of the birds—Britishers, foreigners and Canaries (Mr. Dell has bred over fifty Canaries this season already)—in excellent spirits and comfortably housed, though some of the birdie homes had had to "take in" strangers saved from the fire.

*"No Place Like Home."

One day, while cleaning out my pet's cage, he flew through the cage door, which I carelessly left open. My pet is a little Redpoll, and my mother caught him in the garden when he was almost dead. I fed him, and he is now a good little bird. Well, when he got out he flew into a tree and started whistling. Here I had to leave him and go to school; but I hung the cage on the wall. When I came home at night to my great delight I found him snugly sitting on the perch.—Sent by O. Houghton, 57, Avenue Road, King's Heath.

*A Trained Starling.

A Starling, which was brought up in a house and lived chiefly in kitchen, always watched the butcher's daily visit with interest, and went to the door perched upon the shoulder of the cook. If the meat delivered were beef, he would come back screaming with delight; but if it happened to be pork, he would be in a great rage, crying out, "Too fat! Too fat!" This was a favourite phrase of his, and was used on all occasions as a word of dislike.—Taken from "Bird Keeping," by Dyson. Sent by A. Browett (age 13), 52, Lancaster Road, Shrewsbury Road, Forest Gate.

The Nests of Birds.

Who taught the bird to build her nest
Of wool, and hay, and moss?
Who taught her how to weave it best,
And lay the twigs across?

The Sparrow has a nest of hay,
With feathers warmly lined;
The ring-dove's careless nest of sticks
On lofty trees we find.

The Cuckoo makes no nest at all,
But through the wood she strays,
Until she finds one, snug and warm,
And there her eggs she lays.

The habits of each little bird,
And all its patient skill,
Are surely taught by God himself,
And ordered by His will.

CANARY QUERIES.

Young Plucked by Hen.

A.B.C.—I presume they have now been removed from the parents, as you speak of inducing them to bathe, but omit to mention their age, or whether taken away from the parents or not. If not old enough to remove altogether put them in a nursery cage, and give the hen a clean nest-box and material to distract her attention from the plumage of the young as much as possible. If already taken away, keep them in a cage by themselves, and do not turn them into a flight amongst others until the plumage has grown. Continue to encourage bathing frequently in suitable weather, and twice a week slightly smear the bare places with pure olive oil or vaseline. No other treatment will be necessary if the birds are, as you say, apparently healthy, and the plumage should be well grown in a month from the time when they were removed from their parents.

Breeding and Not Breeding.

F.E.S.—There is nothing wrong with your staple diet, and I can only suggest the first failure was due to the presence of the cock, and perhaps to your plan of feeding whilst the young were being fed. You might have given hemp too soon, and not enough green food. Remove him next time as soon as the hen has settled down to sitting, and you will probably find the hen do better by herself. If the Crested hen is in good, plump condition, begin by giving her a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for three days. After this in addition to the above staple diet, give half a teaspoonful of egg food every second day, with a pinch of gold of pleasure mixed in it, and on the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga and linseed. Give two or three fresh dandelion leaves daily, and twice or three times a week for a fortnight give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel in the drinking water. If the hen is in poor condition treat as above, but give the salts for one day only, and add three drops of cod liver oil emulsion to the egg food each time for a fortnight.

Gaping Yorkshire.

"Minarue," Dublin.—It seems obvious that you have the breeding cage in a draughty or damp position, and where the temperature is of a very variable nature; which accounts for his condition at the beginning of the season, and for his present ailment. The hen's huskiness is also due to the same causes. As a first step, see the cage is quite free from any draughts; neither should it be anywhere near a burning fire, as this practically always means subjecting the birds to frequent extreme changes of temperature. Aim to preserve a fairly equable, normal temperature, with plenty of fresh, pure air. Having attended to these points, feed on a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as a staple, and in addition give separately a few grains of hemp twice a week, and every second day for the next fortnight a small teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake, with two drops each of sherry and cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and a pinch of inga or gold of pleasure sprinkled over it between them. Give a little green food every day now. You may also allow them to bathe daily now in fine weather. In the drinking water give for two days as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and afterwards twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken in the water, every second day for a week or fortnight, if necessary.

Hen Not Mating.

E. A. M.—If you had given me some idea as to her age, I should have been in a better position to advise you. It is quite clear that only the hen is at fault in not settling down, and it may be either that she was over-taxed last season, if an old bird, or that she was a late hatched one and is still very young. There are many causes for this, which can only be arrived at when one is fairly conversant with the bird's history. You might separate her for a week or ten days and treat as advised to "Berwyn," and at the end of this time mate her again and give her another trial. If she does not then soon settle down you would do well to relegate her to a large flight for the rest of the season. Feed plainly until the moult, get her through moult as quickly as you can, and put on a plain diet again for the winter, so as to have her in good hard condition for next season.

Young in Nursery.

Silo.—As the young are already three weeks old, I do not think you need have any misgivings about the hen going to nest again, even if the other does not begin to help in feeding them, as the probability is that even if the hen were to cease feeding, when she begins to lay they would by that time be fairly safe to look after their own needs. To assist them to get "on their own" more quickly, keep a little crumbly moist egg food with a sprinkling of cracked hemp amongst it in the nursery for them to pick at, and in another vessel give them a little Canary and summer rape. You will, however, probably find that the cock begins to look after them all that is necessary when the hen has gone to nest. I note what you say about the usefulness of fanciers writing accounts of their failures. In theory it may be quite correct, but in actual practice—well, as the immortal Sam Weller would have said, it 'aint human natur' to write about one's failures.

Out of Song, etc.

Manager.—You are, as you say, another of the unlucky ones. You are overfeeding the Norwich, which would have a tendency to prevent his filling eggs, a swell as having the weather against him. Continue the staple diet of Canary and rape, and give a liberal supply of chickweed and dandelion. Restrict the bill of fare to these items for a week, and in the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day during same time. At the end of the week add to the diet half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry mixed in it and a pinch of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it every second day, and on the alternate days give half a teaspoonful, not more, of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and every second day for a week as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and on the alternate days two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel.

Hens Not Laying.

Berwyn.—You feed incorrectly, which may have much to do with the failure of your hens to settle down properly, and it is getting too late now for you to have much chance of bringing them into a good condition. It would probably be wisest to turn them into a flight at once, and reserve their energies for next season. Still, if you prefer trying for a late brood, remove the nest boxes and separate the hens from the cocks for a week or ten days. For the first three days give the hens plain Canary seed only in boxes, a liberal supply of chickweed, and a little bread and milk. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts each day. After this give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple, and every second day give each half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry in it and a pinch of gold of pleasure strewn over it. On the alternate days give first a pinch of inga and next a pinch of hemp alternately. Give two leaves of dandelion as green food every day, and in the drinking water two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every second day for a week. If they are apparently desirous to mate at the end of this time, give them another trial, mating them, if possible, with fresh lusty cocks.

Swellings Near Oil Glands.

J. R. Cinnamon.—Your second letter gives me a very much better idea of the condition of the bird. But even now I cannot venture to express a decided opinion as to the nature of the mischief. Only a personal examination would enable one to do this, and I would advise you, if it is a valuable bird, to get your family doctor, or a veterinary surgeon, to examine it and tell you what the swellings are. Without seeing them I am strongly inclined to think they are simply masses of fat, or, perhaps, enlarged or swollen ovaries. If accumulation of fat, you would probably find similar, if somewhat smaller, ones around the vent, or between the vent and the flanks, and also, perhaps, across the fore ridges of the breastbone. If you find this is so, put the bird at once on a diet of plain Canary with an unlimited supply of green food, keep in a large flight where it can get all the exercise it likes, and give regular saline aperients three or four times a week for some time, or until all trace of the swellings has disappeared. You might begin this treatment at once. Try it for a month, and then write again and let us know result.

To Begin Colour-feeding.

W. R. Pike.—The age at which to commence depends to a certain extent upon the time when they were hatched. For example, a brood hatched out in March should now be put on weak colour food without delay, as many will very soon be moulting, and some will have already commenced to cast feathers. On the other hand, broods hatched out at the end of April need not start with colour food until the beginning, or middle, of July, by which time the second broods of the early starters will be ready to start feeding. There will be very little difference in the time at which second and third broods start moulting, the latest hatched generally starting at a younger age than the early ones. Begin at once to give a little weak colour feed about three times a week to early hatched young, and a fortnight or three weeks hence begin same with the remainder, and continue until you see them dropping into moult, when you must begin to give the feed regularly every day. You are feeding the young Canaries incorrectly, and were a little too hasty in taking them from the parents. Give them a heaped teaspoonful of egg food or crushed sponge cake (between four) each day. Mix it just crumbly moist, by keeping it rather on dry side. Also give a teaspoonful of summer rape daily, and a similar quantity of slightly cracked, not crushed, hemp twice a week. Give an unlimited supply of good Canary seed, and four times a week a half-ripe plantain stalk, or spray of tender chickweed. Allow a regular supply of pure fresh water for drinking and bathing.

Discretion Wanted.

Kathleon.—(1) On the face of it I should say a Roller certainly ought not to be hung out in the garden for hours with a cool breeze blowing, even though the sun is shining at the time. At the same time I do not consider it risky to hang Canaries outdoors for an airing at all times. In fact, I have treated well-bred Canarics to such an airing myself with nothing but good results. It is, however, just one of those things where discretion on the part of the individual is most urgently called for. To put a Canary out in a cool breeze from 10 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. is little short of cruelty. (2) To remove the effect, keep the bird indoors now in a cool but even temperature, quite out of reach of draughts; and in addition to the usual seed diet, frequently given here, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry mixed in it every second day, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water twenty drops of whisky, ten of syrup of squills, and two of encalyptus oil, well shaken together. Continue this treatment for a fortnight if necessary, or until the effects of the chill have quite disappeared.

Loss of Plumage.

M. Hind.—You give no idea how old the bird is, and it is quite probable this may have much to do with its failure to reproduce feathers when they drop out, if indeed it is not the sole cause. You will not be able to make any material improvement until it moults again, which should not be very long. Treat as follows until the moult takes place, when it should be in the best condition for coming out in good plumage. As a staple give plain canary only, and separately twice a week a few grains of hemp; on two other days half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, or an equivalent quantity of bread scalded in milk, squeezed nearly dry, and sprinkled with soft sugar. On each of the days when neither of these items is given, add half a teaspoonful of summer rape. Give a fairly liberal supply of green food daily. Once each week add to whatever soft food you are giving as much as will cover a threepenny piece of a mixture of two parts flowers of sulphur to one part chlorate of potash, and add a pinch of maw to tempt the bird to eat it. Give twenty drops of chemical food in the water twice each week. Keep cage strewn with clean, gritty sand; see that it is free from red mites, and allow bird to bathe freely in suitable weather. When the moult is about to commence, give a fair supply of maw in place of hemp, and keep bird in a regular and warm temperature to induce a speedy moult.

Early Moult: Boiled Rape.

Novice.—(1) I cannot advise you to attempt any special method of feeding to force your Yorkshires into early moult. It would be better to adhere to a good, plain, wholesome diet, and thereby maintain and build up their health and stamina, which will go far to enable the birds to get through the moult speedily at the proper time. Then when the moult is approaching you might add a fair allowance of maw seed. Add a few shreds of saffron to the water and keep birds in a warm equable temperature. By this method the moult will be quickly completed, and most likely the birds will be fine again quite as early as though you tried to force them into moult before the proper time. (2) It is quite impossible to say how long boiled rape will keep fresh, as the time varies according to the prevailing weather, and also on the moisture left in seed when draining. If well drained and wiped dry, it will keep fresh from one day to the next in moderately cool weather, but in hot sultry weather, especially if the seed is not wiped dry after draining, it will often turn sour in two or three hours. Your best plan is to prepare each morning only sufficient to last until near evening, and if able to do so, inspect what is in the cages soon after mid-day, and throw away any that smells sour. About ten minutes is quite long enough to boil it. Personally, I prefer soaking it overnight in cold water during hot weather.

A Yorkshire Male Unwell.

"Bobby."—The bird is most probably hung in a draughty situation, or otherwise where there are extreme fluctuations of heat, such as near a burning fire, lamp, or gas jet. Whatever the cause, it must first be removed, and the bird kept in a fairly regular temperature night and day, not necessarily overheated, but where it has abundant fresh pure air without any draughts. Such places as those just named or close to a window should be strictly avoided. Feed on a staple diet of plain Canary only, and give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of summer rape seed, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake with two drops each of sherry and cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. Twice a week give a few grains of hemp, and on each of the other days a spray of some green food. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil well shaken together two days in every three for a week, and every alternate day afterwards as long as necessary. Continue this diet and treatment until bird is quite well, then give the rape daily, reduce the sponge cake to twice a week, and omit the additions to it. Also stop all other medicines.

Hatching Troubles.

Anxious Fancier.—Am afraid your room, or the nesting receptacles or materials must be at fault in some way for you to have such persistent trouble. What nesting receptacles do you use, what sort of material, and do you put anything, and what, in the nests to prevent insects accumulating? And is there anything in the situation of the room or position of cages which would tend to cause undue dryness in the atmosphere? Such, for instance, as abutting on a wall which is constantly heated by fires on the other side? These are a few points which would help to elucidate the case. When the next nests are being incubated, give the hens a bath daily during the second week, and from the twelfth day, beginning on the morning of the twelfth, dip the eggs for a moment in warm water morning and evening, and return them to the nest without wiping them. Then, if they are not apparently hatching satisfactorily on the evening of the fourteenth day, you may extend the crack from the "chipped" spot around the shell, so that a little effort on the part of the chick would remove the top, and if they are not out next morning, you may, of course, take the risk of killing or releasing them and help them out. Keep ventilator well open, and in hot weather you might prevent the temperature running up so high, and also, perhaps, help the hatching, by every now and again wringing out a large towel in water and hanging it across the room to dry.

Not Businesslike.

G.M.D.—There can be no doubt the wretched weather so far this season is the cause of many highly-bred birds failing to settle down in a workmanlike way. (1) In addition to the staple seed diet, give half a teaspoonful of egg food daily, and two days a week sprinkle over it a pinch of inga, and on two other days a pinch of gold of pleasure. Give a liberal supply of chickweed or groundsel as green food daily. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and afterwards four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid for a few days. (2) Feed and treat this hen same as No. 1, except that you give the salts for two days only and finish the treatment in a week with a dose or two of the sulphuric acid. If she is anxious to nest at once, allow her to do so at the end of the week's treatment, but mate her with a vigorous 1908 cock if possible. If you must use the other, give previously half a teaspoonful of egg food daily for a week, sprinkling over it a few grains of hemp, inga, and gold of pleasure, on alternate days, and give two leaves of dandelion each day. (3) If anxious to begin at once you may try this hen again by mating her with a lusty young male that is not run down. Feed and treat for a week as advised for No. 1. I cannot tell why she has not nested yet, beyond saying that it is no uncommon thing for a highly-bred bird that gets generally upset at the beginning of the season to do nothing for the rest of the season. (4) The diet here seems very faulty. Give an unlimited supply of Canary as a staple, and separately a little rape each day, half a teaspoonful of egg food (varied occasionally with a similar quantity of bread and milk) about twice a week, a small quantity of hemp twice a week, and a little green food three or four times a week. For green food give chickweed, half ripe plantain stalks, or flower heads of groundsel in this order for preference.

Brevities.

Beginning to Sing (A. Sharp).—It is quite a usual thing for young cocks to begin to twitter and try over their song in a soft low way at about six weeks old. They do not, however, open out in full song, as a rule, until after the moult.

Coming of Age ("Birdie").—Most young Canaries are able to feed themselves tolerably well at a month old. Many, however, are apt to fall back if put entirely on their own at this age, and the safest plan before doing so is to observe the seed pan for a day or two, when you can tell by the husks left behind whether they are cracking seed freely. Of course, this only refers to the pan in the nursery cage to which only the young have access. When the birds are flying at large in an aviary, you can only observe them when they visit the seed pan, and note when they cease to follow their parents and "call" to them for food. Otherwise, keep them where they are until between five and six weeks old, when they should be well on the safe side.

Samples of Rape (L. S. D.).—No. 1 is a very fair sample of summer rape; 2 and 6 are practically the same, save that 2 is probably a trifle newer and therefore not quite so mild as 6. They are the kind of rape said to be favoured by the best German breeders. No. 3 is summer rape of excellent flavour, but very poor in size and substance of grains. No. 4 is probably a mixture, and of second-rate quality. The bulk, however, seems to consist of summer rape. No. 5 is undoubtedly a mixture and the worst of the lot. None of the samples are really very bad, and even No. 5 may be used at a pinch. Cannot profess to say whether they are of German origin or not.

Clear or Addled? (Game).—A "clear" egg is one that has never been fertilised by the male and remains quite clear and unchanged in appearance after being incubated for its full term. An "addled" egg is one that has been fertilised by the male, but the germ has died at a more or less advanced stage of development after incubation has commenced. Once the germ has started to develop and becomes inert or dies, decomposition follows. In your case the cock was not in proper breeding condition and failed to fertilise the eggs. It is probable the weather affected his fertility, and now that it is more settled he should fill the next clutch properly. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part hemp. Give a pinch of hemp, inga, and a little egg food on alternate days, and a regular supply of green food.

Breeding or Singing (Pawnbroker).—It is not usual for Rollers to sing for only one year. Although a great many birds which are kept for singing and associated with a variety of other birds, especially when they are bred with, deteriorate a good deal in the quality of song, they still sing quite as much before and after the breeding season for several years. When kept for singing alone, and out of earshot of extraneous sounds, they preserve more or less purity of song for some years. But when they are bred with, the song often deteriorates very rapidly, from a "quality" standpoint, and during the summer months when breeding is going on, the cocks do not sing a great deal, except in a few exceptional cases.

A Great Drinker ("Jack," Nice, Wigan).—You should have said where the bird is kept, as this might have something to do with its great thirst. Also you should have said whether it appeared quite healthy or otherwise. If apparently healthy, I should be inclined to leave it and its thirst alone, and if kept in a very warm place, or exposed to sunshine, remedy this, and add a little fresh succulent green food to the diet daily. Feed now on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape, and give a liberal supply of crisp young lettuce, chickweed, or watercress each day. Allow it to bathe each day, and if this does not correct it, add six drops aromatic sulphuric acid to the water every second day for a week or so.

Not Breeding Properly (Querist).—Read remarks in reply to "G.M.D." Take away the cock for a week, and during this time give hen a mixture of three parts Canary to one summer rape as a staple, and for the first three days limit diet to this and a liberal supply of chickweed. Also give a pinch of Epsom salts in water for each of these three days. For the rest of the week add half a teaspoonful of egg food with a few grains only of inga and gold of pleasure sprinkled over it each day, and give a few grains of hemp two or three times a week. Continue to give the same green food daily. If she seems anxious to go to nest at once at the end of the week, you may give her another trial, but otherwise, considering the lateness of the season, I would advise you to relegate her to the flight cage until the next season comes round.

Choking and Panting (Hurry Hand).—See they are kept in a place where the temperature is as even as possible night and day, quite out of range of burning fires, lamps, or gas, and also away from windows, and quite free from draughts and damp. Having duly attended to these points, you may then reasonably expect some good results from the following treatment: Give the sponge cake—about half a teaspoonful—every second day for a week, and add to it four drops of sherry and two of cod-liver oil emulsion each time. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, six each of oxymel of squills and glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week and every second day for another week afterwards. If not quite cured in that time, omit the medicine for a week, and then begin over again and repeat the two weeks' treatment as above. When the birds are well, reduce the sponge cake to twice a week, and omit the additions to it, otherwise continue your present mode of feeding, which is a very fair and rational one.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. Weston.

Over-feeding a Bullfinch.

Lillie.—Sorry to hear you have lost a Bullfinch, and that you have been told it died from the effects of over-feeding. In the seed sample sent are several seeds (niger and hemp, for instance) which are stimulating and fattening and much liked by the Bullfinch, hence he would pick them out and neglect the other kinds, which might lead to ill-effects. You should give your Bullies more ripe fruit and seedy green foods. The following would make your bird an excellent stock mixture, and any good seedsman would put it up for you; Canary and teazle three parts of each, summer rape and charlock, half a part of each, safflower and sunflower a quarter part of each. In a tin you could keep a mixture of niger two parts, maw three parts, and give a pinch twice a week, also a little hemp once a week. Then you have thistle and dandelion seed and wild seed mixture, small feeds of which may also be occasionally given. For green foods give any of the following, according to season: Shepherd's purse, dandelion, groundsel tops, chickweed, flowering grasses, watercress, lettuce, rape, or Canary seedlings, etc. The seeding kinds may be freely given. Bullies are very fond of many berries (black, privet, etc.), also fruit, and the buds of fruit trees and bushes; on such things they feed largely when wild. These birds are also fond of an occasional mealworm.

A Goldfinch Failure.

Hen Goldie.—No fault rests with you, so far as I can see. Judging by your account, the variety of foodstuffs supplied was excellent, and the birds ought to have done well. Neither do I think the Ribbon Finches were to blame. In such a big aviary the individuals of one pair would be very unlikely to interfere with the other. Besides, the Goldie is not a bird to tolerate interference. I think it is quite likely that the death of the young birds can rightly be put down to the very unfavourable weather experienced recently. It has been bad for birds trying to rear families in outdoor aviaries. When the young arrive at the age you mention (9 to 12 days) the hen does not brood them so closely as is the case during the first few days after hatching, and thus the cold, wet weather may seriously affect them. On the other hand it is curious you should have fancied that the hen Goldie kept away from the nest after the eighth day. It may be that she actually did do so; this often happens. I have frequently mentioned that hen British birds in captivity have the exasperating habit of feeding young for a few days (more or less) and then giving up the job, leaving their babies to starve. In your case, probably the cock bird would keep up the feeding for a day or two, and then also give up. They may do better at the next attempt, of course, but you would be wise (if you want young Goldies) to put some of their eggs under one of your hen Canaries, or make an exchange of eggs.

Keeping a Waxwing.

Garrulus.—Yes, I read the article you mention, and I agree with the conclusions arrived at by the writer. You need have no fear about keeping a single Waxwing. A great number of species of birds are, in fact, better for being kept in a state of "single blessedness" when in a cage. You should not let out the bird to fly in the room until it has become tame and familiar with your presence. In my opinion, this is a very easy bird to keep in health and condition. It requires feeding on a good insectivorous mixture (such as many people advertise in our columns). A suitable food can be made of game or chicken meal (without grit), or fine dog or puppy meal, six parts; ants' eggs, and dried flies two parts each, meat meal and powdered silkworm pupae one part each, by measure. Damp with a little water or grated raw carrot, or cold mashed boiled potato, or fine chopped watercress, lettuce, chickweed, etc., varying them frequently and according to the season. Add half a hard-boiled egg to the daily food portion occasionally—or a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake. Give a few mealworms daily, and any other suitable insect life as in season. They are enormous feeders, and being indolent and neglectful in the matter of taking exercise, usually manage to get as "fat as pigs." A mild dose of sulphate of soda is useful occasionally. Fruit, such as ripe banana, sweet orange and apple, grocer's currants, raisins, etc., chopped figs and dates, is much relished, and should always be given daily freely; the dried kinds can be mixed with the stock food. Berries, too, the bird is passionately fond of, and black, privet, elder, haw, etc., should be freely given whenever obtainable. Plenty of variety in the diet is essential.

In an Aviary.

S. Barker.—You could not do better than invest a shilling in the Hardbill section (part 1) of Mr. Norman's "British Bird Manual," published at the offices of this journal. The Greenfinch with a cold in the eye (I suppose you mean there is a running from it?) should be caged up by itself, and have the eye gently bathed twice a day in warm water, coloured light red by the addition of a little Condy's fluid. This will soon effect a cure. As regards the feeding, you should supply green food plentifully now—it is readily obtainable. For your seed mixture for a varied collection of Finches, such as you name, you will find it difficult to beat this: Canary and teazle three pints each, hemp two pints, summer rape and charlock one pint each, linseed half-a-pint, with about a half-pint of mixed sunflower and safflower seeds, increasing or decreasing the quantity of these latter according to whether the birds eat it all up or not—it depends on the composition of the collection, as some birds (Greenfinches, for instance) like these seeds more than others. The other seeds—niger, maw, wild seeds, wild seed mixture, etc.—you can give now and again as a change, or as "tit-bits." The exact quantity of hemp should vary according to the season (less in summer than in winter). A little more linseed is also useful during the moult.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Hand-rearing Yellowhammers.

English.—For hand-rearing purposes, Buntings should be treated on precisely the same lines as Goldfinches, Linnets, etc. I have given details many times this season, and repeat them briefly now. I don't believe in taking these young birds from their parents at too early an age; let them show their feathers nicely before you remove them. Up to the twelfth day (from the 10th to 12th) is safe enough. The food to be used is the usual kind—that is, egg and biscuit. Crush two Osborne biscuits, and well mix with them the yolk and half the white of a hard-boiled egg, using a fork to do this with. When feeding, take the required quantity of this mixture, and make it the consistency of thin paste (or of cream) with new milk (can be varied with warm water now and again). See that it is always sweet and free from the slightest taint of sourness. The egg-food must be made fresh at least once daily. Often I put in a good pinch of Plasmon powder, which I am never without in my bird room. A few small cut-up pieces of mealworm may be dipped in milk and popped into their mouths pretty frequently; likewise any house flies you can capture should also be fed to them. As the youngsters grow, add a little soaked and just sprouting summer rape to the stock food. Steep the rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a cloth before mixing it in the food. Feed a little at a time only, but frequently, from early morning until last thing at night, live ants' eggs are excellent things to use (add to the stock food) when band-feeding. Also see the reply given "A. A. H." last week by me.

Brevities.

A Mule and Red Mite (W. Nevin).—In the reply given you last week, the sentence: "Then distemper it with enamel," should have read: "Then distemper it, or enamel."

Hand-rearing Thrushes (An Old Reader).—I gave full instructions for hand-rearing Thrushes, Blackbirds, and the like, in the reply to "A. A. H." last week. Kindly refer to that.

Finishing Mule Breeding (Inquirer).—It is not really safe to continue Mule breeding beyond the end of July, for the hen Canaries are then liable to fall into moult, and if they happen to have a nest of young birds, there is the likelihood that they will "turn it up," and let the young die. Still, the Mule (and especially the Hybrid) breeder has often to take the risk.

Young Blackbirds (Blackie).—Certainly; the old bird ought to prove an excellent tutor for the hand-reared one. But you don't want to part with the old Blackie too soon. An experienced fancier can make a good guess at the sex of Blackbirds, even when only just about to leave the nest. He compares the flight feathers; in the cocks they look appreciably darker (blacker) than in the hens. When the young cock is moulting, his new feathers come black, whereas in the hen they come brown.

In an Aviary (Novice).—I think the "sleeping place" would be better (for the wintry weather) if boarded about one-third of the way down from the top, which would make it more sheltered. I have never kept a collection of these large birds, but should doubt whether more than one pair of Jays and Magpies would agree. Of Starlings and Jackdaws you might try two or three pairs. Am afraid I don't quite understand your idea. Is it the run only which is movable, and the shed a fixture, or what? Could you send a rough sketch or plan?

Keeping an Owl (Terrier).—I should think the old brick shed would make a capital place to keep the Owl in (you do not say so, but I presume it is a Barn Owl), providing there is a quiet, shaded corner he can retire into when so disposed. It must have flesh food if it is going to live and thrive in captivity—for instance, mice, Sparrows, and other small birds, beetles, pieces of rabbit, the "innards" of fowls, etc., scraps of raw beef or mutton, etc. If you cannot undertake to provide these things, you should certainly let so useful a creature have its liberty.

A Muling Couple (Master H. Webster).—It is not unlikely that the railway journey given the hen when in the midst of breeding duties has put her "out of gear," so to speak, for the time being. You should read the replies given "A Novice" (headed "Simply Marking Time") and "Brum" last week in this column, and follow the advice tendered the latter querist. You must give a little of the egg-food daily, and some green food (seeding chickweed for choice).

About Goldfinches (Goldie).—In hand-rearing Goldfinches, follow the advice given to "English" this week by me; also see the reply given "A. A. H." last week. As regards colour-feeding, if a Goldfinch will not eat soft food the only way is to get him on to cracked seed, and gradually begin to rub (mix) colour-food into the latter. If a Goldie (or other Finch) is used for muling, he usually soon acquires a taste for egg-food, and in the same way. If kept in a flight containing a Softbill, he soon begins to pick over the soft food given to the insectivorous bird.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

A Grey Unwell.

J.H.—Continue to use the glyco-thymoline, and treat as directed in our previous reply. Get a box of honey and borax, and put a little over its tongue and interior of mouth two or three times daily, using a camel-hair brush for the purpose. So long as the voidings are not watery, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water every other day. Any make of plain biscuit may be moistened with equal parts of water and Parrish's Chemical Food; also let the bird have a liberal supply of such ripe fruit as it will take. Keep it out of draught, but yet where it will get plenty of fresh air. The brush used for wiping out its mouth with the honey and borax should be kept strictly clean, and a fresh portion used for each occasion. In cases of sickness it is best to remove the voidings as soon as possible.

Another Grey Unwell.

"Anxious One."—You must continue with the treatment as to the use of borax in water, honey and borax and Dinneford's Magnesia, exactly as in previous reply, till the trouble disappears. However, the use of the magnesia must be regulated according to its condition, the voidings should not be hard, neither should they be watery. While the mouth continues sore, you can give chewed or moistened bread, sponge cake, and also some boiled maize daily. As regards the latter, it only keeps fresh one day, and the food hopper should be scalded out for each occasion; prepare as follows: Boil till soft, then drain away all water, shake the grains loose, and when cool supply to the bird. Also continue to give any ripe fruit it will eat. Coax its appetite as much as possible with such things as it fancies most from the dietary given in our previous reply, but do not on any account give slops and messes. The seed mixture already given is the best you can supply.

Treating a Young Grey.

R. H. White.—You give no idea how you have been feeding the bird, which makes a definite reply very difficult. Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia to each ounce of the drinking water every third day so long as the voidings are not watery. Get from your chemist a box of honey and borax, and with a camel-hair brush wipe a little across its tongue and the interior of its mouth two or three times a day, well cleansing the brush after each application. Diet: Boiled maize, prepared as follows: Boil till soft, drain away all moisture, shake grains apart, and soak into the daily supply half a teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food. A seed mixture consisting of Canary, oats, hemp, wheat, dari, and sunflower seeds. Well mix, and keep a supply continually in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit (apple, orange, or grapes are usually favoured), plain biscuit, and a few nuts (shelled walnuts are best). Bathe its legs and feet with hot water (not to scald), dry, and then brush on a little Elliman's Embrocation.

For Outdoor Aviary.

M. G. L. (Somerset).—I am rather in a difficulty, as you do not give me the size of your aviary. However, providing they have space for exercise and a shelter is attached to the aviary, you can keep the following, some or all of which would breed sooner or later:—Zebra, Ribbon, Long-tailed Grass and Ruficauda Finches, Zebra (golden-breasted), Grey and St. Helena Waxbills, Common and Green Avadavats. Providing your aviary has a floor area of not less than 6 x 4 feet, you could keep a pair each of the above, which would make a beautiful and attractive series. Without further particulars, I must decline to express an opinion about the Gouldian Finches, and unless you have had some experience of bird-keeping I should advise you to leave till later. If you keep Budgerigars with small Finches, disaster is sure to occur sooner or later, no matter how large the aviary may be.

Feeding Young Budgerigars.

W. Broadbent.—In the first place, you would find "Foreign Birds for Beginners," from this office, very helpful (see advertisement in this column). Diet: Canary, white and spray millet seeds, green food (such as fresh lettuce, grass flowers, etc.), cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing. When they are feeding young keep a tin of oats in the aviary. From now till, say, beginning of October it will not be necessary to put up the shutters at night. I should advise you to keep exclusively to Budgerigars, in so small an aviary introducing Finches would be sure to end in disaster for the Finches. I should advise three breeding pairs, say two pairs green and one pair yellow, and not permit your stock to accumulate above a score, but dispose of them as they are able to feed for themselves. You could keep with a pair of Cockatels; these would agree with the Budgerigars, and thrive on the same diet. They would also make a variation in size and colour.

Javas with Small Waxbills.

M.R.—Probably they are not yet fully adult; again, foreign birds do not settle down to breeding as readily as Canaries, but White Javas are really free breeders in captivity, and yours will undoubtedly settle down and do so sooner or later. There is nothing to do but to wait patiently till they are ready and fit. Usually all that are hatched out are successfully reared. Do not discard young birds because they are pied in their nestling plumage; many such become almost pure, with scarcely a foul feather after the moult. Canary, white and spray millet, green food, grit, and cuttlefish will suffice to keep them fit; a few oats and paddy rice is also wholesome, and a little soft food when they are feeding young. Unless the quarters are very large I cannot advise you to put the White Javas with small Waxbills; both these and Saffrons are at times very vicious with the smaller fry in their enclosure. I have never known Cockatels to interfere with any of their companions, either large or small.

Quaker or Other Parrakeets.

H. J.—Providing they are not overcrowded, the Quaker and Roscila Parrakeets, Budgerigars and Cockatels will agree together in the same aviary. Note, the Quaker is one of the few species of Parrots that construct nests: hang up longtitudinally a roomy barrel, and supply twigy branches for them to build with; branches of similar length and thickness to those used for making birch brooms answer admirably. The outward sexual distinctions are infinitesimal, but if you get adult birds to compare you will find the area of grey is smaller on the female; she is also a little less noisy, and altogether not so demonstrative as her "lord and master"; she is also decidedly effeminate in appearance compared with him. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary, millet, hemp, wheat, oats, and sunflower seeds, with green food, ripe fruit, plain biscuit, and a few nuts suffices to give them a varied and wholesome dietary. I hope you will have luck with them. Their nest building is very interesting, and the birds are absolutely fearless, though not unduly aggressive. At the same time, when nesting they will not suffer anyone or anything to interfere with them, for which they can scarcely be blamed.

Diet for a Grey Parrot.

G. L. H.—Milk sop, tea and coffee slops, table scraps generally, and animal food of any kind mean ill-health for poor Polly sooner or later. Supply the following seed mixture: Two parts each Canary seed, oats, and hemp, and one part each wheat, dari, maize, and sunflower seeds; well mix, and keep up a continuous supply. Renew the supply each morning, and so long as there is seed of any kind in the tin do not give any fresh supply during the day. To vary the diet, etc., give ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts, and green food; keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in the cage. I have found no difficulty with Parrots at meal times; it is very easy to have something at hand that is wholesome for Polly, and I have found them soon satisfied therewith. It is my experience that a Parrot can be soon weaned from these unwholesome messes by using a lukewarm mixture of water and Parrish's Chemical Food in equal parts, and soaking the food in this. Considering the way you have been feeding this bird, I should advise your putting one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every third day for a month, but you must stop same at once if the voidings become watery.

The Treatment of Bichenos.

F. Freeth.—These Finches, and very many of the Greenfinches, rear their young almost entirely upon seed and green food, almost, if not entirely, ignoring the soft food dish. I do not think your nestlings died from anything arising from the dietary, but from something else entirely outside of this. However, for all species of Finches that will take them, live ants' eggs (cocoons) are very wholesome, and will certainly help to keep the old birds fit, and tend to the production of very vigorous progeny. You can also use blighty sprays from rose and fruit trees, and any non-poisonous vegetable growths. Canary, white and spray millet, green food, little ripe fruit (apple is universally favoured), and grit should suffice for the successful rearing of the young, but the addition of the live food mentioned above will tend to make full success more certain. None of the items of diet you name are really unwholesome. Even supposing you have an adult abnormally plumaged cock bird, it is not likely to affect the plumage of the young; quite apart from abnormalities, there is more or less variation with every species.

Birds for an Aviary.

M. R.—I do not know your county, and this rather handicaps me in giving a reply. Yes, you can keep White Javas in it, and if the space is not too confined they will not harm the other birds I should say get two pairs of White Javas (from entirely different sources, so as to secure unrelated birds), and put in with them some Common and Green Avadavats, Zebra and Grey Waxbills, and Long-tailed and Rufous-tailed Greenfinches, some or all of which would breed and not in any way interfere with your specialising in the White Javas. It would make your aviary more attractive with a few of these minute gems flitting about among the growing bushes. Also the same dietary would be suitable for all. The diet for White Javas is given in our reply to another correspondent.

Diet for a Jay in Captivity.

F. G. Saunders.—The food you name makes a good staple dietary, but it should be supplemented with ripe fruit, nuts, live insects (mealworms, beetles; give it a mouse to worry occasionally, spiders, and anything you can capture for it in your garden), table scraps, etc. These birds are almost omnivorous, and can be given almost anything with impunity. I am of opinion a more liberal diet (including some live food) on the lines given above will soon bring a great improvement in its condition. I could have given you a more definite reply if you had indicated what kind of Jay you have. You must give it opportunity to have a frequent bath, and such a restless, active species should have a cage large enough to give it reasonable exercise; without this the bird is sure to be ailing, no matter what the dietary is. These birds are fairly confiding, and can usually be let out at intervals for exercise; this will help to keep in check the ill-effects of confined quarters.

Treating a Grey Parrot.

Mic.—No, I do not think dealers doctor birds; it would not pay. The facts are these, the awful conditions under which the birds are brought to the coast and imported, land most of these interesting birds on our shores in a diseased or contaminated condition, and large numbers of them perish soon after arrival. You must keep the bird warm and out of draught, but not out of reach of fresh air. The proper diet you will find given in our reply to another correspondent. I am doubtful if the trouble is purely bronchial, but due to infection during importation, and you ought not to use a cage in which a Grey Parrot has died without thoroughly scalding out every crevice, and well swilling the whole with boiling water, or it will probably contaminate its next occupant. Give this bird a little boiled maize, which must be prepared fresh daily (this is in addition to the dietary referred to above) and soak into same, after you have drained away all moisture, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia every other day for a fortnight. Put into the drinking water daily for about ten days three drops of aromatic sulphuric acid, and give the bird direct to the mouth a teaspoonful of the mixture given below, diluted with an equal bulk of water: Equal parts of ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine. The above quantity (water and mixture, two teaspoonsful) will suffice for each day; the bird will not take it all at once. You had better report progress in a fortnight's time.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Brevities.

What Parrakeet? ("Recipitant").—It is evident you have some species of Lovebird or small Parrakeet, and that they are miniature. This makes the placing of them exceedingly difficult, and I am unable to name them for you before going to press. However, I will look them up and hope to name them for you and give approximate value in our next issue.

What is its Value? ("Folkestone").—Am of opinion the bird is the Blue-eyed Cockatoo, which certainly is uncommon and only to be obtained at irregular intervals. I cannot tell you anything as to its demeanour, as it is several years since I saw a specimen, and have never possessed it. However, for a specimen that has been over for some little time and has commenced to talk, I should place a minimum value of 60s. to 70s. upon it.

Blue-breasted Waxbills (E. B. Oak).—I cannot call to mind any other popular name for these charming and chastely beautiful birds. They are not by any means common on the market, neither are they rare, and if you were to address an inquiry to any of the large dealers advertising in our columns, or send a wanted advertisement yourself, I am of opinion you would get a pair. I am, rightly, not permitted to recommend special dealers, but the species is certainly in stock at the present time, or was a few days ago.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Yorkshire Cinnamon (W. Hughes).—Disease of liver and bowels, apparently of a septic and infectious character, but no helpful items as to duration or symptoms of illness received.

Bicheno Finch (Mrs. Brooks).—Chronic softening of liver, consequent feverishness involving lungs. This state of things may, under certain conditions, such as cold and wet unseasonable weather, assume an infectious form, although it is difficult to perceive how your birds that have been in a garden aviary some few years can be so affected.

Three Canaries (R. E. G.).—Bird fever.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Goldfinch Plate (no nom-de-plume).—The plate giving cock and hen Goldfinches, with two Greypates, and called "A Happy Family," can be sent you, post free and carefully packed, for fourpence. We have only a limited number of copies left.

Wild Weeds (Boston).—Yes; all the "wild weeds" recommended by our experts and various other fanciers will be found described, and in most cases illustrated in the book entitled "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants for Cage Birds" (post free 1s. 2d.).

Dead on Arrival (J. Bridgman).—We have previously commented, and unfavourably, on the fact that it is the trade custom if birds arrive dead for the loss to fall on the buyer—that is, of course, providing they were not sent on approval. If you did not receive the kind of birds ordered, however, then you have a clear case for the return of your money, whether they reached you dead or alive.

More Twins.

SIR,—Having taken your paper for about two years, I have gained a great deal of information. I noticed in your issue of June 19 and the previous one, particulars concerning two birds in one egg, but, unfortunately, dead. At the present time I have two birds which came out of one egg, and both are doing well. I expect them on the perch by about Friday. The hen was sitting on three eggs. I put them into warm water on the Saturday, and I noticed that one egg was larger than the other two. On the Sunday morning there were two young ones out, and still two eggs, and at dinner time three young ones and the other egg was clear.

Should Canaries Have Only White Seed?

SIR,—Anent my letter in your issue of June 19 ("Lines from an old breeder"), I am wishful to give result of my first round. From eight hens I have got 26 young, all on dry seed. Most of the hens I have not allowed to lay and sit more than three eggs, so perhaps I could have had more young if wanted. Yet I never care to over burden any hen with young in one nest. I regret to hear of several breeders here having lost a great many eggs, and not having done so well the first round; but I hope they are not discouraged. Perhaps some slight alteration in system may be thought of to advantage. Leaving the breeding item, I should like to bring one matter to task re seed. A few breeders I notice are strictly of opinion that their birds should have nothing (month after month) but white seed. Is this policy or not? I am not myself a believer in that routine of keep. I should like a few opinions on the matter, if possible, though I believe it has often been "on the carpet." I wish every success to CAGE BIRDS.

JOHN H. JOWETT.

The Proposed New Society for Doncaster and District.

Greed Said to Have Brought Disaster.

SIR,—In CAGE BIRDS for June 12th, Mr. Bescoby asks for suggestions. The reputation of the old society led it to its disaster. The greed of some of its members has driven from its ranks those who were unselfish and the mainstay of the society. The wretched conduct of the men who want the prizes all to themselves unfit them for being members of a Cage Bird Society, and they should not be allowed to be such. The late secretary uttered some scathing remarks at a recent meeting, and proved thereby his utter abhorrence of such greed. I would suggest—(1) the exclusion of such objectionable members; (2) that meetings be fixed outside licensed premises; (3) that a preliminary meeting be advertised; (4) the fixing of a suitable night, and a secretary pro tem. and treasurer; (5) that the breeders be called upon to attend the preliminary meeting; (6) that a chairman pro tem. be appointed for same meeting. I would further suggest that Mr. F. Duff (Thorne Road) be the chairman. That meeting should appoint the necessary officers to set the society on a firm basis. What is needed is "vim," and the observance of the golden rule "to do to others as you would that they should do to you." Locally, there are plenty of fanciers, and the neighbourhood is receiving fresh breeders daily.

Song Thrushes which Breed in a Cage.

SIR,—I built an aviary in the back yard, and when I had almost got it complete we found that we would in a short time have to change our residence, and this made it necessary for us to pull down our workshop at the back of the house, causing a big upset in the thick of the breeding season; and we thought at one time that our chance of getting our pair of Thrushes to go to nest was very remote indeed. But it is with the greatest of pleasure I can now say that we sat the hen Thrush on Wednesday, June 9th, and that she is now sitting close on a clutch of four eggs, two laid in Whit-week, and the other two during the past week. The first year hen Blackbird has also laid three eggs. Two of them she broke and ate. The other egg my wife put under the hen Thrush, but this was fired out of the nest, so that was dicky pink also. The Blackie looks likely to lay again shortly, and if she does I will try the egg under the Thrush again and give the Blackie some pot eggs to sit on for a time; then if she behaves herself we may try her with some of the good eggs, if occasion requires it. Now, sir, on my word of honour, I declare that these eggs from the cock and hen Thrush, and those from the same cock Thrush and a first season hen Blackbird have been laid in a double Canary breeding cage in my back yard, and I now give a hearty invitation to any British bird fanciers who may be interested in this little event (or perhaps there may be doubters of its genuineness) to come along and see for themselves. I have given you the date when the hen was set, and she has laid one egg since she was set. Last year the eggs hatched out on the fourteenth day. So if fanciers would like to see her on the nest, note the date. I do not write this because I want a cheap advertisement, but to vindicate and put beyond all cavil or doubt the fact that my Thrushes have bred in a cage in captivity, and that, with a bit of luck, they are showing every appearance of doing the same again this season. I thank those fanciers who have called this season, and wished us luck with them. Considering the upset, we are having a first-class breeding season with over forty young Yorkies up to now, the greater portion of them being on the sticks. But we will be forced to cut the breeding season short owing to our removal in a very few weeks.

The L. and P.O.S. and the "Weaker" Society.

SIR,—I note with some surprise the announcement in your last week's "Twitterings" made by the Hon. Sec. of the L. and P.O.S., Mr. Tringham, to the effect that their annual members' show would be held in conjunction with the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. Surely the premier society, the L. and P. O.S., is capable of holding a members' show without the assistance of a weaker society? May I ask if it will be of any advantage to the members of the L. and P. O.S. to link themselves to another society? If so, why not amalgamate at once, and so end the troubles of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.? I am told that most of the exhibiting members of the latter are also members of the L. and P. O.S. Who is to benefit?

Linnet Singing at Leeds.

Unvarnished Reports versus Bluff and Bounce.

SIR,—Regarding the following reply to "A Visitor," re "Bluff and Bounce," as Secretary of the East Leeds Linnet Club I have been asked to reply to a portion of his letter in defence of our club (the "King's Head") and its members. In the first place we did not sing for the world's championship; on the contrary, our annual contest was advertised as the "Great All-England Contest, open to all comers." A better gathering of aspirants for championship honours from all parts of the North of England it would be impossible to bring together. As to the merits of the various competitors, it is not my intention to deal with them. Secondly, he deals with the £20 advertised to be given in prizes. A committee was formed for the allotment of prizes, and their action was approved at a meeting of the whole of the members; 15s. 6d. and a kettle comprised the first prize, but "A Visitor" ought to be honest and report that every paid-up member had 7s. each returned. Thirdly, he hopes that better language will be used the next time he comes amongst us. Is he tarnishing the whole of the Leeds Fancy with one brush? If that is so, allow me to give a flat denial on behalf of the East Leeds Club. It would be as well in future were he to define where he heard this talk. In conclusion, I would ask "A Visitor" before he begins to throw dirt about, if he would examine himself and his birds; no doubt he would then find plenty of room for improvement. Our club is open for membership, and on payment of 3d. entrance fee "A Visitor" will have an opportunity of introducing such reforms as to his idea are necessary. We do not profess to be perfect, and are believers in true reform. I hope the next time that he writes he will have the courage to sign his name, and not put a nom de plume.

A Remedy Wanted.

SIR,—Mr. Bryant should not feel aggrieved at my criticism of his former letter. It was written in no contentious spirit, but simply intended to drive home to his own mind the exaggeration of his assertion about the hen's performances. Nothing is easier than to exaggerate in such things as these, but when one goes to such unreasonable bounds it cannot fail to cast a shadow of uncertainty over all the rest of the missive. I am sorry I have mislaid my copy of CAGE BIRDS containing his first letter, so that I am not able to give a really helpful reply to his query, as I have forgotten the details of it. However, if I can succeed in turning it up I will certainly do my best to help him in an early issue.

The Crested Canary Club Patronage.

SIR,—In addition to the societies mentioned in your last issue as applying for the Crested Canary Club's support, may I trespass on your courtesy in asking you to announce that the Long Eaton and District C.B.S. have since applied for same? The judge is Mr. R. Rhodes, and the date Dec. 15th. Also Newcastle-on-Tyne C.B.S. has applied; judge, Mr. Thomas Heath, date, Oct. 22nd and 23rd. In last week's report Mr. Robson's name was mentioned twice in the list of judges by a printer's error; it should have been Mr. J. Dobson in both cases. I also omitted to star the society with Mr. Roe for judge, he not being on the list of the Crested Canary Club judges. After this announcement I shall take the decision of my Committee as to which shows shall have the Club's support forthwith.

Some Hints to Would-be Hybrid Breeders.

SIR,—Mule and Hybrid breeding, in my idea, is one of the most interesting and fascinating of hobbies that anyone can have. Not only does it occupy one's time, but when one is having a walk in the country he looks first in one place and then in another for wild seeds for his birds. In trying to breed Hybrids between two Britishers the birds must be kept very quiet, and you must have any amount of patience, or it is of no use your trying. A cage for one pair should be no less than 36ins. in length, 15ins. in height, and from 10 to 12ins. from back to front. You want three doors to it at equal distances apart, as though it were a three-compartment cage; and your perches should be about 3ins. from the bottom. You want no top perches. When you get your birds, which should not be later than Dec. or Jan., pick those which have plenty of colour in them. If you can get size with colour and quality, so much the better; but the latter should come first, for size is not much without colour. They must be put together as soon as you get them, so as to enable them to get used to one another. They should be supplied with mixed wild seeds (which can be got from most dealers), in addition to the usual mixed seed, which should consist of Canary, rape, inga, teazle, hemp, linseed, maw, and sunflower. It is best to buy your seeds separate, and mix them as it suits you. For green food (before any is to be found outside), sow rape seed, mustard and cress in pots or boxes. A piece of sweet apple is also relished by the birds; also fresh, clean drinking water and a bath every day. Speaking of sunflower seed, I don't think there is anything a bird likes better once it has tasted it, and I know nothing that will tame a bird sooner than the offer of a kernel every time you go into the room. The way to do it is this: when you go to feed the birds crack them one and offer it them (talking to them all the while); then put it on the end of the perch. When you have done that a time or two they will not be long before they will take it from between your thumb and finger; in fact, they will look forward to your coming, so tame will they become, which is an important thing in Hybrid breeding. As Spring comes round you must look out for young dandelion leaves, chickweed, groundsel, buds of fruit trees (such as apple, black currants, cherry, damson, gooseberry); also hawthorn and blackthorn twigs are equally liked. Towards the end of March you must put a nest-box in at one end about five or six inches from the bottom, and surround it with heather, to make it look as natural as possible. Then get an old nest such as a Greenfinch's, and put it in the nest-box. Also give plenty of fine hay (cut in small lengths), moss and hair. Cover the cage bottom with good clean sawdust or peat about one or two inches deep, to prevent any eggs from getting broken, should any eggs be dropped from the perch. Put a flower pot saucer in, and keep it well supplied with good old mortar and gritty sand. Also put a piece of cuttlefish bone between the wires. By now there will be dandelion heads and shepherd's purse about, which can be given in abundance; in fact you can't give too much. Also give lettuce, radish, turnip, cabbage, mustard and cress seeds as tit-bits, also blight off rose trees. Fruit, too, should be given. From May onwards you must look every morning for any eggs that might be laid, and be very careful how you approach the cages, for it does not take much to upset the birds at this period. Should there be any eggs, transfer them at once to a hen Canary, which should be kept for the purpose to sit on and hatch them and to rear the young, if you should be fortunate enough to get that far. If the birds are kept in a spare room in the house, so much the better, for they like to be very quiet in the breeding season; but if they are kept in a place outside you should whiten the side windows over, and a notice should be pnt on the door with "Strangers Prohibited" written on, for it is surprising how the sight of a stranger upsets the birds. Don't be disheartened if you should not be successful right away, but with patience and perseverance you will win in the end, and say to yourself, "Ah! well, better luck next time."

WILLIAM LOVATT.

The Sexing of Young Canaries.

SIR,—A stray note I unearthed in a recent expedition through old issues, which will, I think, bear repetition, deals with the question of sexing young Canaries. In a nest of young Canaries, said the writer (or in words to that effect) it is easy to tell the sex. The cocks seem to have bolder eyes, and are generally distinguished by a greater depth of of colouring on top of head, the saddle, and on the butts of the wings. A sort of eyebrow formed of rich-coloured feathers also distinguishes them from the hens. In hens, he concludes, no such points are noticeable, they being paler than the cocks. Novices should look out for those points, and especially the rich eyebrow, when selecting the cocks—but, a word in your ear, do not dispose of all the remainder for hens until they have been given a chance to sing. Still, if the hint given should enable the beginner to make a more accurate guess sometimes, it will have served a useful purpose, and done no harm, providing one has taken the hint also about using discretion in the disposal of the supposed hens.

Who Won the Specials at Bathgate Show?

SIR,—Will you allow me space in your valuable paper to draw the attention of the Bathgate fanciers and others to the treatment I have received from the Secretary and President of that society regarding specials I won at the show held on January 16th? I won a points special, which I received along with prize money, and a statement that the other specials would follow. I received a note a few days after, asking if I would return the special prize cards, as there had been a mistake made somewhere. I did this, also sending my cage numbers along with them, to show they were rightly marked. A month passed and no word came. I sent a card inquiring about them, but no reply. After another month I wrote again, but still no reply. When another month had passed, I thought I would try the President, so I wrote giving him particulars about the specials; but even he has not had the courtesy to reply. Now, I trust the members or the other officials of the society will take it up, and see what has been the cause of this. The specials I won and have not received are: Special, No. 21, best in Classes 17 and 18; No. 24, best in Classes 19 and 20; No. 30, most points in Classes 24 and 25.

Proposed Linnet Singing Association for Manchester & Dist.

SIR,—We are desirous of forming the above-named Association, and a meeting will be held on Tuesday evening next, June 29, at the Boilermakers' Arms, Abbey Hey Lane, Openshaw, to commence at 8.0 p.m. prompt. Will all Linnet fanciers make a special effort to be present? On the following Saturday we propose having a contest, for which we have three good prizes guaranteed. This contest will be confined to those who attend on Tuesday evening.

A Black Goldfinch's Babies.

What Will They Be Like?

SIR,—I have taken CAGE BIRDS for many years, and have derived much pleasure and information from the reading of it. The following may interest some of my brother fanciers. I bought the black Goldfinch, which was exhibited in the rare-feathered class at the last Crystal Palace Show. I mated him with a sib-bred Yorkshire hen, but she deserted her two first nests, objecting, I think, to being parted from her spouse. So the last round I chanced him along with the eggs, and he has behaved like a perfect gentleman. This is the 14th day since the second egg was laid, and on looking this morning I found that already three out of the four eggs were hatched. Should they turn out anything out of the common I will write again.

Two Crests and a Cup at Far-away Cape Town.

SIR,—I would esteem it a great favour if you would give your opinion on the following; or would some of your English judges be kind enough to do so? At Cape Town an open show was held, and a Young Bird Class provided for, as follows:—Section G, Young Birds, Colonial Bred, season 1908-1909. Now, in this section a silver cup was given for best young Crested Norwich on Show, Classes 99, 100, 101. Class 99, Norwich, ticked, evenly-marked, or unevenly-marked, any colour Crest, three entries. Class 100, Norwich Green Crested, also three entries. Class 101, no entry. Now, in Class 99, the cock bird, a Dirty Grissley without a tail, and looking puffed out, was awarded first and the cup; while the cock bird in Class 100, a Foul Green with a good crest, wings and tail, and shown in a clean and good condition, was given a first prize only, although competing for the same cup. In your opinion which bird should have been awarded the cup? Having no birds in the show myself, I have no other object but that justice should be done, and that the best bird should win. I may also state that I saw the judge, and drew his attention to this Dirty Grissley bird, and asked him how old he thought the bird to be, as it looked about two or three years old, having scaley feet. He told me that the bird having been placed in the young bird class, all he had to do was to judge them in their class.

A NINE YEARS' SUBSCRIBER.

P.S.—I must congratulate you on CAGE BIRDS of May 1st, a splendid twopence worth.

(We are afraid that our opinion, given without seeing the birds, would be worthless. If any readers choose to comment on the matter, our columns are open to them.—EDITOR.)

A Beginner's Experiences of Foreign Birds.

SIR,—If my recounting of experiences as a foreign bird keeper be at all useful to would-be fanciers, I shall be only too pleased at having done so. I am a working man, but, like a great many, a lover of every sort of bird; and I have had a great many different kinds in my time. But, in company with others, I used to consider that, however much I should like to keep foreign birds, their price would prohibit me from doing so. Many a time have I looked at the beautiful Macaws in their cage in my governor's conservatory. I have admired their beautiful colours, and have thought how proud I should be to possess a pair of birds like them. But I used to say to myself, "If you can't fly at such high game as that, my boy, have a go at a smaller kind for a start." Well, first I bought an Indian Parrot. Poor Polly! Many weary hours I spent trying to teach her to talk, but it was all in vain. Still, she was a bird, and we all loved her. One morning, to my sorrow, I found poor Polly dead; and, leaving home shortly after, stopped all my ideas of bird keeping. But shortly after settling down again, I met a very old friend of mine, and found he was living quite close to me, so I naturally paid him a visit, and found him just beginning to construct an aviary. Of course, as soon as I saw his beautiful birds in their cages, awaiting the completion of his aviary, I was all red hot to become a foreign bird keeper. So I turned to and helped him to complete his aviary; and as a reward he gave me a pair of Zebra Finches, some Budgerigars, and a lot of good advice and instruction as to their keeping and management. He said also that he took in weekly a paper called CAGE BIRDS, so away I went to a newsagent and ordered it to be sent to me every week; and through the reading of this, and more especially through following the answers given to correspondents, I have been able to jog along without once having to ask a question. I do really think, by the bye, that if all fanciers would keep the parts of CAGE BIRDS which most concern their Fancy, they would not require to ask so many questions. My next venture, not having facilities for a large aviary like the one belonging to my friend, was to convert a Pigeon house into one. It was about 6ft. long by 4ft. high by 2ft. wide—very nice to look at with its wire bay window, and everything spick and span; but it was not a success, as I found out to my cost. I should like to say to all young beginners, make up your mind to have an aviary big enough for you to get quite inside; then you won't have the mortification of being wedged in a little doorway, with your birds popping over your shoulder and flying away out of sight for ever before you are able to get your 13 stone out of the doorway. I fancy I hear you say, "Pop young Tom inside." Yes, you might for once; but let a strong Budgerigar get a good grip of his finger, and I'll wager the next time he thinks you want him, the most you'll see of him will be his back in the distance. I don't know if the loss of birds affects many people like it does me, but when I lose any, I can tell you it takes all the edge off an otherwise healthy fancy. After a short time my friend left the neighbourhood, and I became the possessor of his aviary, and with the assistance of several friends it was removed bodily to my back garden. Now I will give you a description of it to help others. My place is 15ft. over all in length, 6ft. wide, and 7ft. high to ridge. Nine feet of it is an open flight at top, and the sleeping and breeding compartment is 6ft. square, with a good window in front. The aviary stands facing the south, back and west end is boarded up to 5ft.; front flight is made into a big wire bay, and the sleeping compartment is boarded, and then covered with corrugated iron. ⅝in. rough boards with the joints morticed are quite heavy enough for the woodwork. For the roof, the rafters are 3½in. by ¾in. on edge, and all the wirework is ½in. mesh. All roughed woodwork is coated outside with Carboline, which gives it a nice brown stain, and all the planed wood is painted green and white. The inside of flight I distemper with sage green, and inside the sleeping place with good strong limewash. I have a glass and wood feeder to hold a quarter peck each of millet and Canary seed. Now, one thing I wish to particularly impress on young beginners is to have no harbour for mice. I got a lot in my place once, and they made an awful mess, besides eating and spoiling the seed. To get rid of them I took out and caged my birds, and everywhere it was double inside I pulled down so that the mice could not get behind, and as they had burrowed through the floor I dug it up, laid down a lot of broken glass, and then concreted it. That stopped their little game, and no longer does my wife refuse to go in and shut the birds up in the evening for fear of mice. I have at the present time four pairs of breeding Budgerigars, and I have had 28 young ones in two rounds, and all nesting again. My opinion is that Budgerigars are capital birds to begin operations with, as they breed so freely. Give them plenty of chickweed, cuttlefish, and good sound seed, plenty of sea sand on the floor, any amount of branches and swings, good, clean water, with now and then a few drops of Parrish's, and double the quantity of husks that you have breeding pairs. Keep your curiosity well in hand so that you don't disturb them too much, and you cannot fail to do well. I like to introduce fresh blood every year if possible to keep them from inbreeding. Always, by the way, wire the windows of the sleeping place inside, and have a good ventilator. As I found I was so successful I launched out a bit farther the next year, and at the present time I have besides my Budgies, a pair of white Javas, and a Cockatiel (I'm going in for breeding these another year), a pair of Zebras, three or four Mannikins, and a Cut-throat. I have also turned in a pair of Canaries, which have bred me 12 young ones in a cage; and don't they enjoy themselves in the aviary! And what better occupation can a man have for his spare time than the care and attention of his pets, and after his work is done watch their interesting ways and habits? Though you may think it expensive at first, you'll find it not half so expensive as many so-called pleasures. The keeping of foreign birds, too, will become such a pleasure that you would not willingly be without it.

Peculiar Sites Selected by Birds.

SIR,—The following may be of interest to CAGE BIRD readers. It shows what peculiar sites are selected by some birds for their nests. On a new building in course of erection at Northwood, a Tomtit has built its nest in a puddock hole. The puddock had, of course, been taken out. In another hole a Linnet has nested and laid four eggs. The eggs I removed as the brickwork was being made good, and I have them at present under Canary hens. The nest I am keeping. Does any other reader know of a Linnet building in similar positions? A Robin also had a nest and four eggs in an old tin in the hedge close by. The hedge was cut down, but the tin was left standing on a briar where some one had thrown it, and had held fast about 5ft. from the ground. But I am sorry to say that at about the time the hatching was due some one took the eggs. I might say that men were working from morning till night sometimes within a foot of the nests and the sitting hens, but they seemed quite at home, and took very little notice of us, except to pick up the crumbs that were thrown for them.

The Song of the Linnet North and South.

SIR,—Seeing there are a lot of Linnets singing in the North of England, I should just like to give a few notes on the song of the Linnet, which may interest your readers. These notes may enlighten those who keep Linnets, and yet do not understand their song. In all cases of good singing the birds should start with what is known as "Tolic," and should finish with a "Weet." As follows:—"Tolic, tolic, hic, hic, quay, ter, weet"; "Tolic, tolic, lug, lug, cee, weet"; "Tolic, tolic, lug, chow, weet." Those three notes are good ones, and sound very nice if a bird sings them in a good key. The following song is, of course, not so nice as the first three: "Tolic, tolic, joey, ter, wissey"; "Tolic, tolic, gipsy weet, chow." There are dozens of different ways and styles I might mention; and if the North and Midland fanciers have got better Linnet songs than this they have some excellent ones, but I doubt it. From what I have heard of it, I should call it "fuze song." I only wish these birds were a bit nearer London, then fanciers would not be so free in offering £5, which I have seen done at different times, to make a match. They would here soon be accommodated, and would perhaps bite their fingers. I think in London there must be more Linnet fanciers and bird houses than in any other four towns put together; and I think it is little short of madness for people to call themselves Linnet kings, when we have people in London who have forgotten more than they will ever know about Linnets or their song either. I was pleased to see that last week, under the heading "Linnet-Singing at Leeds," "A Visitor" took exception to the bluff and bounce in connection with the £20 singing matches.

The Clashing of Show Dates in Scotland.

SIR,—In reply to "Club Member's" letter in your issue of June 19, may I be allowed to inform him that I have never left terra firma, but that he has certainly done a good lot of floundering about in deep water. He has shown plenty of bounce, seeing I never asked the way to the moon. "C.M." ought to try a balloon, or a flying machine, when perhaps he may discover a way to avoid the clashing of show dates. As to being convicted on my own statements, if "C. M." will read the correspondence over with an unbiased mind, he will see that it is he himself who is pretending not to see the point. I have never asked a free licence for Forfar, but he has shown a desire to get one for Perth or Kelty. And yet he tells us we have a legal right to fix a date to suit. As regards the soundness of his argument being proven by the fact that Forfar have seen their error, have I not already told "C. M." (in my last letter) that I saw the mistake we had made in not noticing that Kelty had altered their date as well as Perth (the week before his letter appeared in your columns), and that I intended bringing same to the notice of the members at the next meeting? I deny the motive "C. M." seems so desirous of imputing to us, that we intended from the first to fight Perth and Kelty for the date. We have never attempted to usurp any other society's date. As to the advertising of our date for 1910, I have already warned the above societies of our intention to hold one next year as near to our former date as we can. As to not hurting your feelings, "C. M.," I think it would have been showing a more fancier-like spirit to have written me, drawing my attention to the matter, than to have rushed into print as you have done on the present occasion.

Some Substitutes for Egg-bread.

How to Make Egg and Colour Cakes.

SIR,—Judging by the number of questions one hears and reads about time-saving substitutes for the orthodox hard-boiled egg and crushed biscuit food, a few words on home-made substitutes may be welcomed. This is a recipe for a colour-feed cake, which is both a substitute for egg food and colour food, the necessary colouring agents being added to the cake during the initial processes of manufacture, and baked in it, so that all one has to do when the birds are moulting is to cut off a piece of cake and either give it the birds between the wires, or to crush it into crumbs and give it in the egg drawers. Probably this same recipe might be made to supply a tolerably efficient substitute for egg food during the breeding season, by omitting the colour agent, decreasing the sugar about one-half, adding two extra eggs, and using rather less butter. The "colour cake" recipe is as follows: Ingredients—1lb. flour, ¼lb. soft sugar, ½lb. best pure tasteless pepper, a teaspoonful of baking powder, 2ozs. butter, and two fresh eggs (a saltspoonful of salt might doubtless be added with advantage). Process: Mix flour, sugar, pepper and baking powder (and salt, if used) thoroughly together in an earthen or china bowl. Beat the eggs well in a separate vessel, and add the butter, previously melted, and blend together again. Now add this to the flour mixture, and work all well together, adding a sufficient quantity of milk to make a dough of the proper consistency for baking. Then bake in a greased tin in a sharp oven. It will be ready for use as soon as the "newness" has passed off—probably on the following day, or certainly on the second day after baking. If kept in a cold, dry place it will keep in good condition for weeks. In most cases it will doubtless prove the best course to seek the assistance of the feminine powers that be in compounding the cake and baking it, as they will be less likely to make a "terrible concoction" of it than a mere man. Their aid will be still more acceptable in preparing this suggested modified form for general use as a substitute for the usual egg food. Ingredients: 1lb. flour, ¼lb. soft sugar, one tablespoonful finely ground oatmeal, one tablespoonful finely ground maize flour, 1oz. butter or beef dripping, a teaspoonful of baking powder, a pinch of salt, and four new-laid eggs. Process: The method of procedure as before-mentioned must be carried out here, using just a sufficient quantity of milk to bring the dough to the proper consistency. The only difference lies in the modification of the materials used, in order to make the whole more generally useful for the growth and development of the young stock. The young beginner who is most anxious to take advantage of every possible time and labour-saving method must be cautioned, however, against making radical changes as long as his stock is thriving and doing well upon the system in use. When a change of this kind is premeditated, always endeavour to bring it about by degrees. This is the only safe and sound principle to act upon. Never make a complete change all at once in one's methods.

My Experiences with - - - the Yorkshire Canary.

By H. SWEETMAN.

A Lecture recently delivered before the North London C.B.A.

At a recent meeting of the North London C.B.A. there was a large attendance of members and friends to hear a lecture on the Yorkshire Canary, and Mr. Sweetman's remarks were enthusiastically received. The Secretary announced that Mr. Crisp had written to say he was unable to attend. Mr. Sweetman had, however, kindly volunteered to give a paper and to open a discussion. Mr. Sweetman said: I feel I make a very poor substitute for Mr. Crisp. As you are aware, Mr. Crisp possesses a talent which I do not profess to have. However, I will do my best to give you my paper on the Yorkshire Canary.

A Fascinating Hobby.

Having been asked by our secretary to give you a paper on the Yorkshire Canary, I do so willingly, but I trust you will "let me down lightly" if my views do not quite coincide with your own. I would like to impress upon you that I do not wish to pose as an authority on the Yorkshire. My length of experience may appear to be a long one, but I am convinced I have still a lot to learn It is now eight or nine years ago since I first took up this fascinating variety of the Canary kingdom. I term it fascinating because there are so many points to be carefully watched in the selection and mating up of the Yorkshire; and to breed a real good specimen is no easy task.

To those about to take up the hobby of Canary breeding, I can with confidence recommend the Yorkshire as being hardy and prolific breeders. This last five years my average number reared is about 75 birds from 12 or 14 hens, that is nearly six per hen, which I consider by no means bad.

It is surprising what progress has been made, particularly in the South of England, during the last four or five years, and in my humble opinion it takes a better bird now to gain premier honours than it did this short period back (at least, this has been my experience).

The Yorkshire, as most of you are aware, is a bird of position; therefore, it is essential they should have plenty of head room, and for the purpose of giving the young birds a good impression of standing up, from the time they leave the parents I use a Yorkshire show cage for a nursery cage, and a capital nursery it makes. The young birds keep far cleaner in such than they would in some of the nursery cages on the market at the present time.

The Length Considered.

I do not propose going into lengthy details of all the points which tend to make up a good show bird, but to deal with some of the principal points. Taking length first, I am of opinion that many fanciers—particularly some of the novices—seek this one good property at the expense of many of the finer points: for some of these big over-length birds which I have seen, have large, flat heads with broad skulls, wide shoulders, coarse and open in feather. These are bad points, and should be avoided as far as possible. I would sooner breed with a bird under standard length, viz., 6¾ inches, providing it had all the good properties which make a show Yorkshire, than I would with a bird as just described. Of course, we must have length, but at the same time other good points with it.

Some four or five years ago I bought a very big yellow, measuring over 7½ inches. The bird was a cock, and had a very big frame; he was a bit flat in head and open in feather. Prior to the introduction of this one, I had a small stud of medum-sized birds, of good quality, and having nice round heads, with which I was then able to do a fair amount of winning. I paired this big yellow to a fair-sized buff hen about 6¼ inches long. From these two birds I reared seven cock birds, most of which I kept for my own breeding purposes the following year, owing to their being possessed of fine length, which at that time I was trying to produce. I may say that most of these birds had the same defect as the father, only rather more pronounced, i.e., flat heads and open feathers.

I paired these cock birds to the best hens I had at my disposal; that season nearly every bird I produced had that same bad point of flat heads, and, unfortunately, I have still the taint of this very big bird in some of my stock at the present time, although I have been trying hard to rectify it this last three years. The introduction of this big bird was the means of spoiling my stud rather than improving it. I obtained length, but it was at the expense of quality, and the sacrifice of that nice, small round head which is another most important point in the Yorkshire. I do not blame the gentleman from whom I purchased this big bird, as he sent me two birds from which to select. The other was a smaller, more typical one, with nice round head, and of good quality feather, barely 6¾ inches in length, and had been in the money at one of the leading shows in Yorkshire; but that extra length smote me. Had I kept the smaller of the two, I should have been 10s. better off in pocket and most probably without those undesirable flat heads. I may say the price I paid for this big yellow cock was 50s.

Speaking of heads, I would like to impress upon the novice in particular when pairing to make sure and not put two flat-headed birds together; for once you get these flat-headed birds into your stud you will find it will take you longer to get rid of them than it did to get them. There are many birds put back on the show bench with this defect. This being the first point to catch the judge's eye, too much attention cannot be paid to it.

Concerning Position and Breed.

The next most important point is position and breed. A bird without these properties can hardly be termed "Yorkshire," for no matter how long a bird may be, with fine quality of feather and other good points, if he does not stand well up, you will find that he will not catch the judge's eye. A Yorkshire across the perch we do not want. Some people say train them to stand up, but all the training you give them will not give your birds that natural position which all lovers of the Yorkshire like to see. This position must be bred for; therefore, it is necessary both cock and hen should be possessed of this most important property. But if you are unable to have it in both birds, by all means have it in the hens, as the hen, you will find, plays an important part in transmitting this feature to the offspring.

I do not think too much care can be taken in the selection of same; they should be as near perfection as possible; that is, have good quality feather, style, position, and be well up on the leg, showng plenty of thigh, with tails carried right bang up to the tips of the wings (such hens as these are not easily obtained, not even small ones). I do not mind how small they are if I can obtain these good qualities, but the bigger the better.

Now, I am of opinion that a Belgian bird is a valuable asset to a Yorkshire breeder, for the purpose of maintaining such essential properties as breed and position, but I cannot speak with authority, as I have not so far introduced such a bird into my room for this purpose. I saw more than one bird at the last Palace show with very pronounced features of this variety, and one bird in particular was shown by one of the leading Yorkshire judges of the north, which bird I was informed was a first cross of the Belgian. He was a bird of rare length, fine position, and full of breed, a bird I should much liked to have possessed. Doubtless, great care must be exercised in pairing the progeny of this cross, owing to the Belgian being of peculiar formation, possessing a snaky head, thin neck and length of feather—all of which are bad points in a Yorkshire. Therefore, until I have experimented with the use of the Belgian I am unable to say whether the advantages gained outweigh the disadvantages also gained. (To be continued).

Wild Bird Life.

Habits of the White-throats.

From the time that the spring showers and sunshine aid the bursting of the buds, until a wealth of June roses ramble across the footpath, the sweet bubbling song of the Greater Whitethroat can be heard everywhere. The song is a passionate, vehement repetition of a few sweet notes, rendered under considerable excitement, with swelling throat and quivering wings. He chooses no particular spot for his performance. He may be clinging to the stalk of the scented meadow sweet, swaying on a bramble at the top of the hedge, or while on the wing flitting from bush to bush. The Greater Whitethroat is the commonest of our summer migrants. He is to be seen everywhere in the garden, along the dusty roadside, in every hedgerow, and across the wide open common. He cannot be passed over, for he is such an excitable little fellow, that he is always forcing himself upon our notice. The Whitethroated Warbler comes to us in April or early in May, and stays until the harvest is gathered in, and even until chill October bids him begone, for insect life has passed, and only the autumn berries remain for the laggards. Flitting from bush to bush he reaches the coast, and passes to his winter home with a host of others. In the early spring, when the Whitethroats arrive, they return to their old haunts. The small green caterpillars so obnoxious to pedestrians, are its principal food, and of these it destroys great quantities. Watch him carefully while he is feeding the young, one can see that his beak is simply crammed with them. No doubt the destructive aphides and insects of various kinds are at times devoured. The Whitethroat is so useful that it should get all the protection we can give it. During the summer months he is to the bird-lover a continual source of pleasure. We love to listen to his sweet bubbling song, to watch his dainty fluttering ways, to search the long grass, nettles, and rank herbage, for his nest, and wonder at its flimsy construction, and admire the delicate colour of the contents.

Dirty Hawks.

Kestrel Hawks are not patterns of domestic habits; they are too lazy to build their own nests, generally appropriating that of an old Crow or Magpie, or at times a Sparrow Hawk's. And this they keep far from clean, and by the time the young ones are able to fly it is a mass of castings and filth.

Hunting Hawks.

Some of our Hawks have been known to follow the track of a fast train, and catch any small birds that have been disturbed. It is said that in India this method of obtaining a meal is frequently practised by the larger hunting Hawks, for in the hot, dry season, birds lie close and are not easily disturbed.

Precocious Nestlings.

Many waders and ground builders have no nesting duties to perform after the young ones are hatched. Such birds as young Sandpipers, Curlews, and Plovers run about directly they are born, many of them with part of the shell still adhering to the soft down. For this reason a Pheasant will sometimes desert unhatched eggs and go off with the early youngsters.

Reaping the Reward.

The kindly disposed bird-lovers who feed the feathered visitors to their gardens during the severe wintry weather, are now reaping the benefit of their kindly ways. The rose bushes and fruit trees are attacked by numbers of tiny caterpillars and various insects, which if left unmolested do considerable damage. The tiny Tits deal successfully with these pests, and one can watch them hunting over each branch and leaf almost minutely, occasionally fluttering from tree to tree, so that each in turn gets attention, and where the pest exists to any extent the birds will return every few minutes to collect food for the ever hungry youngsters.

By Claude St. John.
A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

Insurance Expert finds Amazing Flaws in the Federation Insurance Scheme.

We have submitted the insurance scheme, lately floated by the London Federation of Cage Bird Societies (the objects of which have been fully dealt with in our two last issues) to an insurance expert, and his report, revealing certain grave flaws, is given below.

It is with mingled feelings of regret and surprise that we find the said report to be in more ways than one unfavourable to the Federation's scheme—regret that it should be in any way necessary to adopt an attitude of pessimism towards a scheme which we feel it will be readily admitted is so calculated, in principle, to be of benefit to bird-keepers and exhibitors; surprise, inasmuch that it never occurred to us such a body of able fanciers as is comprised in the Council of the Federation would venture to become sponsor for a scheme of such importance as this without feeling their way carefully and availing themselves of that expert advice which the successful floating of it demands. Yet a perusal of the report printed below would seem to show that the Council has neither taken steps to put themselves and their scheme right with the law, nor with the business aspect of the matter.

Difficulties beset all pioneers, however, and no doubt those at present bestrewing the path of the Federation are not incapable of being cleared away. Any loss of time and money involved, though, is not so much to be feared as loss of confidence by fanciers in the prospects and possibilities of the scheme they have fathered; we trust it may not come to that.

In a future issue we shall hope to have the legal aspect of the Scheme thoroughly examined by a competent legal authority; also to continue the notes upon it, written by Mr. Weston, from the fancier's point of view.

Some Points from an Insurance Expert.

Appended are the comments which the expert in insurance to whom we submitted the Rules and "Certificate of Insurance" has been good enough to make respecting certain points.

The Final Decision of the Council.

On the certificate of insurance is printed the proviso that: "In the event of any dispute arising in connection with this insurance, the decision of the Council shall in all cases be final." In my opinion this would not stand good in law. The Federation enters into a contract with a fancier, and accepts a premium from him, and they cannot place themselves outside the common law—i.e., it seems to me it would be held that they cannot say, in effect, to the fancier: "You shall pay us money to cover a certain liability, but we shall reserve to ourselves the right as to whether we discharge that liability or not." In my opinion, as they accept a premium, they cannot reserve the decision of any claim to themselves.

Further, the person taking out the insurance does not agree to permit of this. It will be noticed that he signs to "abide by the rules printed hereon." But nowhere is it embodied in these "rules" that the decision of the Council shall be final! Even if this omission were rectified, however, there still remains the legal aspect of the case to be got over.

To Prevent Over-insurance.

I do not see any rule to preclude the possibility of over-insurance, or to provide that evidence of value shall be supplied in the event of a claim. What is to prevent a bird of 10s. actual value being insured for £1, or £5, by the owner of it? Insurance, it must be remembered, is never intended to be a source of profit to the insured, and only the actual value of any article or articles should be covered by insurance. To put a case in point: a man may have his stock insured for £100, and his premises be burnt down. But the company need not pay £100; they can require him to put in a list of the articles destroyed, with their values, and if the latter totals £30, that is all they pay out to the insured party.

Federation's Right to Recover.

Another point of particular importance, it seems to me, lies in the absence of any subrogation clause—that is, a clause providing for the turning over to the Federation of the right to recover any damages they may pay out (if recoverable, of course) from the party or parties responsible for the said damage. For instance, we will suppose a bird value £5 to be killed whilst on a railway journey, and that provable negligence has been responsible for the mishap. The Federation pays out the claim of £5 to the insured party. Clearly they then ought to be in a position to proceed against the railway company for the recovery of the value of the dead bird. There is, however, no provision made for this being done. It is likely that upon the settlement of a claim they could demand that all rights and remedies should be transferred to them but unless made clear in the rules it would be bound to lead to disputes, and all disputes are expensive. What is desirable is a rule subscribed to by the insured party that any right of recovery against a third party shall be vested in the Federation, and that any amount recovered from the said party shall become the property of the Federation.

What is the "Average?"

In the case of a number of birds being sent out insured, and one or more dying, it is stated that compensation will be paid only on an "averaged amount of the insurance." But it is not stated whether this average is on the number of the birds or on their total value. Presumably it is on the number of birds sent out: that is, if four birds were sent away insured for £8, and one were to be killed, the Federation would pay out £2 as the "average" value. But the bird lost might conceivably be the least valuable of the consignment say, one intended for a 10s. selling class, and for this bird value on the face of it for 10s., £2 would be paid to the party taking out the insurance. If, on the other hand, the bird was the most valuable, then the compensation might be utterly inadequate as the following suppositious case will show.

A fancier sends four birds, value respectively (1) £5 (2) £1 10s. (3) £1 (4) 10s., and insures them for their total value, which is £8. In the event of the first being killed the compensation is inadequate, but with either of the others a profit is made.

It is in cases like this where the risk and the insurance is not clearly defined that disputes are absolutely certain to arise.

Penalty for Evading Stamp Duty.

A very serious omission of those responsible for the drawing up of this scheme may be the overlooking of the manner in which the Stamp Act bears upon it. Evasion of the provisions of this Act entails serious monetary fines at the option of the officials of Somerset House, and ignorance of the law (as is well known) cannot claim to count as an excuse. Any contract of insurance on which a premium is paid must bear upon it an Inland Revenue stamp, of a value which varies according to circumstances (in this case it would seem that every certificate used under the Federation's scheme ought to be franked with a penny Revenue stamp), or an arrangement must be made with the officials at Somerset House to pay an agreed amount quarterly on the total premiums received (in this connection no doubt five per cent.) Neither of these things, apparently, has been done, and I understand that a number of books of certificates have already been issued in which case the Federation has become liable to pay such fine as may be imposed by Somerset House. My advice is that the responsible officials of the Federation place the facts of the case before the Inland Revenue authorities at once, with an apology for the no doubt unwitting transgression, when in all probability they will be mercifully dealt with.

An Opinion.

Having been asked for an opinion, I must at once say that I consider the Federation's scheme will prove to be unworkable as a commercial proposition. Whether it can be successfully worked (after being put into proper shape) by fanciers for fanciers is another matter, and I do not pretend to an inside knowledge of the Fancy, except that I am aware that the insurance of dogs has turned out to be more-or-less unworkable. The routine work promises to be very heavy, and probably a burden, if such a scheme is at all widely taken up. Then the means of protection against possible fraudulent and exaggerated claims are necessarily slender; even the means of identification at hand in the case of the dog Fancy are lacking here.

"Simply Amazing."

To sum up: It is simply amazing that able men should draw up and float a scheme of this nature without apparently deeming it necessary to consult someone versed in the essentials which go to the making of a workable insurance scheme, and someone versed in the law to put them right on the legal aspects of the matter.

Exactly what the latter may be it is not for me to say. I may remark, however, that a Bill now before the House of Commons will, if passed, prevent any company, federation, or what not, from embarking on an insurance scheme without depositing a lump sum of £20,000 with the Treasury as some guarantee that it will carry out its promises. Further, I am not sure how far birds may be considered insurable property; has it not been held by a Judge, for instance, that a man has no title to consider British birds as "property"?—that they are ferœ naturæ?; in which case they would not come within the category of insurable "property." It seems to me that the best advice I can give to the Federation of London Cage Bird Societies is that they shall suspend the operations of their scheme until it has been examined from the standpoint of both insurance and law. In any case, let them remember Somerset House.

York C.B.S.

The members and their wives to the number of 24, on June 16th had a delightful drive through Buttercrambe Woods. The char-a-banc was provided by Messrs. Myton and Sons. The party left headquarters at 6.30, and went by way of Malton Road through the beautiful woods. Here a halt was made for half-an-hour for the party to ramble at will, and see the country. A restart was made through Stamford Bridge, Hensby, and home, which was reached by about 9.30 p.m., everybody having enjoyed a delightful evening's drive.—A. WAUD, hon. secretary.

West Bromwich and Dis. C.B.S.

The society held its first cycle run and ramble on June 13th, to Woodgate, near Stoke Prior, Bromsgrove. It turned out "great," as far as weather and enjoyment went, but was very disappointing in regard to the number who turned up, as we only mustered eight members. We were very sorry, too, not to have the company of our secretary, Mr. Duffield, through illness; he has not enjoyed the best of health for the past two or three months. Woodgate is an ideal place for an outing. Here one has the run of all the fields and orchards around belonging to Mr. Biddle, who catered for us. His home at Woodgate is a typical farmhouse and up-to-date, the country around being grand. I have no doubt the good people would do the same for any other society. Our meeting place was New Inns, Handsworth, at 9.30. We arrived at our destination punctually at 12 noon, our scheduled time. The first thing after putting our machines up was a ramble through the fields to observe the bird life there. The first find was by Mr. Viles, a nest of four young Chaffinches about two weeks old. After a good inspection by the members they were placed back quite securely. Then Mr. Jennings found a Long-tailed Tit's nest, but it contained no young. The nest itself was one of the most interesting finds during our ramble. It was made up chiefly of leaves intermixed with hairs and mosses, and made up similar to a cocoanut in shape, with a small hole around the one side about one-third the way down. A Lesser Whitethroat's nest was also found, but this had no eggs or young. Mr. Andrews discovered a Thrush's nest (no eggs), Mr. Carter a Blackbird's, and Mr. Cooper another Blackbird's (no eggs in these). We were very disappointed at this stage of our ramble in finding so many empty nests; it looked very very much as if they had been robbed. The next find of any note was that of Mr. Dunkley's, some well-fledged young Hedge Accentors, but we could not discover the nest. Messrs. Cooper and Andrews both found a Blackbird's nest with four eggs in each; and Mr. Cooper found a Brown Linnet's nest. Mr. Andrews' next find was a Hedge Accentor's nest, with no young, however, and Mr. Beck found a Chiff-Chaff's nest, but the young flew away on our going to examine it. A Corn Bunting's nest was found, but had no eggs. The most interesting part of our outing was our dinner, and that was well got through, as we all appeared to have fairly good appetites, and got through a fine joint of beef with vegetables, etc. We did justice to it, too. "What about the cider and the pie?" you had better ask some of the members of the West Bromwich and Dis. C.B.S. After dinner we went for a lounge in the orchard. A Greenfinch's nest was discovered containing five eggs, and Mr. McDonald found a Whitethroat's nest with 3 eggs in it. By means of a ladder which we came across we were enabled to inspect a hole in the stump of an old tree. The hole was perfectly round, and was undoubtedly the work of a Woodpecker. Next was a find by Mr. Jennings—a nest with 6 Greenfinch's eggs, which would probably hatch in a day or two. We all appreciated our tea very much. The whole of the arrangements were in the hands of Mr. Carter, to whom our enjoyment was due. After tea a very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to our host and hostess for the manner in which we were looked after, also a very hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Carter for his valuable assistance.—DUFFIELD AND JENNINGS, hon secs.

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insistedupon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

Free Money-Saving Catalogue.

There you will find the best Flight Cages, Nursery Cages, Appliances of every description, Seeds of the very finest quality; in fact, everything that can be found in one dozen other places together. The cages are not an imitation lot, cribbed from somebody else's ideas, nor do they possess names that are taken from other people's catalogues; when this has to be done, it tells you plainly what the sellers and their goods must be made of, otherwise there would be no necessity to resort to such mean, dirty practices. NOTE: These imitators will in future be stopped by legal process, as liberties with my patent rights have now been taken. This Money-Saving Catalogue of mine contains more matter than all the others published put together. There is not so much blank paper, just got up to make it appear to have size, but it is crammed full of matter from cover to cover. Every fancier living should see it.

YORKSHIRE C.C. OF SCOTLAND

First feather show, held on June 26th, in the Good Templars' Hall, Ingram Street, Glasgow. Mr. Charles Campbell judged, and the members were delighted at the efficient manner in which he placed the awards. The gold medal was won by Mr. J. B. Paterson (Ayr), with a clear buff, the bird being well worth its place. The novice medal was won by Mr. W. Hyndford (Glasgow), also with a clear buff. Mr. J. B. Paterson also won special for best pink-eyed bird, and special most points, Mr. T. Penman winning special for second most points. The specials; numbering 14 in all, were well distributed. A special meeting was held at close of show, to grant patronage for the coming season, and out of ten clubs applying eight were successful, these being: City of Glasgow, Kelty, Ayr C.B.S., Kilmarnock, Glasgow and West, Dundee, Alexandra, and Aberdeen.

WESTERN COUNTIES O.S.

The second nest feather show was held at Plymouth on June 23rd, when a record number of birds were staged. It is very gratifying to the officers and committee that the members evince so much interest in the exhibitions, and this augurs well for the success of the annual open show on Oct. 19th and 20th. This is the jubilee year of the W.C.O.S., and up-to-date has easily outstripped any previous year both in the interest of the members and the number of birds shown. The show received an entry of 129 birds, being 20 more than were staged at the May meeting. Yorkshires had 23 entries in two classes, and are showing a decided advance as compared with past years. Mr. Clarke's team were greatly admired, but he was closely pressed by Messrs. Jewell and Woodley. In Norwich Messrs. Garl and Spillman took premier honours, with birds of considerable promise, and W. C. Dart (chairman of the society) must be congratulated on breeding a really promising specimen in the marked buff, which stood 2nd in his class. Crests and Crestbreds totalled 18, Mr. Ryder again doing well. Messrs. Dart and Ryder exhibited good specimens of Border Fancies, a new variety for the W.C.O.S. In Mules, W. Rowe won with a high coloured yellow of good size, a bird that will be heard of again. The British and Foreign classes, which a year ago seemed to be lost to the society, again showed a welcome revival, and the 11 Goldfinches on view would not have disgraced any show in the country. Mr. Pridham's winner is sure, with care, to make a name for him elf. The third and last show of the season will be held July 21st, when the challenge cups will be presented, the leading exhibitors in these competitions being: Yorks., Mr. Jewell; Norwich, Mr. Garland; Crest, Mr. Ryder; A.O.V. Can., Mr. Ryder and Mr. Dart (equal); Mules, Mr. Rowe; British and Foreign, Mr. Large. The judges were (Yorkshire) Mr. Spillman, (Norwich) Mr. S. Deeble, (Crests) Mr. Dart, (other classes) Mr. Snell.

RUGBY AND LUTTERWORTH C.B. SOCIETIES (Combined).

The First Nest Feather Show was held at the Town Hall, Lutterworth, on June 26th, when over 40 birds were staged for competition. Great disappointment was felt at the Rugby entries not turning up better, only 7 birds putting in an appearance; but it is hoped they will get their specials ready for another show and give us keen competition. Special mention must be made of the birds staged by Mr. H. Dickens, who took 4 firsts and 4 seconds. Of five classes, the British bird class was the largest with 12 entries, some nice birds being staged. The winning Hawfinch of Mr. Westley's was shown in first-class condition. Several comments were heard of the latter being shown against small Britishers, as it did not give these a chance. Visitors to the show were not so numerous as was expected, but taken all round the members have every reason to be satisfied. Special mention must also be made of the way in which the judge, Mr. J. A. Tyler (Leicester) made his awards, meeting as he did, with satisfaction from all concerned. Disappointment was felt at the entries of Mr. E. Labraham arriving after judging.

QUEEN'S PARK AND DIS. C.B.A.

Held in Emmauuel Hall, Harrow Road, on June 26th. A well lighted room, convenient staging, the most acceptahle facilities for judging, with the courteous, kindly and careful attention of capable stewards and the prompt, genial, business-like and able supervision of the excellent hon. secretary, Mr. J. C. Birch, all combined to bring ahout one of the most successful young bird shows the association has ever held. The entries numbered 20 more than last year, and this largely in Canaries, and not by the heavy padding of the total by British birds, sometimes done at young bird shows. It was an entry gratifying to the secretary, and to all concerned, especially as we are hearing such doleful experiences of the breeding season in many quarters. The attendance was numerous, and congratulations were many on the merits of the birds, and the gradual but sure growth of the association. The latter result is largely due to the popularity of the hon. secretary, who spares neither trouble nor lahour in the interests of the Association, and is held in high esteem by the general body of the membership. Norwich, both in the champion and novice sections, were a grand lot. The association is a hot-hed of good Yorkshires, hy reason largely of the membership of those well-known and highly successful hreeders, Messrs. Hawes Bros. And there were more than one of their pupils "in the fray," with commendahle success. The quality was AI, and the birds of splendid promise. In all there were no less than 63 young Yorkshires, in six classes. British were a nice collection. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged. There were numerous specials, and there were won hy Messrs. Battison, Baker, Hawes Bros., Holmes, and Easterling.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

Table show of young birds, held in Lockhart's Cafe, 65, Grainger Street, Newcastle, on June 16th. We joined hands this month with the Northern B.B. and M.C., and the combined show was a splendid success. But, Mr. Bertram, where have those 2/9 winners gone we had the pleasure of seeing last year? Dare I say it? Their ahsence was compensated for hy the extra turn-out in Yorkshires which numhered 29 in the two classes. Mr. Slack, who judged, spoke highly of the winning ticked bird. Mr. Shepherd was to have judged, but was prevented from doing so.

BARTON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

First feather show held on June 14th, in the Oddfellows Hall, and although it was not an astounding success, owing to the rival attraction of the horse show, the Society has every reason to feel satisfied with the result. Nine birds were entered for competition, from three members only:—1, Oldridge, Cl. Yell.; 2, 3, Sempers, ditto, and Ticked Buff. The awards gave general satisfaction, and Mr. Herbert Gammidge was very warmly thanked by the members for his kindness in acting as judge. A class was also formed for British birds, which Mr. Oldridge judged, and his awards were as follows:—1, Fester, grey Linnet; 2, Weston, ditto; and 3, W. Sempers, Goldfinch. The show bench was tastefully decorated with plants, which were very kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. H. Haxley. Mr. Smith (brother of Mr. T. Smith, of South Ferriby), paid a visit to the show and warmly complimented the Society on the quality of the birds staged.

STOCKPORT B.F.A.

Nest Feather Show, held at "The Boar's Head Hotel," on June 17th and 18th. Entries numhered 150, and considering the poor start made by some of the members in hreeding operations, the entry must be considered satisfactory. Still, it is about 80 birds less than at last year's young bird show. The quality of the exhibits reflects great credit on the hreeders, as some very good birds were on view. Mr. S. Booth won the Championship Cup with a team of four fine Yorkshires, gaining 23 points, closely followed by Mr. J. E. Davies, the holder of the cup, with 22 points. The President's prizes were won hy Mr. W. Lee, in champion classes, with a fine team of Lancashires, and in amateur section hy Mr. J. # Country Rambles

Leicester & Leicestershire Hand-in-Hand C.B.S.

The annual ramble took place on June 13th, when about 20 made the journey to Pailton, near Rugby, per Great Central Railway. The day was gloriously fine, and all were in the best of spirits. On arrival at our hosts', Mr. and Mrs. Dickins, we met the members of the Coventry O.S., and after greeting all sat down for dinner, which was served in Mr. Dickins good old style. Plenty to eat and drink is evidently his motto. After dinner we all went under the ordeal of facing the camera, so that we might have some memento of the visit. Afternoon was spent in rambling in the woods and banks, and nests of young and eggs were found in goodly numbers, many species of our British birds being located. We assembled again for tea, to which ample justice was done, and the remainder of our time was spent in birdy discussion. Before settling several knotty points, we had to bid good-bye and make tracts for home, which was reached about 10.30, everyone being well pleased at the success attending the outing.—C. W. WALTON AND C. DRAPER.

From the Egg to the Show Bench.

NORWICH CANARIES

HOW TO BREED, MANAGE AND EXHIBIT

By C. A. HOUSE.

The young fancier is told all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and as an exhibitor on the Show Bench. This work, which has been written in a plain, practical manner, contains much of untold value to lovers of the Norwich Canary.

The chapters on "Forming A Stud" and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book many times over.

In the Courts.

Robbing the Ravens.

For some years Ravens have been protected under the Wild Birds Protection Act by order of the Carnarvonshire County Council, and at Llandudno Petty Sessions, on June 21st, William Jones and Jane Isabella Jones, who reside on the Great Orme's Head, were prosecuted for having had young Ravens in their possession. The male defendant pleaded guilty to having been in possession of three of the creatures, and the female to having had one bird. Three or four are the usual number of a hatch. The defendants stated that they were not aware it was an offence to take the Ravens, which, on the the instructions of the officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, they took back to the place whence they had caught them, and there let them go. The justices, accepting their plea that they were ignorant of the law, dismissed the case on payment of costs.

Taking Young Thrushes.

At the Leicester County Police Court, on June 23rd, before E. R. Norman and S. F. Stone, Esqrs., Edward Hubbard (15), dyer's labourer, Hughenden Drive, Leicester, was summoned for an offence under the W.B.P.A., for having five young Thrushes in his possession on June 12th.

P.C. Stapleton said that on June 12th he was riding along a road in Kirby, when he saw defendant come out of a field carrying a bundle. He called to defendant to stop, and the latter ran at him, knocking him off his bicycle. They fell to the ground together. On getting up witness found that defendant had in the bundle five young Thrushes and a young Blackbird. He asked defendant if he was going to take them home, and he said no, he was going to take them to a dealer in Leicester; he daren't take them home. The boy said that the constable threw him on the ground and kicked him. The constable denied this, saying they both fell to the ground together when defendant ran into him. The Chairman: If I threw a policeman off his bicycle I should expect something. Defendant: I didn't throw him off his bicycle. The Chairman. But we have evidence that you did.

Supt. Bowley said he did not believe a word of the charge against the constable. The magistrates would see the date that the offence took place, and not a word about the assault had been said till that morning. The constable was in the teens of years of service, and there had never been the suspicion of a report against him. The Chairman (to Mr. Stone): You and I have known the constable for many years, and we have every reason to believe he has always told us the truth. Defendant admitted that he knew he was doing wrong, and he was ordered to pay the costs, 9s. 6d.

Under the White Rose.

BRADFORD City O.S. are having a ramble to-day (Saturday), and are extending a hearty welcome to all fanciers (whether members of their society or not) to join them. They are to meet opposite the Midland Station at 3, and then take car to Nab Wood, where they have invited the Bingley members to meet them, proceeding from thence via Cottingley Bridge through the woods to Harden. Tea will be arranged for, and a most enjoyable time is expected, providing, of course, that the weather, which during the last ten days or so has been very unseasonable, takes it into its head to let us have a little of what it should be at this time of the year.

THE majority of fanciers have suffered to a very great extent by the bad weather of the last week, the losses being very heavy, more particularly amongst the new hatched birds—rain, thunder, lightning, cold, and last, but not least, miserable, dark evenings, with the birds going to roost quite two hours before the regular time for this part of the season, with the result that youngsters have been found dead in nest. Then the thunder, they say, is apt to kill the young birds in the shell, especially if they are within a day or two of hatching. Better luck, however, next time.

MEMBERS' Shows were very numerous last week-end, and in the majority of them the entries were fairly numerous, and some good birds were to be seen. At Gt. Horton Good Intent, the Clear Yellow winner at the week's previous open show put in an appearance, and secured premier honours again in its class, and several other smart birds were to be seen. Also at Wibsey a good show was to be seen. The Cinnamon Marked Yellow winner at Gt. Horton was on view here, and if anything looked better than it did the week previous. And several other birds will no doubt be heard of later. They are not really first feather show birds, but have shape, style, etc., and with a good moult should make up well. By the way, I heard some time ago that several prominent members were in training for playing at bowls, and then, when fit, they intended to throw out a challenge to other societies. But, be careful, ye Wibseyites, another society has members who are playing at bowls.

GREAT HORTON O.S. also held a members' show, which, however, did not take place until the evening, a special steward being required to keep the youngsters awake during judging. The possibility of there being an open show on this date is the chief reason for its lateness. "STRAIGHT-'UN."

Illustrated Ideas

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of some where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

Easily Made Drinking Vessels.
Sent by A. Perry-Newton, High Street, Ramsey, Hunts.

I send you a sketch of a tin drinker which I have found especially useful for fresh-caught birds, as it can be hung inside the cage for a few days until the birds get used to it; after which I find no trouble in getting them to use it freely when it is hung outside.

An Easily-made Water-tin

A: Method of Making the Joint.

It can be easily made from a cigarette tin as per sketch. The oval tin is most useful, as it can be cut in half and will make two. There is no need to use solder when making this tin. To make, get a piece of the cigarette tin 5in. long by 1½in. wide, and bend it round for joining at the back. But, before doing so, get a piece of wire (a hairpin will do admirably), and fit it on the top edge of the tin, overlapping and hammering the edge of the tin for the purpose, as per illustration. The join at the back of the tin is made by fitting the turned up edges together. The bottom is affixed in the same way. I find this to be perfectly water-tight.—A. PERRY-NEWTON.

No. 323.
A Feeding Board.
Sent by J. Wm. Dalzell, 40, Campbell Street, Oldham.

To make this, take a piece of thin match-wood, 5ins. long by 3½ins. broad, and nail a ¼in. beading on the outer edge, as illustrated;

A Feeding Board.

also two pieces to provide a slot for the door to drop down in. Allow about 1in. of the board to remain outside the door. You will then have an article that is useful for getting young birds to learn to pick for themselves. If used when the birds are about 14 days old it is most successful.—J. WM. DALZELL.

Kindly thank all who answered my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. P. Higgins (Manchester). I had letters from all parts of the compass.

Through unemployment, writes Mr. A. E. Smith (Wednesbury), I am compelled to give up my stock of Norwich Canaries, which I much regret having to do.

The Nelson and Dis. C.B.S. will hold their annual Members' First Feather Show at the Bull Hotel, Nelson, on July 10th, writes Mr. John England, the hon. secretary. Mr. W. Mundell (Bradford) will judge the eight classes of Canaries and Mules and the British and Foreign bird classes (one each).

The Gt. Horton (Good Intent) O.S. have issued a neat pocket-syllabus of meetings, lectures, etc., for 1909-10, to be held in the club rooms, Gt. Horton Church Schools, Southfield Lane, at 7.30 p.m. A copy of the syllabus may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. H. Schofield, 137, Beldon Road, Gt. Horton.

At our last meeting, writes Mr. C. Dukes, hon. secretary of the Warrington C.B.S., we decided to cancel our open show fixed for November 13th. In this district there are five cage-bird societies within a radius of nine miles, and to me it seems a pity that this show should have to be cancelled for want of support.

Sandiford's colour feeds never had such a sale before. Sold this last seven days 26 cwts., including customers such as Mr. W. H. Shackleton, Yorkshire winner, 28lbs., Messrs. Baker, Midgley, Irons, Towers, Vardy, Booth, Beardall, Barnes, Hodder, Grey, Rennie, Spillman, Collings, all of whom have had from 28lbs. to 112lbs. each.—(ADVT.)

Dewhurst, on the art of cage-making; also the following month on the art of making wire fronts. All those that are interested in cage-making cannot do better than spend a couple of hours by attending at those interesting lectures.—(ADVT.)

Our Young Bird Show, writes Mr. J. C. Birch, hon. secretary, Queen's Park and Dis. C.B.A., held on June 26th, promises to be a great success financially, there being a good attendance during the evening, and among the visitors a number of prominent London fanciers. The general opinion expressed was that the exhibits were a grand lot, and that some would be heard of again.

I attended the first members' show of the Barton Canary and British Bird Society, held on June 19th, writes Mr. E. R. Ridley (Hull), and I found that, although there were only two classes provided, considering the society is a new one, the quality of the exhibits left nothing to be complained of. I hope it will not be long before I again visit Barton with my friends, when I hope to see an extended classification, as evidence of the growth and success of the society.

Our next First Feather Show, writes Mr. A. H. Craven, hon. secretary of the Bramley and Dis. O.S., will be held on July 24th. We are looking forward to having a good turn-up. Mr. H. E. Wilkinson (Stocksbridge) will judge.

C.C.: for Scotch Fancies, Mr. Adam Melrose (Galashiels); for Border Fancies, Mr. John Watson (Selkirk); and for Norwich and British, Mr. James Winter (Edinburgh).

Mr. Hopkins, of Bolton, has been elected to judge at the Pendlebury, Swinton, and District First Feather Show on July 3rd, writes Mr. Alex. Donnelly, the secretary. The members have only had a poor breeding season. We have provided classes for old birds as well as young. This being the first Canary and British Bird Show in the district, we are expecting a good number of visitors. Admission free to the show, which will be open at 2.30.

OBITUARY.

Mr. H. KERSHAW (Llanrwst).

I regret to have to record the death, writes Mr. J. Kershaw (Llanrwst), of my brother, Henry Kershaw, which took place on Sunday, June 20th, at 4 a.m. He died peacefully in the chair at the front door, from cardiac failure finally. He had been ailing for about 9 months. Eighteen floral tributes were sent, amongst them being one from the curate and members of the Bible Class. His loss is much felt by the family. The funeral took place on June 23rd.

Mr. J. R. NEWMAN (Old Basford, Nottingham).

It is my painful duty to report to you the death of Mr. J. R. Newman, Old Basford, writes Mr. Wm. Cottingham, secretary of the Hyson Green (Nottingham) C.B.S. He was one of the founders of our society, and one of the oldest breeders and exhibitors in Nottingham. Much sympathy is felt by the committee and members for the widow and family.

I am only a novice, and have never had a bird till this year, writes Mr. W. Watson (Walthamstow, N.E.). And all I know I owe to CAGE BIRDS.

I have had more replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Francis Duff (Doncaster), than I can deal with. Your paper clearly is an excellent medium for advertisements. Allow me to thank all who answered the advertisement, and whom it has been impossible for me to reply to.

The following gentlemen have been appointed judges for the show on September 25th, writes Mr. R. D. Mair, secretary of the Newmilns O.A.: for Scotch Fancies, Messrs. J. Hannay (Dumfries) and J. Kennedy, jun. (Paisley); for Border Fancies, British birds, etc., Mr. J. B. Y. Murdock (Kilmarnock). It was agreed that we pay prize-money on the strength of the entry money in each class. Exhibitors thereby have all the entry money returned to them.

We are holding our First Feather Show on July 10th, in the club room of the "Fox and Hounds," London Road, writes Mr. W. Lang, jun., hon. secretary, of the Lowestoft and Dis. C.B.S. Admission free. Our annual Members' Show will be held on November 25th. Mr. W. Greeves has been appointed judge for both shows. Mr. A. A. Kirk (one of our members) has kindly consented to let us have the free use of his shop for the latter show. It is situated in Mill Road, South Lowestoft, and is an ideal place for a show, just off the main road.

It is with deep regret that I have to announce my resignation of the post of joint hon. secretary to the Liverpool O.S., owing to the rather sudden death of my respected father, which necessitates my giving closer attention to business. I was reluctant to have to resign, but was compelled to take this course. So that in future all communications for the society must be addressed to Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, hon. secretary, 35, Whitefield Road, Liverpool, and not as before to Messrs. Metcalfe and Hillmen. I wish your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, all the success its deserves.—CLEMENT HILLMEN (Liverpool).

Five samples of wonderfully good colour-foods reach us from Mr. W. Rudd, the fanciers' specialist, of Norwich. These he is offering to fanciers for the 1909 season, and they should command a great sale. He has two "sweet" peppers, one a very deep red, the other very bright, with an excellent yellow-feed, and an exceptionally fine hot-feed. Mr. Rudd also offers a blend of the sweet and hot peppers, in correct proportions, ready for use: this should be an especial favourite. The high quality and wonderful colour properties of these feeds are seen at a glance. Mr. Rudd claims that they are the best of their kind on the market. Bird breeders will be well advised to see them before making their selections. Samples may be had on application to Mr. Rudd. Any of the above feeds can be had mixed with Mr. Rudd's celebrated "Eggertine" food, when it is ready to be given the birds at once.

We regret to hear that Mr. W. Rudd, of Norwich (the widely-known fanciers' provider) has been seriously ill, and only recently risen from his bed of sickness. Bird-keepers will join us in wishing him a speedy restoration to health.

The following are the judges of the City of Glasgow Show and Competition, to be held October 15th and 16th, writes Mr. Alex. Macfarlane, the hon. secretary: Scotch Fancies, Messrs. James Watson (Glasgow), James Macfarlane (Partick), H. R. Caldwell (Baillieston), Robert Findlay (Darvel), William Thornton (Edinburgh), Andrew Allerdice (Overton); Belgians: John Kean ((Edinburgh). Will fanciers please note that my address now is 279, Crow Road, Partick, Glasgow?

Once again samples of Ramsden's celebrated colour-foods reach us, and they seem even deeper and brighter in colour than before, if that be possible. The tasteless pepper has remarkable depth of colour, and is very fragrant to the smell and palatable to the taste; that there will be a big "run" upon it by breeders is certain. Mr. Ramsden's hot pepper is this season a blend of choice Natal and Spanish growths, which results in a combination possessed of colouring properties of the highest excellence. And Mr. Ramsden's peppers (both tasteless and hot) are sold under a guarantee of absolute purity. Their colour is genuinely their own, there being no admixture of sugar, oil, or other foreign matter. Mr. Ramsden claims that many peppers on the market could not be sold under such a guarantee. However this may be, we certainly think, judging by the sample before us, that "R.P." will well hold its own on its merits this season. Buyers should make a point of seeing both the tasteless and the hot. Mr. Ramsden's address is 11, Josephine-avenue, Brixton, London, S.W.

The Deadly Fever.

We hear that a prominent Crest-breeder has recently suffered the loss by septic fever of nearly sixty of his birds. He attributes the outbreak to the introduction, without previous isolation, of an expensive pair of birds purchased from another well-known Crest breeder in the West of England. This is a sad blow to our London friend, but he takes it very cheerfully. It will be a lesson to him in the future, and should be to all others, always to put new purchases into quarantine for some little period before mixing them with his stock.

Polly's "Nightcap."

The depraved tastes of an elderly Parrot have just been brought under my notice by an Aston gentleman, says a writer in the "Birmingham Daily Mail." He tells me he possesses one of these birds, which has been in the family for the past forty years, and which nightly shares in a glass of hot whisky and water before it retires to roose. Polly has been taught to demand her "nightcap" as soon as supper is over, when she is liberated from her cage and solemnly perches herself on the back of her master's seat. Having mixed a glass of toddy, Polly is invited to partake of the first sip, and so she shares drink by drink with her owner until the glass is empty, when the bird hops off her perch, re-enters her cage, and settles down for her nocturnal slumbers.

The National Green-marked Y.C.C

All clubs desirous of having the patronage of the National Green Marked Y.C.C., would oblige by making application for patronage on or before Saturday, July 24th. Full particulars of classifications (not less than four Green Marked classes), together with name of judge, etc. I should be pleased to hear from any fancier desirous of joining at an early date, so that the same may appear in club's Year Book. The following judges and fanciers have already joined since our last meeting:—Messrs. A. Hirst, T. Milburn, T. Bentley, F. Allen, A. Ross, M. Peel, F. Self, H. Lumb, N. Kirk, H. Hudson, and A. Thomas. We are desirous that the same should be over 100 before the show season commences, which I am pleased to say we have every prospect of attaining. Many other fanciers have promised to join before the shows begin. Fanciers may rest assured that this will shortly be one of the strongest specialist clubs in the Yorkshire Fancy.—F. ARMSTRONG, hon. secretary, 78, Pear Street, Parkinson Lane, Halifax.

House's Canary Manual - - - - Post free 1/2

By C. A. House.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Some Favourite British Hardbills & How to Keep them.

By JAMES H. BOOTH.

So much has from time to time been written on this subject, that it is difficult for one to say anything really fresh. But, perchance, there may be some readers of CAGE BIRDS who have not "gone in" for British Hardbills, and it is to those I would address myself most particularly.

The Popular and Beautiful Goldie.

Without a doubt, both in popularity and beauty of plumage, the Goldfinch (Carduelis carduelis) easily heads the list. Measuring just over five inches in length, it is a sprightly and elegant little bird, and possessed of a very pleasing song. The difference between the sexes, outwardly, is small, and only a practised eye can readily distinguish it.

The Goldie soon adapts itself to a cage or aviary, and will thrive on a stock food of Canary, hemp, teazle and summer rape seeds in equal parts, with a little inga and linseed added occasionally. It is extremely fond of thistle heads and flowering groundsel, which it is as well to let it have frequently. During the Greypate stage, that is, before the first moult, Goldfinches are rather delicate, and a good mixture of wild seeds should be supplied to them during this period.

A Bold and Handsome Bird.

Our next favourite, the Bullfinch (Pyrrhula vulgaris), is a bird of bold and handsome presence, and his colouring is not less bold or handsome. Unlike the Goldfinches, the sexes are readily distinguished. The female lacks the beautiful grey back and red breast of the male.

Bullie soon becomes very tame. Although it has nothing in the way of a song, but a rather plaintive pipe, it is, nevertheless, a very interesting bird. It feeds on a staple diet of Canary and summer rape seeds, about three parts of the latter being given to one of the former. It is very fond of hemp seed, but this should only be given sparingly just as a tit-bit. Ripe apple pips are also much appreciated, and privet berries may also be given when these are in season.

Greedy But Sweet-voiced Birds

The Siskin (Chrysomitris spinus) otherwise known as the Aberdevine, is a most docile and engaging little bird, and deserves a place in every bird-room.

I have one of these birds in my possession which, though only caught in the late autumn, is quite contented and happy. I open his cage door each morning and allow him a fly round the room. The return to his domicile is quite voluntary. No doubt this is for the purpose of satisfying the claims of his appetite, for the Siskin is a greedy little chap, and spends a good moiety of his existence at the seed pan.

The female Siskin differs from her mate in not possessing the black on the head and throat which he has. Her plumage generally is of a paler hue. Siskins should be fed in the same manner as recommended for the Goldfinch.

The Grey or Brown Linnet (Acanthis cannabina) of all the British Finches is, perhaps, the most frequently met with in confinement. It is possessed of a song sweet and clear, delivered in a somewhat jerky style. Though of more sober plumage than either of the foregoing, it is a handsome bird. The adult male has a red breast, a feature which his mate lacks. Though shy and timid, the Linnet does not appear to fret for long over its loss of liberty, and is in every way a desirable addition to any collection.

It does well on a diet consisting of one part each summer rape, charlock, teazle, and linseed, to three parts Canary seed. Hemp, inga and maw seeds are relished, and should be given (a little of each) by way of a change, in addition to green-food.

Docile and Vivacious.

Another interesting British Hardbill is the Lesser Redpoll (Acanthis rufescens). In plumage it somewhat resembles its larger relative, the Linnet, but in size, docility and vivacity of manner, partakes more of the nature of the Siskin. As in the case of the Linnet, Nature has granted the wearing of a red breast only to the male.

The vocal ability of the Redpoll is limited; it possesses nothing more than a call of two notes, which, however, is frequently uttered, but its extreme docility and confiding disposition, together with the readiness with which it learns any little trick its owner may take the pains to teach it, are sufficient to recommend it to any bird-lover. This bird should be fed as advised for the Linnet.

The Common Greenbird.

The Greenfinch (Chloris chloris) sometimes called the Green-bird, is one of our commonest native Hardbills. It is larger than any of the foregoing, with the exception of the Bullfinch, and measures just ever six and a half inches in length. It is, too, stontly built.

The prevailing colour of the male is bright green, with a greyish tinge; the feathers of the wings and tail are greenish brown, with here and there a dash of yellow. The female is more soberly clad, and is of a dull greenish grey. It is minus the characteristic yellow of the mate.

The song is nothing to boast of, consisting only of a few notes. The Greenie is a hardy bird, and does well on a diet of mixed seeds—Canary, hemp, teazle, and summer rape. It is also partial to the seeds of the sunflower, likewise of groundsel, chickweed and sowthistle.

The price of the birds in my list, prize-winners of course excepted, is such as to bring them within the reach of all. Buy only clean healthy birds, and patronise a reliable dealer, is advice which cannot well be over-estimated.

Cage and General Management.

Having said something about the birds, I will say something concerning cages and general management. Give your bird a good-sized cage. It is a pity to keep such lively creatures in a cage only a few inches square. A nice one for any of the Finches is 18ins. long, 12ins. from back to front, and 15ins. high, wired on three sides, and boarded on top and at the back. It should contain three perches. I prefer to have the feeding and drinking utensils outside, as this prevents a waste of seed and the drinking water is not then liable to get fouled.

Green-food is an essential if you would keep your birds in health. Groundsel, chickweed, dandelion, watercress and lettuce may be given in season. They should be supplied daily. An excellent means of obtaining green-food in the winter appeared in CAGE BIRDS of January 18th, 1907, entitled "Lettuce growing while you wait."

Some of the Finches are partial to ripe fruit. The Bullfinch especially relishes a slice of ripe apple or pear, or a blackberry, strawberry, or raspberry. When birds can be induced to take fruit (some of them will not touch it), it forms an excellent substitute for green-food.

Let your birds have plenty of fresh air. There is nothing like it. But keep them out of draughts, which are just as fatal to our feathered pets as to human beings. Allow them facilities for frequent bathing, and do not forget a generous layer of coarse, gritty sand on the floor of their domicile. Hardbills can be kept at a minimum of cost and trouble, and, if treated as directed, ought to be a never-ending source of delight to their owner.

The Breeding & Management of the Norwich Canary.

By E. COWLING.

A Lecture delivered before the Cramlington and District C.B.S.

I would like to make a few remarks on the breeding and management of the Norwich Canary, although perhaps most of what I have to say will apply to other varieties as well; I deal with Norwich because that is my favourite, and, as I heard a man once say of a suet pudding, it is bad to beat. The Norwich are hardy, and will compare favourably with other varieties as feeders in the rearing of young; when you have any to sell they are so popular they always command a ready sale and a good price.

Don't Buy Rubbish.

Whatever variety you decide to take up, always bear in mind it must be the very best you can afford. Good birds eat no more than do wasters, and it is far better to have one pair of good Canaries than twenty pairs of inferior ones. Don't buy rubbish; or you will only breed bad birds, which will very soon "eat their heads off." It will pay better in the end to give £2 or £3 for a good pair of birds, than to give ten shillings for a fourth or fifth-rate pair, to do which is worse than throwing your money over the hedge, seeing that what you breed from them will only run you into debt.

We will now suppose that we have our birds in hand, awaiting the breeding time. The cocks are caged off singly, and the hens are all flying together in the flight. It may be we are very anxious to get them paired up, and we want to see the winners we are going to breed.

Now I would like the novice to remember, that one of the greatest mistakes he can make is to put his birds together before they are ready; it is useless, and worse than useless, for by so doing he will only court disaster. The beginning of April is plenty soon enough, and only then providing the birds are ready. You can tell when the birds are in breeding form by the hens continually working their wings. When you see your hens stretching themselves upon the perch, wings going all the time, it is a sure sign they are ready for nesting. The cock birds as they come into condition draw themselves together to about half their usual size, singing all the time and for all they are worth. Some cock birds also commence to "feed the wires," that is, after they have eaten their seed they bring it up again and deposit it on the wires. I don't know that they all do this, but a great many do, and when we see it we may rest assured our birds are ready.

On Pairing Birds Off.

This being so, the pairing off may be proceeded with. The first thing I always do is to catch the birds and with a small sharp pair of scissors, trim the feathers about the vent, both of the cocks and the hens, but the hens especially. By so doing the chance of having fertilized eggs is greatly increased. Also look to the birds' feet, cut the claws back if required, which will be the case for certain with all birds over a year old. By attending to this you may save the puncturing of eggs, or the pulling out of a valuable young one from the nest. But in cutting them be careful not to go back into the quick, or you will cause unnecessary pain and suffering. There is no fear of doing this if you hold the bird on a level with your eye against the light, when you can easily discern the red streak and cut accordingly.

Now if we would breed exhibition birds, it is very important that the pairing up should be properly done. We may have good stuff, but unless they are properly balanced, they will not throw what is required. Judgment in mating is necessary, for, depend upon it, good birds well paired is half the battle.

On no account pair two birds together with the same fault, as by so doing you will only breed youngsters having more or less the same faults, fixed firmer than ever. For instance, supposing you have a hen that is thin in neck, but good in every other way; it stands to reason she must be mated to a cock bird excelling in neck properties, and so on. Then, we must always remember to mate our two best birds together, and then the second best two, and so forth. We must not, because we have an extra good cock bird, give him an inferior hen, thinking he will make up for her deficiencies, for he will not and we shall get from such pairs, not what is required, but birds deficient in exhibition properties.

Feeding Stock Through the Winter.

Now a word or two as to feeding your old birds through the winter, so as to get them into condition, not too soon, but just at the right time. I feed mine as follows:—Canary seed as a staple food, with egg-food twice a week, or Spratt's cod liver oil cage-bird food (which, by the way, I can honestly recommend), with now and again some German rape; also a piece of apple as often as possible, which is not only appreciated by the birds, but is very beneficial to them, as it helps to keep their bowels in good working order, which is a very important matter. I also give twice a week a quarter of a teaspoonful of inga or niger seed, which, being a very oily seed, is supposed to be a preventative against egg-binding. Hemp seed I use very little of—only when hens are feeding the young. But by way of a change, I sometimes give a few crushed sunflower seeds, sometimes a few oats, or some mutton suet stuck between the wires for the birds to peck at, or a bit of cuttlefish bone. Plenty of good grit should also be supplied in the cage.

When Hens are Egg-bound.

All these things help to counteract any tendency to egg-binding. Should we have the misfortune to find a hen suffering from this deadly thing (for it is deadly), the poor little mite will not live long under its awful strain, and it is wise to have a look round at night to see that all is well, for it is possible for a hen to be prostrate the night before the egg is due to be laid. Should we find one so afflicted, sitting, very likely, all of a heap in the bottom of the cage, bring her immediately into the heat.

I have proved from experience that the best thing to help the hen to pass the egg without in any way meddling with the vent, or anything else, is the heat which comes, not from the open fire, but from the oven. Open the oven door and place her as near as possible. Of course, I see that it is not too hot, but I "give it to her" as hot as possible, keeping her the time in a little cage. Since I have done this I have never failed to secure the eggs, and at the same time have saved the hen's life. I think the hot air which comes from the oven has something to do with it.

There are also other ways of dealing with egg-bound hens, such as steaming, etc. A warm moist atmosphere is a great help to hens about to lay, although I give no heat at any time, except in the early part of the breeding season. Then one can scarcely call it heat, although it makes a wonderful difference in the room.

Every night I put in a five-gallon drum or tin (whichever you like to call it) of boiling water at six o'clock, and another one at ten, and it is surprising how moist and warm the atmosphere feels even in the morning. There is no reason to empty the water out every time, but place the drum on the fire and let it boil in this way. Always be sure and remove the cork before so doing, for fear of an explosion.

Canary Breeding for Beginners - - Post Free. 7d.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

Chap. XXXI.—My Blue Robins.

When I see a lot of birds I want but can't afford, I always feel like dear Miss Matty in Cranford did about the celebrated silk gowns. "I wish," she said, "I could have a new gown every season," (dropping her voice, "as we all did at Cranford whenever we talked of anything we wished for but could not afford.") "However," she continued, "it would give me a great deal of trouble to take care of them if I had them, so I think I'll only take one."

As this passage flashed through my mind I was standing with my nose glued against the window of a bird-shop in Leeds that has long since ceased to exist. Indeed, the story of that shop was short and merry. Two young fellows thought that it would be a nice easy life to keep a bird-shop. They had, I suppose, some money, by the reckless way they purchased, but a very small modicum of knowledge. On the particular morning I am writing about, I happened to espy a pair of American Blue Robins in a small box-cage, and from their woe-begone look I felt sure they were not long for this world unless something happened.

I looked at their food-pot, and to my amazement saw it filled with Canary seed. I hastily entered the shop and asked one of the owners whether he knew that Blue Robins were soft-billed birds, and required as food, not Canary seed, but some soft mixture. Instead of abusing me, he seemed very grateful for the information, and told me quite ingenuously that he knew very little about birds, as they were only just beginning. As I thought the Blue Robins were in a very parlous condition, I determined to buy them, especially as they were a particularly fine pair.

A Rare Find.

For some years now Blue Robins have been almost as scarce as Turquoisines, owing to the American law, which forbids the exportation of native birds; but at the time I am writing of, Blue Robins were in annual importation, and arrived every spring about February, and could be purchased for the modest sum of 15s. the pair. Now I should be afraid to say what they would cost. When only half-a-dozen come over at a time, and then privately brought over, dealers can command any price they like to demand. Look at Virginian Cardinals, which now fetch £2 each, while the hens are almost unobtainable.

I carried my new purchases home, and before letting them go I gave them a good wash with the aid of a shaving brush, which they seemed thoroughly to appreciate, and it was wonderful to see what a lot of dirt came out of their wings and tail. When dry they looked quite different birds.

For a few days I kept them in a big box cage, just to make sure they were all right, and then one fine morning in May I enlarged them into an outdoor aviary with plenty of growing bushes and any amount of snug nest-boxes. They accepted their new-found liberty with the joy of an Arctic explorer welcoming a relief party. They seemed at this time just a little bit nervous at first, but then it is said that the best-drilled soldiers will drop when they first face the firing line, and it is a big jump from a pokey little box-cage to a big garden aviary. In a few hours all their nervousness wore off, and they soon became the tamest of the tame. The cock Blue Robin is a lovely bird, with his wonderful azure back and wings, his ruddy breast and white underparts, and he might well be pardoned if he said, like the beautiful Lady Foley: "There might be better-looking women, but she had never seen them." His wife is of more sober colouring, but is for all that a very winsome little thing. One great advantage in Blue Robins is that there is no possibility of mistaking a cock for a hen so that you may always rely on getting a true pair.

My mind now at once began to run on nesting and youngsters. It made no matter that the county was Yorkshire and the month the treacherous one of May. I seldom see things as they are, but as they are going to be.

Curious Antics.

About a fortnight after I had loosed the Robins into the aviary, I one morning observed the cock, lifting up first one wing and then the other, in the most curious way, and singing for all he was worth. I had never seen any bird act so before, and hoped that he had not had a stroke. Of course if I had not been very ignorant I ought to have known that this is the way which the Blue-bird pays court to his lady love. Presently I saw Mrs. Blue Robin flying anxiously about and examining nest-box after nest-box. I was surprised to see that she seemed to prefer the most absurdly small ones; cigar-boxes for preference. I wondered how ever she could get into them, but she did.

In a few hours she seemed to decide on a box to her mind, and then began with feverish haste to gather pine needles off the floor and to carry them into the box. Meanwhile the cock sat on a neighbouring branch and warbled approval. I felt as the French say, that I owed him a deep debt of gratitude for making a start.—Je lui devais une fameuse chandelle.

After about a week the hen remained in the nest a bit each morning, so that I concluded that eggs were being laid, but she seemed at the end of the week to be taking far too much relaxation for a sitting hen Blue Robin. She seemed to my excited imagination to be about at all sorts of hours when sober hens should have been brooding the eggs. Then the weather turned cold, and all at the beginning of June, and I was frightened to death lest the eggs should get wet and chilled. To the statement "that a dripping June puts all in tune," should be excepted the plain person's temper. Whenever I went to the aviary there was Mrs. Blue Robin emerging from the nest, and looking as innocent as a lamb in spring.

A Liking for Black-beetles.

I knew what she wanted; my presence denotes mealworms, and the moment she hears me about she comes to see if I have remembered her wants. I generally have, for the rascal has got the soft side of my heart, and I've never been able to thrust her out, and she knows it. However, even the devil, so they say, is not quite as black as he is painted, and in spite of my anxieties, my little friend knew her business better than I did. I can only suppose that Blue Robin's eggs can do with the minimum of heat and attention, for the hen was quite as much off the nest as on it. At the end of fourteen days I found a blue egg shell lying near the wires and this told me that success had crowned the efforts of my friends.

The feeding of Softbills when they have young is always an expensive matter, not to say an anxious one, for one never knows when the supply of live things may not fail, for in the country you can't run into a bird-shop and buy, and you can't always get ants' eggs early in June. Fortunately, Blue Robins love black clocks better than owt else in this world; and if only you have a good stock of these creatures, and every aviculturalist's kitchen ought to fairly lift with them, then you need have no fear on the score of food for the little Blue Robins.

The only thing you have to do is to buy half-a-dozen demon beetle traps, distribute them over night, and send a child to collect them each morning. Then place a trap on the aviary floor with the top removed, and the Robins will do all the rest As soon as one trap is empty supply another, and so on ad infinitum,

It is surprising after a few days to see the hen fly up to the nest with three or four great black clocks sticking out of her mouth, then in she goes, and a moment later flies out again for a fresh supply. One wonders how ever the little ones can gulp them down. I ought to mention as a partial explanation that the old birds nip off the legs "before delivery." In about seventeen days, so far as I remember, the first youngster Robin came out, and by his robust appearance, I knew he was a cock; four others followed at short intervals. They were led by their parents to a big elder, and there they sat all day, crying and waiting to be fed. How the old birds managed to supply those awful appetites was a surprise. Literally they worked from morn to eve.

Comical Content.

It was most comical to see the contented expression on each young face after a full and hearty meal. It reminded me of a pleasing story told by Lady Grenville in her letter of a young Duc de Rohan, who, when complimented on his bashful expression, admitted the soft impeachment, saying: "Oui, mais il faudrait me voir quand je prie. I am sure his expression even then could have been no more seraphic than that of my young Blue Robins after dinner.

The eggs of the Blue Robin are small and resemble those of our common Starling both in shape and colour; the colour, as in the case of Starlings, soon fades if exposed to the light. I had the curiosity to look at the cigar box after the birds had flown, and I was surprised as to how ever all the youngsters had managed to squeeze into such a narrow space. The box was up lengthwise, and we all know, who are smokers, that there is not much turning room in such a box.

Strange to say, I always found my Blue Robins preferred a cigar-box to any other form of nesting receptacle. When lifting up the nest I found several large and hideous black clocks that must have escaped literally from the jaws of death, snugly hiding under the nesting material. What a time of terror they must have had for three weeks with that hen constantly going in and out of the nest. By accounts I have read, I find that it is exceedingly rarely that Blue Robins are reared to maturity. I read again of nests of youngsters being thrown out of the nest when a few days old, and of even being eaten by the unnatural parents. Personally, I think in such cases there is something wrong with the feeding. Of course if the food supply runs out, birds will do such things, but I think that if the cupboard is kept well supplied, Blue Robins will rear the young in the most exemplary manner. At least, I don't see why my birds should be exceptional.

The young are something like young Thrushes, with beautifully spotted breasts, but after a time the spots disappear and they become like their parents. I found that in the earlier broods cocks predominated, but that the later broods were nearly all hens.

I had no difficulty in selling the youngsters at good prices, but I was very sorry to do so, as they were so tame and familiar. The old birds subsequently nested again, and reared four young ones; and then I thought I had done enough with Blue Robins, and parted with the lot. I have often since regretted that step, and I believe that if ever I got the chance, I should add a pair to my collection.

Difficulties of the Breeding Season.

By T. C. Crawhall.

When the Young Look Lumpy.

Any young ones that look lumpy should be removed from others at once, as many of their ailments are, like the measles, most infectious. I usually have one or two cages set aside as hospital cages. Give them no seed, but only milk sop and some water with a little tincture of rhubarb in it. As the inflammation subsides, you can give the rhubarb on alternate days and tincture of gentian in the drinking water the other days. Gentian and chemical food are splendid tonics, and useful to birds even if in good health.

If the young show signs of swelling and inflammation a little arnica water rubbed on the belly is a good thing. It is made by mixing a teaspoonful of tincture of arnica with two tablespoonfuls of water. For internal medicine give two drops of castor oil and put 10, 15, or 20 drops of tincture of aconite into the drinking water, according to the severity of the case. Aconite is one of the best medicines we have for use in cases of inflammation of all kinds. Do not forget the milk sop.

The Discussion.

Mr. Lowery: Does not Mr. Crawhall think that the giving of egg food to hens while they are sitting tends to make them lazy when the young appear?—I do not advise egg food to be given daily, but think it necessary to give it about twice while the hens are sitting. This keeps them in good health, and strong enough to go on feeding. I also give the mixed seeds twice while they are sitting.

When do you commence to give green food?—Usually at about the third day, though I do not advise giving very much of it until they are a week old; in fact, I am not so liberal with green meat as many fanciers are. Some start to give it as soon as the young hatch out.

Mr. Taylor stated that he thought green food should not be given for at least three or four days, as he had seen hens trying to feed day-old youngsters with green food, but it was so stringy that the young could not get any of it.

Is not aconite a deadly poison?—Yes, if given in too large a quantity. But five or ten drops of tincture, or in severe cases of inflammation up to twenty drops, in the drinking water, will save many a bird's life. It being mixed with so much water the bird does not take a very large quantity in a day; probably not more than half to one drop.

Does aconite not affect the heart?—It may to a certain extent.

Mr. Swan: Has Mr. Crawhall ever tried cold tea as a remedy for nesting diarrhœa?—No; but I should think from the tannin it contains it would be very useful.

It is the best remedy I have tried in my experience of over 20 years, said Mr. Swan, and I have never found it to fail yet; but you must continue with it; if you leave it off the diarrhœa returns.

What is the cause of the hens leaving their nests before the young hatch?—Possibly the weather has something to do with it; also the hen's health. The hen's temperature rises during sitting, and if the hen is not well, or a spell of cold weather sets in her temperature comes down to normal, and the broodiness disappears.

Mr. Taylor suggested that leaving the cock in with the hen, and his feeding her, brings her too far forward, and she leaves the nest through being in too high a condition.—An open discussion took place on the merits of the various green foods. The majority seemed to be in favour of seeding chickweed. Mr. Mather told of a fancier who gave his birds nothing but chickweed as green food, and he gave it at all times; and from a cock nine years old, and a young hen he reared 24 youngsters. Many spoke highly of lettuce, but advised its being freshly gathered, and not replaced by that which comes in crates and is sold in the shops.

When do you give hemp to the parents?—About the 3rd or 4th day. Begin with a little, and increase it to about a teaspoonful per day. Too much hemp affects the liver. Do not crack it, as it is sweeter if the birds crack it themselves.

Does inga prevent egg-binding?—It is often recommended, but I use very little of it myself.

A member suggested suet as a good thing to give the hens to prevent egg binding.—Mr. Lowery said he thought linseed one of the best seeds for that purpose.

Should rape be given scalded or dry?—I soak it sometimes if I have a poor feeder, but usually I give it dry.

Is turpentine a good thing to rub on for inflammation?—I prefer arnica water, as it is not so cruel as turps, which makes the bird suffer very much pain; it has the same effect.

CANARY QUERIES.

No Second Brood.

Amateur.—Am afraid you will have to rest content with the one brood, as it seems clear the hen is rapidly dropping into moult, and in that case will not be fit to mate again this season. If you really wish to try you should keep her in the usual temperature to which she has been accustomed, i.e., now you have taken her away from the cock do not move her to another room which is warmer or colder. Feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one summer rape as a staple. Every second day give a small quantity of egg food with a pinch of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over, and on the alternate days half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. Give two or three crisp young dandelion leaves daily, and if she appears in fresh condition at the end of ten days or a fortnight, try mating her again. Of course, you must keep the cock fresh ready to mate with her at any time. If she does not come in fresher condition, and begins to appear dull and mopy, you may just as well put her up for moulting at once, as it would be quite useless trying her again this season.

Helpless Yorkshire.

P.B.—It would be impossible to say with certainty what was wrong with the bird without a personal examination. It is not unlikely that in catching it to transfer it to the larger cage you unconsciously pressed upon the spinal column, which has caused paralysis to develop. Failing this, I can only imagine that being unaccustomed to the large cage, it injured its legs or feet in some way, either in jumping from perch to perch, or, perhaps, getting a foot fast in a perch-end, or in the wires. It is quite possible it might have got its legs broken or badly strained high up near the body—first one and then the other—in this way. In any case, return it to its small cage, place the perches rather low, and as convenient as possible for the bird; keep it quiet and comfortable, and leave the rest to Nature. Feed plainly, and keep it supplied with green food to prevent constipation arising during its inactive condition. This is about all you can do. I believe there is a live-stock hospital in the Metropolis where such cases might be taken in charge, but I cannot lay hands on the address. I have no idea what fee would be charged.

Young Birds Dying.

Novice.—It is not easy to tell what is the cause when kept under apparently ideal conditions, without some details as to their feeding from the time of being separated from the parents. As the four all appear to have sickened and died in a week, I would strongly advise you, in the event of another dying soon, to send it for a post-mortem in order to discover whether you have a kind of septic fever amongst them. On one or two points, so far as I can gather from your letter, you seem to have gone wrong in the treatment. In the first place, you should not be giving soft food to young birds eight weeks old every day; then you should be giving a little green food; and, again, there should be no necessity to give occasional doses of magnesia. Indeed, you should avoid any kind of drug treatment for all birds, and the young ones in particular, as much as possible. Put them on following dietary at once. Give an unlimited supply of Canary as a staple, and allow about half a teaspoonful of good summer rape per bird daily. Twice a week give a small teaspoonful of hemp per bird, and on two other days a similar quantity of egg food, or crumbs of sponge or Madeira cake, or an equivalent amount of bread and milk. As there may be a suspicion of septic fever, I would rather advise you to use the two last only, and bar egg food from young. Whatever you give, sprinkle with a little maw seed. Three times a week give a little green food, either chickweed, flower heads of groundsel, watercress, or plantain stalks. If there appears any need for an aperient, increase the supply of green food, and give a little daily if necessary, rather than use any drugs.

Colour Feeding Crests.

A.Q.—(1) It is not really necessary to colour feed Crests and Crest-breds. (2) If you wish to improve the colour of your birds there is nothing to prevent your giving them a little egg and colour food every second day whilst moulting, in which case I would advise you to use only pure tasteless pepper. Although colour-feeding is not necessary in these varieties, still it is not a disqualification, as it is with the Borders. The colour is left open and does not count much against the more typical points of crest, feather, size, etc. Whether you give colour or not, feed generously during the moult, giving a little egg-food about every second day, to which you may add the least dusting of flowers of sulphur once or twice a week, or, say, three times a fortnight, and on the intervening days give a little extra rape, or hemp, maw, linseed, crushed oats, or split groats. Do not give these altogether, but first one and then another for variety. Give maw the most frequently at the beginning of the moult, and linseed oftener towards the end, but do not give large quantities of linseed at any time; a small pinch per bird is quite sufficient.

Young Canaries Ailing.

Mrs. A. Johnson.—I think your method of feeding is the sole cause. Put them at once on a staple diet of plain Canary only, and in addition give separately about half a teaspoonful of dry summer rape per bird each day. Every second day give a similar quantity of egg-food, or crushed sponge cake, or an equivalent quantity of bread scalded with milk, and pressed nearly dry, and in either case sprinkle a pinch of maw seed over it. Do not give these three items all on one day. Use either one or another, or you may, if you like, use them all in rotation, giving them alternately for variety. On the alternate days between giving the soft food give a spray of chickweed, or flower head of groundsel, or a few half ripe plantain stalks. Three times a week give half a teaspoonful per bird of hemp. Give no other seeds or foods, and in a fortnight hence reduce the frequency of hemp and egg-food to twice a week each. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts and twenty drops of whiskey for two or three days. No other drug treatment should be needed, but if the young still seem puffed out, add four drops of cod liver oil emulsion to the soft food each time you give it for a week.

Aviary Greenhouse.

Nunquam.—Am afraid your idea of utilising a portion of the greenhouse for the purposes of an aviary will not succeed so well in actual practice as it does in theory. The moisture-laden atmosphere, especially if combined with heat, would be practically certain to affect the birds injuriously sooner or later, and I cannot advise you to try to run both bobbies under such circumstances on equal terms. A few plants would have but little harmful effect, if any; but to have an aviary of caged birds and a well-stocked greenhouse of thriving plants, with only a path to separate the two, and all under one roof, is to court disaster. To stand the very best chance of succeeding I advise you to have two small ventilators opposite each other over each end of the middle pathway, and two more in the apices of the roof over the cages, which could be kept open, and regulated to suit the weather, at all times after the ordinary "lights" are closed for the night. It would not be advisable to use heat for some time yet. Wait until the winter is coming nigh, and then use only just sufficient to preserve the plants from frost, and dry the atmosphere.

The Mouse Nuisance.

Henry R. Stone.—There are so many good, bad, and indifferent methods of keeping mice out of bird cages that I fear if I gave them all in this issue there would not be much space for anything else. Have you tried the Virus remedies advertised in our columns? If not, try one at once. They are most useful. But I am still of opinion that a well-trained cat will take some beating. But if you put down Virus properly, and repeat the operation once or twice a year as may appear necessary, you should remain free from any serious trouble on this score. As regards removing the birds to the greenhouse, if, as I assume, you mean to dispense with the plants and utilise the structure altogether for the birds, I should say your best plan to avoid the great fluctuations of temperature would be to have a solid boarded roof with no glass in it, and have sliding, or hinged and dropping solid shutters, made to fit over the glass sides, which could be utilised at any time when necessary to prevent extremes of heat taking place suddenly. The place is, I suppose, already fitted up with hot-water pipes for heating, and this apparatus could be used at discretion to maintain a fairly equable temperature. Good ventilation must be provided near the floor and well up near the highest point of the roof. If you carry out this idea of removal you should get it through without delay before the birds begin dropping into moult.

Ailing Young Border.

T.G.—Your feeding is very faulty for so young a bird, which is evidently suffering from dysentery. I should be inclined to suspect some part of the diet, perhaps the rape seed, is setting up the condition. Put the bird on a diet of plain Canary only as a staple, and give each day a small piece of bread scalded with boiling milk, pressed nearly dry, and slightly sprinkled over with soft sugar. A quantity about equal to half a teaspoonful will suffice. Give no other items of food of any kind, and no green food at all, until the bowels have assumed a more normal condition. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash, for two days, and afterwards every second day for the remainder of the first week. On the alternate days at the end of the first week give two drops of aromatic sulphuric acid in the water. After the first week add to the diet half a teaspoonful of dry summer rape each day. Stop the bread and milk, and give instead half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake three times a week, a similar quantity of hemp twice a week, and a small spray of green food three times a week—preferably chickweed, flower heads of groundsel, or half ripe plantain stalks. Keep bird in cage by itself until quite well. If the diarrhœa is not removed by the end of the first week, give twenty drops whisky and four drops tincture of opium in the water for two days. It would be advisable to boil all its water before use.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

More Young Dying.

H.S.—It is your method of feeding which is the cause of the young dying with full crops, I fear, rather than any likelihood of the thunder having anything to do with it. After the first week you should add two parts of biscuit, or whatever else you use, to one part of minced egg. Better still, as it forms a less constipating food, you might use equal parts egg, biscuit, and crushed sponge cake. Hemp you should not begin to give as long as a hen feeds fairly well until the young are about twelve days old, and instead of giving dandelion you should begin on the fourth day to give a little chickweed, flower heads of groundsel, or, if the hen is looking like flagging, crisp young lettuce, and gradually increase the quantity until when they are a week old you are giving as much as the old birds seem to care about. Give it fresh twice a day rather than a larger quantity all together. If you carry out these suggestions with any forthcoming broods, and give a mixture of three parts canary to one summer rape as a staple diet, you should get over this difficulty in future.

On the Verge of Success.

"Tight Feathers."—It is certainly most disappointing to have so many young die, just when you think they are safe, and about to moult. Although I feel strongly convinced that your feeding is the sole cause, I would advise you, in the event of losing several more in quick succession, to send one for a post-mortem, in order to be quite sure whether fever is the cause. By the time the birds reach six weeks old you should get them on to a diet of plain Canary only as a staple dict, and give separately about half a teaspoonful of summer rape per bird each day, a similar quantity of egg-food twice a week, and on two other days the same amount of hemp. Every second day give a small spray of green food. When the birds are between seven and eight weeks old you may with advantage substitute maw seed for the hemp. Keep the cages strewn with clean, gritty sand. Add about one-half the bulk of the egg-food of additional biscuit or crushed sponge cake to make up the egg-food for young birds at this age, and then if you drop all other items of food you have been giving I think you will find your losses cease. See that the water, food, and all vessels are kept scrupulously clean and fresh, and that the birds are not exposed to cold draughts.

Played Out.

No Name.—Although you do not say how old the bird is, I fear he has already seen the best of his days. You have probably been keeping him in a place where there are sudden and extreme variations of heat, or in a vitiated atmosphere, such as near a fire, over a gas or burning lamp, or, perhaps, where he is exposed to constant draughts. In either case the cause must be first removed. Keep the bird in an equable, not over warm, place where the air is pure and fresh, but not exposed to cold draughts. Put him for one week on the plain reducing diet advised to "A.M.W." After this feed him on a mixture of three parts Canary to one summer rape as a staple, twice a week give a few grains of hemp, and on two other days a pinch of maw. Every second day for a fortnight give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with three drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Give a little green food each day, and only allow it to bathe in fine settled weather until it is better. In the drinking water, after the first week, give twenty drops of whiskey, six each of glycerine, and oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil every second day for a fortnight. Shake this well together before putting it in cage.

Breathes Heavily at Night.

A.M.W.—If you are satisfied the Yorkshire hen has not at any time been exposed to draughts, or great fluctuations of temperature, the heavy breathing is probably due to an overfat condition, though, in this case there would also probably be a more or less dull and lethargic condition at intervals throughout the day. Try what a diet of plain Canary only, with a liberal supply of green food, and a pinch of Epsom salts in the water every second day will do for her. Allow plenty of space for exercise, and keep well supplied with clean, gritty sand. Continue the plain diet for a fortnight, but give the salts only twice during the second week. If there is not an improvement at the end of this time, add a little summer rape to the diet daily, and give about half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with a little maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days add twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and five of oxymel of squills to the water. Continue this for another fortnight, and if not well then write again and refer to this reply.

Brevities.

Ejects His Food (W.G.).—Your bird is simply in high breeding condition, and brings his food up in the way you describe with the object of feeding a mate. You may add a pinch of Epsom salts to his drinking water for a few days, and also add a fairly liberal supply of chickweed or crisp young lettuce to his bill of fare each day, which will doubtless cool his ardour a little and stop the habit.

Emphysema ("One Anxious to Know").—This is what troubled your young bird, and the huge blister was merely an accumulation of air beneath the skin. The complaint is certainly not of common occurrence, yet it cannot be said to be very rare. By pricking the blister and liberating the confined air you did the only thing possible towards a cure in so young a bird. Glad to know the treatment was a success. The repetition of the operation a few times is quite a usual necessity.

Gaping Young (C.H.B.).—If the young make no noise whilst breathing, and apart from this opening of beaks to breathe appear otherwise healthy, I should say the cause was merely a little nervousness, and, perhaps, an unusually well fed and plump condition. Add a little crisp lettuce to the diet daily. I do not think any other treatment is necessary. The gaping will doubtless disappear during the next fortnight or so. If it does not, write again, and repeat particulars.

Having Another Try ("Hard Luck.")—Sorry to hear of your hard luck, so far, especially with the second pair, which have had so many dead in shell. I cannot advise you to let this pair, which have already had three nests, try again, as, with the moulting season getting so near, the chances of any good results are very small, and you run the risk of over-taxing the birds. The other pair, which have only had one nest, may be allowed to go on and make another attempt.

To Save Young (A.J.A.).—Your feeding is most likely the cause. Next time get them on to a diet of plain Canary only as a staple when they are six weeks old, and reduce the egg-food to a small teaspoonful per bird every second day, and when from seven to eight weeks old make a little further reduction and give it only twice a week. Give a little summer rape separately each day from a month old, and half a teaspoonful of hemp twice or three times a week. Give a little green food every second day from the time they are about five weeks old—preferably chickweed, flowery heads of groundsel, or seed heads of shepherd's-purse. Let them have opportunities for frequent bathing, and keep cages strewn with clean, gritty sand.

Dirty Nests (S.S.S.S.).—Instead of its being the hen that soils round the edge of the nest since the young are hatched, I have no doubt it is the young birds that are responsible for it. Had it been the hen, the probability is you would have noticed the same thing before hatching. Even if it were the hen, I know of nothing practical that would cure the habit. Moral persuasion is lost on such subjects.

No Results (Rekab).—I should imagine the cock is rather young, and this, added to the bad weather all through this season, is responsible for his not filling the eggs properly. I would certainly allow them to try again, as the cock ought to be quite fit, and probably is so by this time. If the hen is a large feathery buff, clip off just the loose tips of the flowing feathers about the flanks and abdomen before mating them again, and see they have a well-made cosy nest when the hen begins to sit.

Sample of Colour Food (J. Q.).—The sample of colour food sent is quite good and fit for use this season. But if you have not enough of this last season's surplus to supply your needs all through this season, I would advise you to get what extra quantity you deem necessary and thoroughly blend it together with what you have, in order to avoid the possibility of having to resort to a wholly different lot of "feed" towards the end of the moult, which might have a bad effect upon the evenness of tone at the finish.

Eggs Drying Up (A Novice).—It is impossible to say with certainty what is the cause. Personally, I believe it is due to the structure of the shell being imperfect and too porous, which permits undue evaporation of moisture. I think also that these eggs are almost, if not quite, invariably sterile. To try to prevent them I would advise giving the hen an abundance of shell-forming material, and also twenty drop doses of chemical food in the water two days in every three when the hen is coming forward for laying.

Returning the Cock (A. J. Ward).—As the season is so far advanced I would only advise you to return the cock to the hen again on condition that she seemed quite ready and anxious to begin nesting in less than a fortnight from this time. If this condition is fulfilled so that you are able to let them begin not later than the middle of July, you may return the cock when the young one is from twelve to fourteen days old. Also put in another nest box at the same time to prevent the hen turning out the young one in case she wants to build again before the youngster has left the nest.

Not Laying (A.G.H.).—You can only exercise the great virtue of patience a little longer, and there is yet a chance that your hopes may be fulfilled. I certainly should not say the hen was barren until I had tried her next spring with similar results. Your feeding seems to be correct. Give about a teaspoonful of egg-food, with a pinch of gold of pleasure added, to the pair every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp and inga. Give two or three leaves of dandelion daily. For two days add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the drinking water.

A Partial Success. (Mrs. Sinkins).—If the hen appears anxious to go to nest again at once there is no reason why you should not allow her to do so, as in such a case the probability is the next clutch would be more fertile than the last. The cause of the young dying was undoubtedly the hen refusing to feed it. Simply looking at the young one without any further interference would not, save with exceptionally whimsical hens, be a sufficient cause. Most likely you gave too much egg food. Next time give this only in very small quantities, and fresh as often as possible, and try what removing the cock when she commences to sit will do in the way of preventing non-feeding.

Self-opinionated (J. H. Bennett).—You cannot reason with a hen of this type, which persists in laying eggs on the floor of cage and wants to sit there. There are but two courses open to you to save the situation—either to take away the eggs and give them to a more rational minded hen to hatch, or to humour her whims by placing the nest box on the floor of the cage. By this latter means such a hen will frequently perform her duties quite satisfactorily, though it generally means that the case cannot be cleaned out whilst breeding operations are going on. You should also consider whether this whim is the probable result of the cage and nest box not having sufficient privacy accorded them.

Young Dying (H.R.L.).—Your feeding is undoubtedly the cause of the trouble. See reply to "A.J.A.," and feed on these lines. From the time the young are taken from their parents until between four and five weeks old, give a small quantity of egg-food—not richer than one part egg to two parts crushed biscuit—daily, and only a very little green food. If any looseness appears to exist, withhold green food until they are six weeks old. By the time they are five weeks old get them on the dietary advised to "A.J.A." See that all food and water vessels, and also the food and water itself, are always quite fresh and pure. Keep cages nicely covered with clean, gritty sand. You might also profitably read reply to "Mr. S. A. Johnson."

Caught Red-handed (J.L.S.).—It is doubtful whether the hen which you caught in the act of making a meal of an unhatched chick will ever be worth while breeding with, especially as she has also proved so erratic in laying. If you wish to try her again next season, I advise you to give her an opportunity to nest again now, and try the effect of putting two nest eggs in the nest, and two shells of real eggs which have been blown and filled with a creamy compound of good, sharp mustard. Of course, you must plug the holes after to prevent contents escaping until the hen investigates matters. This may cure her. Keep cage and perches clean, and the cage floor strewn well with clean gritty sand or sawdust, and dirty feet should cease to be a trouble.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

About a Starling.

A.B.C.—In the breeding season the beak of the cock Starling turns yellow in colour, while his plumage carries a finer metallic sheen than does that of the hen. The hen, too, is heavily covered with large "spangling" (spots), whereas the marking of the cock is more in the nature of small "ticking." It is, as I have often explained, a cruel and unnecessary proceeding to cut the tongue of any bird. It does not "help it to talk." A bird does not use its tongue to talk with; its vocal organs are situated down in the wind-pipe. I have a friend who has both a Magpie and a Jay which are talking splendidly—object lessons of the truth of the statement that "tongue slitting" is unnecessary. The bird should be talked to as much as possible; some simple sentence such as "Pretty boy." Once they commence to articulate, they speedily pick up other words. Young children make the best of tutors, if they "make friends" with a bird.

Muling Matters.

Staggie.—(1) I have often bred Mules in the early days of August, and probably shall do so this year. But it is always dangerous, for if the hen Canary drops badly into moult, then one is likely to lose her young. I have to keep my hens going late, on account of the Hybrid pairs; I never start, however, until the season gets well advanced. (2) A full clutch of clear eggs counts as a round. A hen does not put in much time over them as a rule though, for most breeders take them away from her. If the first two clutches proved unfertile, most breeders would risk taking four lots of eggs from a hen; some might do so even for one. (3) I should say that there is something radically wrong with this ben's constitution (or with her internal economy). Give her to someone to put into an aviary. Get a hen which puts your cage-room to better use.

A Muling Quartette.

A. B. Gordon.—(1) Note the reply given to "Staggie' 'this week. (2) A cock Goldfinch is usually at his best, as regards Mule breeding, at the end of June and the beginning of July. Of course, there are scores and scores of Goldies doing all that is required of them long before that period. Some of my own Finches will, I hope, go on breeding until August has come in. (3) The Redpoll-Canary Mule is neither difficult to get nor difficult to rear. It is not so much sought after as some of the other crosses. (4) You might be able to breed a Mule from a Yellowhammer and a hen Canary. I should hesitate to say that it is an impossibility, though the two species are not of the closest as regards relationship. I have never seen a bird which appeared to me as being a genuine Yellowhammer-Canary Hybrid, and I have looked over a few. I understand fertile eggs have been obtained by certain fanciers.

A Difficult Matter.

F.A.A.—It is difficult to advise in a matter such as yours, for everything depends on whether the birds are really in breeding condition; and that cannot be told without they are seen. If the Linnet's beak is blue in colour, and he sings stoutly, then he would seem to be fit enough. And if he is feeling amorous, and the hens are not, then that is usually productive of fighting. I may say that a hen which is in breeding trim will build a nest (if given the opportunity) and lay eggs, even though a male bird has not been running with her. So your hens may be at fault. Hen Canaries in high breeding condition simply insist upon going to nest. Have you got hold of some old hens, maybe worn out? As I have said, not being able to see and examine the birds, I don't find it easy to advise you, but feel justified in recommending you to shelve the Linnet for the remainder of the season. If you could obtain a young loud-singing cock Canary and put with the hens for a week or so, this might result in their getting to business. I hope you are not making the mistake of interfering with the birds over-much, or of continually chopping and changing the cock bird about with different partners.

Sensation!

C. H. T.—You ask me "what food to give young Crossbills when hatched under a hen Canary." And you ask the question in a matter-of-fact style, as though it were quite an everyday proceeding for Canaries to bring up Crossbills. I have, however, never heard of its being done. I fancy there are very, very few birdy men in Great Britain in a position to obtain the eggs of the Crossbill. Further, I always understood that the Crossbill (Loxia curvirostra) was a particularly early breeder—as early as March—therefore, according to this eggs would hardly be obtainable now. I should be very interested if you would be kind enough to send fuller details. The hen Canary will only feed on the things common to her kind, viz., egg food, with greenfoods (try the seedy kinds, such as chickweed and shepherd's purse) and various seeds, hemp, Canary, rape, etc., while you might try cracked sunflower as well. I don't know whether a hen Canary would manage to rear the young of such large birds as Crossbills; she may feel flattered and think she has some young Cuckoos in her nest; and most birds seem to like that. An adult Crossbill requires the usual seeds, with sunflower in plenty, and a few mealworms daily. See the reply given "Miss Gray" in issue dated June 12th. The cock bird acquires red in its plumage when in a state of nature, whereas the hen is a greenish yellow; in captivity the cock bird loses the red and does not acquire it again.

Three Birds.

C. M.—What bird do you mean by Blackcap? The name properly belongs to the Blackcap Warbler; but many people apply it to the Great (or Oxeye) Tit. The Blackcap Warbler requires to be fed on a good mixture for insectivorous birds (many are advertised in our columns; or for a recipe see reply given "Garrulus" last week) with plenty of ripe fruit daily in addition (such as banana, sweet orange, apples, pears, grapes, raspberries, blackberries, etc), and some live food, as mealworms, scoured gentles, wasp grub, etc. The "Tom-Tit" (proper name Blue Tit) is not a very easy bird to keep in health in captivity for any length of time. This also requires to be given a good insectivorous food, with a fair supply of live-food (especially during the moulting period, when live ants' eggs are very valuable things to offer freely) and a few Canary, hemp, and sunflower seeds, lightly cracking the latter, if necessary. The Reed Bunting lives mainly on plain Canary seed, not being very partial to other kinds, though sometimes taking a little groats, crushed hemp, and other sorts. It should be offered some live-foods frequently, and given a chance to nibble at some of the usual kinds of green foods. You will get full information on all birds in the "British Bird Manual," published at the offices of CAGE BIRDS.

Identity and Treatment.

S. S. S.—Both from the description of the eggs and the plumage of the young birds, I feel sure the youngsters your ben Canary has reared are Greenfinches. It is not at all uncommon for fanciers to put the eggs of the Greenfinch under their Canaries. As regards "beginning them on hard food," you must deal with them in this matter exactly the same as you would were they young Mules. You will notice them begin to peck about the cage floor and the food vessels soon after they have left the nest, and that is the time to see there is some crushed seed handy in the cage for them to commence upon. You will be able to tell when they are cracking whole seed. For the food of an adult Greenfinch the most important item is a daily feed of good, sound (full kernelled) sunflower (or half sunflower, half safflower) seed. This can be offered in a separate dish, or placed among the stock mixture. The latter should be made up as follows: Canary and teazle, two pints each, hemp, summer rape, charlock, and linseed half a pint each. Wild seed mixture, and some good maker's special packet Finch mixture, can be occasionally offered for a change, while sunflower heads (gathered from the garden), full of seed, thistle, and hard-heads, seeding chickweed, groundsel, and shepherd's purse, should be freely given as in season. On such a menu, nicely varied, your Greenfinch should flourish. Don't forget the bath.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

Stopping an Amazon Screaming.

J. Cooper.—I fear I cannot give you an unfailing remedy; it is natural for Parrots to scream, and with some it becomes a perfect vice, and there is no breaking them of it. You have already made use of one remedy; continue to use this—cover up when screaming, remove cover as soon as it is quiet again. Parrots are rather quick to recognise punishment. I have also found slight (light) chastisement with a stick to lessen the nuisance, but this must be administered with caution, or you may make matters worse. It is not safe to use the stick at all unless the bird is tame and accustomed to you. As it probably has not yet got used to its present quarters, it is probable that fear is responsible for the screaming, and that as it settles down the screaming will be only occasional. It is cruel to withhold water, but as it has been without this for a time, you must only give it gradually at first, let it have a few sips three or four times a day—a little later the water can be left in its cage, but if you were to do so now, it would take too much. Your diet, apart from this, is satisfactory.

Green Fly, Market Values, etc.

"Thank You."—I use blight (green fly and other lice) from any plant I can get it from, barring only nightshades, laburnum, lilac, and the like — the plants you name and hedge-row herbage generally I should not hesitate about. It is quite true that consignments of foreign birds arrive here at fairly regular periods, and any species that comes over in good numbers are then cheap, but this will not apply to Grassfinches, which are, have been, and appear likely to remain very scarce. The price you name for Diamond Finches is quite reasonable, and it is some time since they have been below that. As a rule, very cheap birds, or anything else, turn out very dear in the end. Your Violet Tanager may be a male, but from the description you give me of its plumage it is immature; if it is adult, then it is a female, even though it utters a few notes.

Taking Charge of Parrot.

G.C.M.—I fear I cannot help you in this respect, and am quite sure you would get no one to take charge of it on the condition of being responsible for its value if it died while in their charge. You might by an advertisement in our columns get someone to take charge of it, on the condition of doing as well as they could by it at your risk. Again, the majority of owners of outdoor aviaries would not care (save to oblige a friend) to interfere with the comfort of their own birds by turning in a strange Parrot. Probably the Zoo might take it in on deposit for a time for you, if you wrote the Superintendent, but they would not accept any liability as to its life; though it would get the full attention given to the birds there. If you gave me full particulars as to how you feed, and length of time the bird has had this habit, I could tell you if there is any hope of effecting a cure without sending it away.

Bichenos Dying in Nest.

F. Freeth.—In such nights as we have been having, if the hen failed to brood, the young would be almost certain to die of cold. As well as putting the zinc upwards, I should also extend it twelve inches below ground level, bending it outwards in in the form of the letter L, and the portion which you have above ground should also be curved outwards a little at the top; mice, if they once get access to nests, will upset all breeding with small Finches. I have never found any harm from the use of the virus, though it is quite easy to put it in boxes covered with half-inch netting; the mice will get through, but the birds cannot. You will, of course, pick up all bodies of mice as soon as seen. You need have no fear of infected mice contaminating the birds. Cage the Grass Finch up separately and put two drops of tincture of opium into the drinking water (one ounce), say, for a week, if the trouble does not cease before. The soft food and greenstuff are very satisfactory, but you must also supply millet seed as well for the Bicheno. Keep a tin of this continually in the cage.

Aviary for Budgerigars.

T. W.—I should advise you to have this aviary six inches at least above glasshouse floor, and also top-boarded, so as to leave it secure against drip. Yes, a door at each end would be a great advantage for cleaning and feeding, and in the position named you should have good success. As regards numbers, I should only advise three pairs, as you have to provide accommodation not merely for the breeding pairs, but also for the young, till they are able to fend for themselves. You could have four pairs, but directly breeding commenced your accommodation would be much overstocked. You must hang up, as high as possible, at least from 6 to 8 husks, each one as far apart from the other as space will permit. Re your sick bird, make the drinking water for one day just saline with Epsom salts, and repeat this after a day's interval. Give as much grass in flower (seeding grass) as they will eat. Your diet is satisfactory and you should have good results once the birds have settled down.

Will it Talk?

E. Warren.—The Australian Roseate Cockatoo enjoys but a poor reputation in this country, though in its native country its reputation is just the opposite. However, most individuals usually utter a word or two, and nearly all are companionable birds, droll and accomplished acrobats, and fair mimics. I should certainly think it would sooner or later repeat, at any rate, a word or two. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and also teach it by constant repetition, not a mixture, but one word or short phrase, and along with this fondle and pet it as much as possible. Though, as a whole, Roseate Cockatoos are not talented talkers in this country, there have been accounts of several talented birds in our pages, and yours should certainly talk to some extent if you persevere with it.

Budgerigars, etc., in a C.P. Aviary

J. S. Novice.—The Cockatiels are really enough to comfortably fill the cage, but with this class of bird, overcrowding can be indulged in with less fear of ill effects than would be the case with most species. I cannot advise any other variety or further mixture, but if you pay strict attention to cleanliness, you may have a fair amount of luck with one pair each green and yellow Budgerigars and Cockatiels. In such confined quarters, canary, white and spray millet, with green food, grit, cuttle-fish and water will form an ample dietary; when they have young to feed a few oats and pieces of plain biscuit (dry), may be given to advantage. Being an all-wire cage, you must be careful to keep it where the wind cannot blow directly through it, and its inmates must be secure against draught. The hardiest species will soon "shuffle off" if subjected to draught. As they are very hardy, I do not anticipate any harm from keeping them in your greenhouse, providing it is not damp; if they appear to suffer at all, remove them to the attic where they should do well.

Waxbills and Finches.

J. Rhind.—(1) The outward sexual distinctions are infinitesimal. If you have adult birds to choose from, choose a large bold bird with very bright cheek patches, and another with smaller and less brilliant cheek patches and generally a little less lustrous in plumage, and you will have an almost certain pair. (2) Waxbills are shy breeders in captivity, and should not be overcrowded; in fact, those with large aviaries do not meet with any great luck in breeding them. Do not put in more than five pairs, four only would be better. It would accommodate 30 Waxbills kept merely as pets. (3) Very few Gouldians are at present in this country, and none are expected at present. I should certainly fix the present value of an acclimatised pair at a minimum of 40s. Very probably more would be got by advertising them and inviting offers. (4) They are merely sufferiug from the effects of the voyage, and the Zebras have been a little pulled about by their companions during the voyage to this country. Make their drinking water just saline with Epsom salts for one day, and supply liberally grass in flower (seeding grass), which is easily obtainable at present. Also blighty sprays from rose or fruit trees will decidedly help to bring them into condition. I should cage the Zebras separately till they are a little more fit.

What Birds with Budgerigars?

M.G.L.—I do not advise even Weavers and Javas with Budgerigars, though these usually keep out of harm's way. With the Budgerigars you could keep Madagascar and blue-winged Lovebirds, Cockatiels, and Rosella or Stanley Parrakeets—not a pair of each, your aviary is too small. It ought not to contain more than the following: Two pairs Budgerigars and one pair each Madagascar Lovebirds, Cockatiels, and Rosella Parrakeets. You could, of course, have Stanleys instead of the Rosellas, according to your taste. Of the Ornamental Finches you could keep the following together: Waxbills: Grey, St. Helena, Zebra and Orange-cheeks, common and green Avadavats; Fiuches: Zebra, Diamond, Ribbon, Spice, Parrot, Chestnut-breasted and yellow-rumped; Mannikins: Bronze, Magpie, white-headed, black-headed, and tricolour; long and Rufous-tailed Grassfinches; grey and green Singing Finches; Silverbills, white Java Sparrows, white a pair of the minute Diamond Doves and Chinese Quails would add variety. Practically one course of dictary would suffice for all, viz., seeds, green food, little ripe fruit, and soft food when there were young to be fed. Your aviary would accommodate about 30 birds in addition to the Doves and Quails, and the above list will give you ample scope to exercise your individual choice.

Budgerigars Not Breeding.

G.V.M.—You are making the common mistake of expecting foreign birds to settle down to breeding, the same as Canaries. It is quite true Budgerigars are easy to breed; in fact, give no trouble at all once they make a start; but they take a little time to settle down, some longer than others. But it is merely a case of exercising a little patience, and before the season is over your birds will be breeding freely, and your results satisfactory. Your diet is satisfactory, but I should keep in one corner of the aviary a heap of old mortar rubbish, and also scatter about crushed egg shells (table leavings), and at this season give them as much grass in flower (seeding grass) as they will eat. I should also put up another half dozen husks, keeping each husk as far as possible from the next nearest; you have plenty of space to do so. I do not advise much

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

(if any) examination of nests. Hang the husks mostly from the roof, with only one or two round the sides, fairly high up. It is quite possible you may have some young in the nests already, they don't usually leave the nest till they are fully fledged, and then not all on the same day. It is simply a case of settling down. From six pairs you will soon have a crowd. If you have any odd bird you had better either get a mate for it or cage it up, as odd birds upset the domestic arrangements of pairs. Hope you'll soon have luck. You could keep one pair each of Cockatiels, Red Rosella Parrakeets, with your Budgerigars, but the latter may take two years to settle down, but afterwards are fairly free breeders.

Parrot for Room Pet.

Mrs. B.—You set me a difficult task, as no two individuals, even of the same species, are alike in amiability, intelligence, etc.—1, African Greys carry off the palm for talking capacity, and some individuals are also very tame and companionable; but they are very difficult to acclimatise, and I should advise a purchase, if you have a grey, of one which has been some time in this country. Some few individuals even of this species never utter a word. As regards Cockatoos and Ringnecks, in variety, they are much on a par; they take more teaching than a grey. 2, The large Cockatoos are pretty equal as to intelligence, the Salmon-crested is a very fine bird, and I have seen specimens which were most companionable and intelligent. The same also applies to the Lemon-crested, but they are more common—some individuals of both species are difficult to break of the habit of screaming. 3, Most of those named would answer the purpose, but there are few of the larger Parrots or Cockatoos I should care to leave about the room, they would be sure to exercise their beaks on your furniture; they are woodcutters by nature. Even the smaller species need to be kept under observation—apart from this, any of them and also a blue-fronted Amazon would meet the case. The genus Brotogenys, including the All Green, Tui, white-winged and yellow-winged Parrakeets, are small, intelligent, become very tame, but are not talkers, these might be left to roam about almost at will. An old Parrot keeper, who has had most species, swears by a Senegal; these are very handsome, become tame, and some individuals talk fairly well. Any of the species I have named, the keeper of the Parrot house at the Zoo would show you, and also point out to you their good and bad points. 4, I advise either young birds, or those which are already tame and settled down. 5, Unless you have a pair of same species in a large cage, I cannot advise keeping two together; any of those named would live side by side in separate cages, but they are jealous creatures, and this promotes screamed protests from one bird while you are fondling or feeding another. 6, Cockatoos and ring-necks are the worst in this respect, but quiet and noisy specimens occur with every species. I should advise you to choose from the following:—Grey, Senegal, blue-fronted Amazon, or a pair of the small Brotogenys.

Brevities.

Keeping Live Ants' Eggs Fresh.—They can either be spread out on a wooden tray standing on moist cocoanut fibre and covered over with a cloth, or the fibre can be covered with a piece of linen sheeting, the cocoons laid on this, and again covered; but you must secure the "happy medium"—not moist enough to occasion mildew, yet sufficiently so to keep them drying up.

Keeping Species Together (M. R.).—I have never known Cockatiels to harm even the smallest Waxbill when confined in the same enclosure with them. You can safely add the Green Singing and Ribbon Finches to your series, and unless your aviary is very small, their introduction will not materially upset the present occupants of your aviary. The diet supplied for the Cockatiels, etc., will suffice for the species you propose to add to your series. You would find "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (advertised in this column) very helpful to you in treating these species.

What Parrot (Recipitant).—Your birds are without doubt immature and not yet in possession of full adult colouration, and I find myself quite at fault in naming them. Will you kindly inform me what country they have come from and how they have been fed? This will probably give me the clue I require, and enable me to name them for you; at any rate, I will have another search between now and next issue, when I shall hope to give you the information you require.

Diet, etc., for Red Cardinal (Chips).—These are the better for two or three mealworms per day in addition to ordinary seed diet. Seed mixture three parts each Canary and millet, and one part each hemp, oats, and sunflower seeds; well mix and let this form staple diet. Any insects may be given, such as spiders, beetles, cockroaches, smooth caterpillars, etc., as procurable; also ripe fruit, apple and banana, are usually favoured. They are hardy, but must be protected from draught and should have a fairly roomy cage, as it is rather restless and active. On the diet given your birds should thrive and keep in perfect condition.

Parrot with Cramped Feet (A.B.C.).—Your Australian Grey, or, rather, Rose-breasted Cockatoo, is, I should say, not suffering from cramp, but the trouble is congenital or, in other words, a natural deformity. Try fomenting them with hot water (not scalding), drying, and then paint with turpentine, but do not anticipate much (if any) improvement. Also for a month, providing the voidings do not become watery, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking water, and in between well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever.

Foreign Finches for Cages (Bird Lover).—Get one pair each Zebra Finches, Long-tailed Grass Finches, and White Java Sparrows. All have bred in cages, and should make an interesting trio to commence with. They will fare well enough in your unheated room, and should thrive on a simple diet of Canary, white and spray millet, green food, grit, etc., and a little paddy rice (rice in the husk), with soft food when they have young. They are not so free to breed as Canaries, and you cannot force them any way; and Grass Finches breed much later in the year than Canaries. I advise fixing a Hartz-travelling cage at one end of cage and an ordinary nest box at the other, with twiggy branches for perches. Supply hay and long grass, with a little moss as nesting material ,and do not pry into their domestic arrangements.

Zebra Finches Not Feeding Young (W. S., jun.).—Are they brother and sister? If so, this would be quite sufficient to account for the occurrence. Again, the mice being able to get access to nest box would also be sufficient to explain it. It is fairly easy to get over this difficulty. Choose a place for your nest box, which is clear of branches, tack on a good sized square of sheet zinc and fix your box in the middle of this, and unless your arrangements are such that they are able to leap on to the box from something in the near vicinity, the pests will be baffled. If you have another pair of these Finches in another aviary, I advise mixing the pairs; that is, change them about, either cocks or hens, whichever you can catch. Your diet is ample and the birds ought to do well.

Crested Canary Club Patronage.

SIR,—Once again, like Oliver Twist, I ask for more—space in CAGE BIRDS. The following clubs, in addition to those already mentioned, have made application for C.C.C. patronage. Cheltenham, Nov. 3rd, Judge Mr. T. Heath; Bournemouth, Nov. 23rd and 24th, no judge given; *Gateshead, Dec. 10th and 11th, Judge Mr. T. Taylor. (*Not a C.C.C. judge). Will members who have not already done so, forward their subscriptions?

Is it the First Bullfinch-Chaffinch Hybrid Hatched?

SIR,—I thought it might interest some of your readers to know that I had a Hybrid hatched from a cock Bullfinch and hen Chaffinch on the 19th of June. This was the second nest this season. The first nest contained five eggs, all clear; the second nest three, all fertile, but only one hatched; the hen has commenced her third nest to-day, June 28. Should be pleased to hear through your valuable paper if any of your readers have heard of such a rare Hybrid before.

When Does an Even-mark become an Uneven-mark?

SIR,—If any of the leading judges of the day would answer the following question, I am sure it would be good information for a great lot of Canary fanciers. I think at least half the fanciers do not quite understand the rule for Even-marked birds. I dare say a good lot know where the technical points are, but (for instance) take a bird marked on four of those points and which has a tick on its thigh, or top of its head, or which has the marking on one eye slightly separated, how many know whether this tick would cause the bird to be uneven-marked or not? I have heard some say it would cause it to be uneven-marked; while other fanciers say the bird would still be even-marked if the tick was not on a technical part of the bird. I hope to see someone reply.

INTERESTED.

The Hand-rearing of Wood Pigeons.

SIR,—Wood Pigeons are fairly easy birds to rear. They should be taken when they have begun to get quills, and should be put in a small box with some hay in it. The best food is made as follows: Get some clover and parsley, and, if possible, some turnip shoots, and chop them up nice and fine; then mix some barleymeal, chopped peas, and beans, and a handful of creed wheat or barley; then mix these all together, until they form a fairly stiff paste; finally make them into small pellets. To feed the Pigeons, open the beak with the left hand, and put the food in with the other. It must be pushed a good way down at first before the bird will swallow it. When the birds begin to get feathered they should be allowed to walk about a little, or they will become weak in the legs, and very soon die. As soon as the birds begin to flap and try to fly, they should be put in a wire cage about 6 feet square, with a small box for them to go into at night. Two or three perches should also be supplied for them; these should be put fairly close together, and low down, being gradually put higher and wider as the birds get stronger and better able to fly. The wire flight cage should have no bottom to it. It should be put on some short grass. A good-sized bath, rather shallow, should also be put in, and a small box with some salt and sand in. Their food should be placed upon a flat piece of board. As soon as they can eat, give them rice, split peas and beans, grain and tares.

FRASER.

The L. and P.O.S. and the "Weaker" Society.

SIR,—I read with great surprise the letter purporting to have been sent by a member of the L. and P.O.S. to CAGE BIRDS. He evidently looks on all other societies with a supercilious eye. He also believes in the doctrine of "throwing mud from behind a fence," or, in other words, trying to do a deal of mischief without disclosing his identity. He shows an ignorance that it is heard to conceive. Here are two societies that have agreed between themselves to hold a joint show, after having held several preliminary discussions at their respective monthly meetings, sub-committees having also been appointed to further the scheme; and yet this member expresses surprise at having seen the announcement to the Fancy in CAGE BIRDS. A very helpful member he is, I should say, and, for the interest he takes in his society, one they could very well do without. I note that he has his "weather eye" on the "Who's to benefit?" side of the question. The advantage of the scheme is a mutual one, and rightly should be so, when gentlemen of both societies are working hard to attain that end. The questions he asks are those that can always be answered at any monthly meeting, without having recourse to "throwing mud" through the medium of the Fancy Press. The "weaker society," as he terms it, has amongst its membership some of the most respected and prominent members of the Fancy, and is only second in esteem, respect and power to the L. and P.O.S. itself. This statement I am sure the L. and P.O.S. will not mind my saying. I am certain if the member reflects upon his letter he will feel deeply ashamed of himself, as such hitting below the belt brings more disgrace upon the man than discredit upon the D. and P.C.B.S. It is such paltry actions as these that cause a nausea amongst the honest members of the Fancy, and all who have the slightest regard for the feelings of their fellow club members. I assume, of course, that he is a member of the L. and P.O.S., but he shows such a small knowledge of the doings of the society that it is difficult to believe he can be so. The letter has been written with the sole intention of doing as much injury as possible; there can be no question of that. The fact he cites that many members of the one society are also members of the other, only strengthens the proof that the combination is for the interests of both. Those gentlemen of the L. and P.O.S. with whom I am acquainted will not thank him for his interference, and the best thing he can do for all concerned is to keep his name to himself, as it is quite certain that the finger of scorn will point in no other way than in his own direction. There is an old dictum, and one that I respectfully hope the member will long retain in his memory, "If you cannot do any good never do any harm." I am sorry that correspondence is necessary in the Press, but such a scurrilous attack could not be allowed to pass unchallenged. One thing the member may not like is the fact that the great show of 1909—the amalgamated show of the L. and P.O.S. and the D. and P. C.B.S.—bids fair to be one of the largest and best organised shows that it will be the pleasure of the Fancy to witness.

H. W. TOMSETT, D. and P.C.B.S.

SIR,—I notice in your issue of June 26 a letter from "A Member of the L. and P.O.S." under the above heading, but I see that he has not signed it. When this occurs I take it that either the writer has forgotten his name or he is ashamed of it. He wishes to know why these societies have decided to join hands in a member's show. If he will tell us who he is, and why he has not referred to his own committee perhaps some of our members will explain to him, but if we are to have a discussion on the matter, let us do it like men, and not under a nom de plume.

S. STEPHENS,
Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.

SIR,—With reference to the letter published in CAGE BIRDS of June 26, signed "Member of the L. and P.O.S.," stating he noted with surprise the announcement to the effect that the L. and P.O.S. and Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., contemplated holding a joint Members' Show in the autumn, I fail to divine the cause of any surprise at all in the matter. Your correspondent (who, I venture to think, should have appended his name to his communication) asks whether any advantage is likely to accrue to the members of the L. and P.O.S. by the proposed amalgamated show; but I would respectfully submit to him that the gentlemen belonging to this powerful and popular society are, as a body, much too good fanciers to look at the matter in such an obviously narrow spirit as this. They were, as befits true sportsmen and Englishmen, actuated by much loftier motives, and in extending the hand of good-fellowship to the members of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., they have set a noble example which might, I would submit, be followed with advantage in other directions. It is, in my opinion, such petty quibbles as your correspondent would stir up that work such incalculable mischief amongst birdy men, and I think the sooner this sort of thing is dropped the better it will be for the Fancy at large.

Proposed New Society for Mansfield?

SIR,—Where are the fanciers at Mansfield? Cannot we start another society in a town like Mansfield, where there are so many supposed fanciers? I think they are "backward at coming forward," or else the Fancy is declining in our town. I ask fanciers again, try and get to the next meeting at the Charter Arms, at 7 o'clock, on Saturday, July 10th, 1909. This is my final asking. So now, fellow fanciers, come and work hand in hand, and let us try and show the Fancy what kind of stuff there is to deal with on the show bench in Mansfield. Turn up in good numbers at 7 o'clock.

J. SMITH, Sec. Pro. Tem.

A Rush for Shepherds Purse.

SIR,—In reference to my letter published in your issue of June 19th, and in which I promised to send a sample of Shepherd's purse to a correspondent, I may say that I have had an enormous number of enquiries for same. I was surprised to find that your valuable paper had such a wide circulation, as the inquiries came from all parts of England and Scotland. I can assure you it has taken up all my spare time to reply to them all, and still they keep coming. I am also pleased to say that I have had several replies thanking me for sending samples. In case any more of your readers should like samples of same, I still offer to send a sample to anyone sending stamped addressed envelope, and hope you will be good enough to print this in your next issue. I may add that I have forty-two young up to present.

Song Thrushes which Breed in a Cage.

SIR,—Allow me a small space in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, re Mr. Downing's Song Thrushes. I called upon Mr. Downing one Saturday afternoon and saw the first egg laid by his hen Blackbird and cock Thrush; I also saw his noted hen Thrush, which has done a lot of winning for him at Manchester, and which he calls "Lady Jane." This hen Thrush bred last year, as I saw her then sitting on eggs; I also saw a young Thrush which lived for two days. I called on Mr. Downing on June 23rd, but as he was away Mrs. Downing showed me the hen Thrush sitting very closely on either the young or the eggs (they were expecting the latter to hatch that day). I may state that the size of the cage is about 6ft. long with a sliding partition in the middle. The hen Thrush is placed in one side; and the cock Thrush, which he runs with both hens, was then along with the hen Blackbird. The cages were about 4ft. away from the back door, and they were looking in the pink of condition. I also saw the noted Goldfinch and a hand-reared hen Bullfinch; but while these had not made a start at nesting, they looked as if they would not be long before doing so. My next inspection was upstairs. In Mr. Downing's breeding room I saw some grand Yorkshires, both old and young. I counted 43 young ones, and some eggs were due to hatch. Among the young I saw some promising ones, that will help to keep Mr. Downing's name up as in the past with his Yorkshires. I wish him success.

What is Sufficient Payment for a Borrowed Bird?

SIR,—Perhaps one of your readers may be kind enough to answer the following. I borrowed a cock Canary from a friend of mine to put up with a reliable hen which I bred with last year. She is two years old, and the cock about seven years old. So far, I have had good luck. In her first nest she had five eggs and hatched five young ones. All of them are doing well. They were hatched on May 4th. Second nest, another five eggs, and the hen hatched out five more on June 13th. They too are doing well, and she will be starting to build again before the end of the present week. My friend called round to see how the birds were getting on, and I asked him what he expected in return for lending me the cock bird, and he said "Half the young ones." Well, I thought that out of all reason, and I told him I would ask some breeders their opinions. I asked several who have bred Canaries, and they thought it was the rule to let the owner of the cock bird have the first pick, one out of the first nest; and if I liked I could give him another hen unrelated. I should then be paying him well, as he had had no trouble, and I had had all the work to look after them and feed them when they asked for food. I have got that chance, as I work at home, and have them in my work room. I may mention that I have another pair I put up in March. The hen had five eggs in her first nest, and hatched out five young ones on April 23rd. When her young ones were 26 days old she started to nest again, and had six eggs in her second, all of which she hatched out; the six young ones are all doing well, and are away from the old ones. Now she has started her third nest, in which she has, at the time of writing, five eggs. So I am getting good luck this year. The hen is 11 months old, and the cock must be about nine years old, for I have bred with him for seven years. So he is, no doubt, a champion. I must now close, but I hope some breeder will see this and give me some idea what is a just recompense to give my friend.

A New Society for Nantyglo and District.

SIR,—A meeting was held at Bush Hotel, Nantyglo, Mon., on 23rd June, for the purpose of forming a Fur and Feather Society for Nantyglo and district. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. W. Evans (Wann Ebbw). The following gentlemen were elected: Chairman, Mr. J. W. Evans; vice-chair, Mr. J. Cave; Mr. H. Pritchard, treasurer; Mr. R. L. ## My Experiences as a Hybrid Breeder.

SIR,—Having devoted my spare time these last three years to Mule and Hybrid breeding, I may say I have been very successful with same, having bred no less than twelve Hybrids and a few good Mules, all of which have found new homes with the leading exhibitors in Scotland, England and Wales. In my experience Hybrid breeding requires a good amount of patience, also regular attention in the matter of the feeding of the various pairs one is experimenting with, not forgetting the study of the habits of the birds, which alone accounts for a certain amount of success in this most interesting branch of aviculture. The fact is Hybrid breeding is not the easy task some breeders try to make us believe it is. However, a few hints are always appreciated by young fanciers, and what I have to relate is what I have practised myself in Hybrid breeding. In the first place a few Britishers are easily acquired by asking of any local farmer or gamekeeper the privilege of catching the birds on their grounds. It is the cheapest and best way for any working man fancier getting a good stock of Britishers together to catch his own birds. After same have been secured and steadied down, pick the biggest and the best-coloured birds (not forgetting the tamest ones) for Hybrid breeding, for in my experience I have found the steady Finch always the best fertiliser; but there are always different opinions on this point. Hybrid pairs should be put together as early as possible so as to get them settled down and used to each other before the breeding season has actually commenced. I consider a box cage 24in. by 18 by 10 quite suitable for Hybrid breeding, with a nest box in the corner. This should be put in along with nesting material about the beginning of April, when most likely, if in condition, the Finches will not be slow in starting operations. When they have started in earnest to "keep house" have your perches as near the bottom of the cage as possible, and do not forget to cover the bottom with plenty of dried wild seeds or any soft material, such as sawdust, dried moss, or such like; it is most essential to the breeder to secure as many whole eggs as possible, as he will find that hen Finches, as a rule, are not very particular where they drop their eggs when in confinement. I have had two Finches, however, that laid almost every egg in the usual Canary nest box without any nesting material whatever. But to be on the safe side I would advise the young fancier to try and be near at hand when the eggs are being laid, as many a good egg gets "tapped" by the neglect of this very special duty. I have found that hen Finches lay their eggs at almost the same time every morning providing they are in good health and condition. As a matter of course, too, the Hybrid breeder must always have a number of hen Canaries in his bird room to act as foster parents. I consider this is the safest course to pursue in testing the eggs, and securing any young that chance to come forth. And by all means when any young are hatched give the foster parents as much wild green food as possible, with plenty of green fly on same, or any insect life that can be got. I have found out (to my loss) that egg food given alone has not the rearing qualities of these things. If you notice the hen Canaries neglecting their foreign offspring, do not be afraid to give the young ones a sop yourself, as many a good bird has been saved by hand feeding. At four weeks old they are beginning to do well for themselves, providing you crush their seeds. Hemp and sunflower and soaked rape I have found them very fond of, with the usual supply of wild green food which they always seem to enjoy. The breeding season over, and if successful, select your best specimens to be colour-fed, for Hybrids non-fed are of no use for the show bench, that is if you are after first honours.

Linnet Singing at Leeds.

Unvarnished Reports versus Bluff and Bounce.

SIR,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS, in regard to the Linnet Club held at the King's Head, Leeds, and its members. I have no fault to find with them whatever, but I was disappointed when I could not enter my bird one day as it was a club sing; but I had the pleasure of hearing all the birds sing, and I must admit I heard some splendid singing. I was well satisfied with the judge, too, as he called the prizes out. I am glad to see I was right—15s. 6d. and a copper kettle, 1st prize, and also that Mr. Soloman's bird did not win at Buslingthorpe Lane, only getting second prize, 6s. I see the Secretary has also contradicted it. But from the way the report read in CAGE BIRDS it might have won £25 in two contests instead of 15s. 6d. and 6s. I am pleased to see I am perfectly right as regards the bluff and bounce.

A Plea for the Prohibition of Smoking at Shows.

SIR,—It is appalling to find so little interest taken in birds by some exhibitors other than in the exhibition points. The comfort and care of the birds in many cases are almost lost sight of. How many die as the result no one can fully judge. I feel sure you will agree with me that there is certainly one feature of the show room which ought to be severely dealt with; it is the destruction of birds by the poisonous gases given off in tobacco smoke—carbon dioxide and carbon-monoxide. Air saturated with these gases is detrimental to the human animal, but much more so to birds with their more sensitive and delicately constructed breathing apparatus. The exhibitor may stay only a short time in it, but the poor exhibit must stay till the show is over. I consider night shows are an abomination, as far as the birds are concerned. The exhibition room is frequently more like a pot-house tap-room (I mean as regards tobacco smoke): it is neither fit for the birds to stay in, nor can one bring a lady friend to see them. If museums, art and other exhibitions consider it wise to prohibit smoking, surely it is much more so for cage bird exhibitions, where the risk to the exhibits is so considerable. I trust to see this reform brought about.

The Song of the Linnet North and South.

SIR,—I see in CAGE BIRDS of June 26, that a London fancier gives a few notes on the song of the Linnet. He says a good Linnet should start with what is known as "Tolic," and should finish with a "weet," as follows: "Tolic, tolic, hic, hic, quay, ter, weet; tolic, tolic, lug, lug, cee, weet; tolic, tolic, lug, chow, weet." As far as Yorkshire and Lancashire quality Linnet singing is concerned, the London fancier is, as the sauey boy would put it, "up the pole." That class of Linnet singing we do not want here. Then he says: "Tolic, tolic, gipsy, weet, chow." If he had to back this class of Linnet against the Yorkshire Linnet or Lancashire Linnet he would get well beaten and well laughed at, as it is the worst singing I have seen put down on paper.

SIR,—Permit me to reply to "A London Fancier" on Linnet singing. He wants to enlighten those who keep Linnets. Let me tell that gentleman that he must first learn what good Linnet singing is himself before trying to teach others. "Tolic, tolic, hic, hic, quay, tar, weet." These are bad notes. We call this "pitching." Our club in Blackburn is well known for quality Linnet singing. I am sorry our friend is so far from us, but if he could come over any time when our singing contests are on, I could both enlighten and convince him that he has never heard a good Linnet. Just compare this song to the above: "Scraping" in three voices, "peeing" in three, turning into "light reeing," and gradually turning deeper and deeper until it gets into the heavy "water blubber," and going as long as a German Roller. I am sure if he, a London fancier, heard this song, he would go home, and open the cage door and let all the "Tolic, tolic, hic, hic, quay" birds fly.

GEORGE ROSTRON.

SIR,—Will you allow me space in your paper, CAGE BIRDS, re the above subject? A London fancier I see gives a few notes on the song of the Linnet. He says the Linnet wants to start with "Tolic," and finish with a "weet." I should call that Parrot singing. Then he says, "Tolic, tolic, Joey, ter, winey." I call that foreign language, not Linnet singing. Then he says, "Tolic gipsy, weet, chow." If this is the London Linnet singing, they are to be pitied, as I never heard such singing in my life. Further, he says it is little short of madness for people to call themselves "Linnet kings." Well, anyone can call himself a Linnet king, but I think the gentleman who titles himself as the "Original Linnet King" is worthy of the honour, and is acknowledged by all bird lovers to be one of the finest bird judges known; and the prizes that his birds have won speak for themselves. I do not like to see anyone run down when there is no cause. I believe in giving credit where credit is due. I should very much like to know how they sing in London. Is it for quality singing or for time singing? Or how long do they sing? and how many birds do they put up at a time? Someone of us may come over and hear them if we are given the correct names of the houses.

A LOVER OF THE FANCY.

A Black Goldfinch's Babies.

What Will They Be Like?

SIR,—I saw in CAGE BIRDS' issue of June 26th the letter headed as above. I read it with interest, inasmuch as I was the former owner of the bird. I may inform Mr. Edden, who claimed the bird at the last Palace Jubilee Show, that the Goldie, now bluish black, bred in the years 1907 and 1908, but was then in normal colour. It is the most successful bird that I ever owned. When it was a Greypate I had the good fortune to rear 26 Goldie-Canary mules from him out of 28 fertile eggs, getting one round each with six different Canary hens. As for its colour, I should say it has won in Goldie classes—3rd in local class of 19, 1st in local class of 27, and 4th in open competition of 18. The strange part about it is that last August I put him in a flight cage for the moult, and fed him as in previous years with plenty of wild seeds, but instead of moulting out a normal coloured bird, it turned out all over bluish black, except on the under part, an experience I have seen before in the case of a hen Goldie I had; but she was not so deep in colour. I hope Mr. Edden will write CAGE BIRDS readers again, should he be lucky to rear the Mules, and give us an idea as to what colour the Mules have come out.

How a Novice Caught the Bird Fever.

SIR,—It has struck me what a similarity there is between "bird fever" in the birds and "bird fever" in the fancier. I might say that I know from experience it is possible for a novice to get both "bird" and CAGE BIRDS' fever. When the fever first caught me I was only the possessor of just one splendid Roller Canary, which sings much to my delight still, although there are other Roller companions with him, and just a few young Rollers. Anyway, I am a great believer in books and the Press. So, in the heated condition of bird fever, I might have been seen outside the paper shop, looking for a paper on the Canary Fancy. My eyes soon caught sight of CAGE BIRDS, and I went for it, and my fever heightened to wandering (after birds), and, needless to say, when the next week came (it was the "Spring Number") I was wondering about the Norwich Plainhead, and kept my eyes open, as far as the advert-pages were concerned, till I saw an advert., of Mr. ——, and, possessing a cycle, my feverish spirit took me for the pleasurable run of eight miles by the sea, to see Mr. ——, who was reported to possess some good Norwich Plainheads. Arriving at his residence, I was introduced to the "birdy man," who, by the way, I was fully impressed knew a thing or two, and would doubtless be very good company for a novice desiring to make progress in the Fancy. Many good hints were passed on to me, and I had a general inspection of cages, nest pans, colour foods, and, above all, the splendid Plainheads he had in his breeding room. Well, after a good opportunity of inspecting some of the birds he advertised in CAGE BIRDS, we came to terms concerning two pairs of splendid birds, which accompanied me home on the carrier of my cycle. I was also greatly impressed with our conversation, and the willingness of men in the Fancy to do all they can, and, to use their own words, "encourage the Fancy," among the novices who have been smitten with a love for it. There I must close, or else the Editor will doubtless think I am still somewhat delirious on "birdy matters." Well, the parcel was only just being opened at the railway bookstall when I arrived there one morning for a copy of the only paper of the Fancy that I take—CAGE BIRDS. Congratulations on its wonderful "tips," and the splendid manner in which your paper is arranged.

A Satisfactory Start in the Canary Fancy.

SIR,—Having read the letter in CAGE BIRDS of June 19th, headed "Lines From An Old Breeder," I wish to say that this is my second season of bird breeding, my stock consisting of Yorkshires and Germans. I bred twelve birds last season, and all gave every satisfaction. This season I have fifty now on sticks, and eighteen young ones in nests, and all are in the pink of condition. I have only lost three birds during this season. I have taken great interest in CAGE BIRDS, especially in relation to the species I have mentioned, having gained a great lot of experience through its columns. I have been a purchaser of CAGE BIRDS for upwards of two years. I may say that my feeding is not unlike "Old Breeder's," though I give mine arrowroot biscuits more than bread, and with boiled eggs. I think this helps to make both strong and healthy birds.

Some Hints to Would-be Hybrid Breeders.

SIR,—With reference to a most interesting letter in last week's CAGE BIRDS, entitled "Some Hints to Would-be Hybrid Breeders," may I, as a novice in this branch of the Fancy, ask Mr. Lovatt, the writer of it, if he will be good enough to give a few particulars about the Canaries used for hatching out the eggs? What breed of Canaries are best suited for this purpose? Also, must the Canaries be paired up at the same time as the Britishers? If so, the Canaries might go to nest at once, whereas it might be a week or two before there were any eggs from the Finches. I have been very successful with the foreign birds which I have kept from time to time (I was fortunate enough to take second prize and a medal at the Crystal Palace a year or two ago with the only bird I have ever exhibited), due entirely to the information gleaned from CAGE BIRDS, which I have taken ever since it was first published. I am sure we are all much indebted to those old and experienced fanciers who are good enough to give us the benefit of their experience.

COLONIST.

Two Crests and a Cup at Far-away Cape Town.

SIR,—I notice a subscriber to CAGE BIRDS in far away South Africa is asking a question as to which bird should win the cup given at Cape Town Cage Bird Show. Now, it appears the cup was given for the best 1908-9 Colonial bred Crested Norwich. The competition was in two classes only—classes 99 and 100, described as follows: "Class 99, Norwich Ticked Evenly Marked or Unevenly Marked, any colour Crest" (three entries); and "Class 100, Norwich Green Crest" (also three entries). Now, it appears the cup was given to winner in class 99. The bird is described as "a dirty grissley without a tail, and a bird two or three years old," which the judge is stated to have said. Winner in Class 100 is described as "a foul green with good crest wings and tail, and shown in good condition." Now, I should assume the winner in Class 99 and winner of cup, described as a dirty grissley without a tail, would have a far better crest than the winner in Class 100, and be a much more valuable bird. Else what could be the judge's idea in giving it the cup? But, as a matter of fact, the same bird being tailless, and an old bird, shown in a young class, should certainly be sufficient to disqualify it altogether, and the cup given to winner in Class 100, providing, of course, he was a 1908-9 bred bird, and a better bird than second or third in Class 99. This, I think, would be the decision of any of our judges this side "the herring pond," and I don't see why the judge should give the cup to this bird, as it plainly states: "Section G, young birds, Colonial bred season 1908-9."

The Breeding of Softbills in Cages.

SIR,—I was much interested in reading Mr. Downing's letter in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS, and I wish him every success. Before I left Australia I used to keep Thrushes, Blackbirds and Skylarks, and being a new hand I was not quite sure whether it was a common thing to breed these birds in captivity in this country, but after reading Mr. Downing's letter I find it is not, so I will give you my experience. I kept a pair of Skylarks in a cage 24ins. by 15ins., 20ins. high on the back verandah of my house. The hen made a nest in a thick turf I had put in, and laid four eggs. She sat on them the full time, but they were all clear. Next time she laid three eggs, and to my surprise and pleasure one young one was hatched out. But when it was two days old I found it out of the nest. The cock had evidently pulled it out, and had almost killed it. I put it back in the nest and took the cock bird out. The hen would stand over the nest with food in her mouth calling to the young one, but it was too far gone to open its mouth, and the next morning it was dead. A pair of Blackbirds also at the back door brought out four strong young ones, but whether it was because I did not give them the right food or not, or whatever the reason, I do not know, but they only lived about four days. Had I then been a reader of CAGE BIRDS I should have had a try at hand-feeding. I also had a hen Thrush which built a nest and laid, but she had no mate. I intend to have another try at Softbill breeding on my return in October next. I trust Mr. Downing will let us know what luck he has had.

The Y.C.C. of Ireland.

SIR,—We the undersigned beg to draw the attention of the members of the Y.C.C. of Ireland to the report in your last issue, the said report being misleading, in stating that eight members were present. This practically constitutes the Dublin Committee. To be correct, there were nine members of the club present at the meeting, and from the report it would lead one to believe that we had supported the propositions contained therein; but, owing to the method then adopted of checking the accounts of 1908 (it being contrary to the resolution proposed and carried at the previous meeting, held June 3rd, of which meeting, by the way, no report found its way to the Fancy Press), the undersigned left the meeting as a protest against this procedure, and had nothing whatever to do with the subsequent business of the meeting, which we consider was altogether illegal, as Mr. Rooney's resignation was fully dealt with at meeting of June 3rd, when it was proposed and seconded by two of the undersigned, and carried: "That Messrs. Rooney, Mulligan, Devins, and McQuaide be written to to ask them to reconsider their resignation," which course was not carried out in at least one case for certain. Hence our action in this matter.

*The Grateful Yellowhammer.

One day two children went for a walk in a wood. As they were sauntering along they heard a cry which came from a bird in distress. When they came to the spot whence the cry proceeded, they saw a nasty, silver grass-snake destroying the four eggs that were in the nest. The children then destroyed the horrid grass-snake, and left the mother Yellowhammer singing merrily. A few days after these children were in a boat, when they lost control of it, and it was quickly floating down the river towards a weir, when all of a sudden they saw the same little bird fly over towards the bank. To their great surprise they saw it go up to a man, and whistle in his ear, which made the man look up and see the children. The man then got them safe to land, and be told them he would never have heard their cries or seen their danger, if it had not been for the little Yellowhammer.—Sent by Percy Gilbert, Shoebury Villa, Shelley Road, Ongar, Essex.

An Owl Saved from Death.

Last Whit Monday, I had the pleasure of going with my father for the first time to study nature. He took me to a large forest, where there were plenty of birds. And after going to the centre of the woods we heard a great noise like flapping of wings. We made our way in the direction of the sound until we came to an old quarry, and there under the roof was an Owl, tangled in a bunch of honeysuckle. And with great difficulty father climbed up and reached her. And oh! what a pretty creature she was with her round face. She looked to me like a flying cat. Father gave the Owl her liberty, and told me to be always kind to dumb creatures. This is a fact and not a story.—Sent by Owen Glyndur James (age 7), Kilgurran School, Pembrokeshire.

* Ode to a Canary.

Thrice welcome, little golden sprite;
My call thou hearest in thy flight,
And poising on my hand to light,
Without dismay.
Thou seem'st to read my heart aright,
Thou winged fay!
Thou feelest that I could not harm
A dear, wee bird. Besides, thy charm
Is ever potent to disarm
So fell intent;
And thy least signal of alarm
Would harm prevent.

Holden (Muirkirk); Norwich and Borders (not yet fixed); British and Foreign birds, J. Adam (Glasgow). It was left in the Secretary's hands to fix on judge for Norwich and Border sections.—J. ROBERTSON, junr., sec.

LANCASHIRE C.A.

For our meeting at Littleborough on June 26th a good attendance was present, Mr. J. Naden (president) in the chair. Seeing we have got a large number of applicants for patronage, it was decided to hold our next meeting at Rochdale O.C. Rooms on the date of the R.O.C. first feather show, July 17th, when it is hoped we shall have a large attendance again, as the increased number of applications is a matter of much importance.—WM. ADAMS, Sec.

HIGHGATE & HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at headquarters, the Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill, N.W., on June 24th. The chair was taken hy Mr. B. Johnson. Five new members from Henley-on-Thames, Ealing, Hornsey, and Highgate having been nominated for membership, the Chairman called upon Mr. W. Morris for his lecture on colour-feeding, which he gave in right good style. One and all profited much. Many questions were asked and were readily answered by Mr. Morris. A hearty vote of thanks was given to him for his capital lecture, it heing the desire of all present that Mr. Morris give us another visit at an early date. Mr. Morris returned thanks and the meeting closed. Should any member not have received schedule, etc., for young stock show, a post-card will oblige me.—GEO. H. NEAL, Hon. Sec.

WANDSWORTH AND DIS. F.A.

The society held a table show and judging competition for cage birds, on June 17th, at headquarters, the Red Lion Rooms, York-road, Wandsworth, when a good collection of birds put in an appearance, Mr. Easterling kindly placing the awards.

CAN. (bred prior to 1909): 1, 2, c, Lupton and Jordan; 3, vhc, Denham; hc, Lightfoot. BRED 1909: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Lupton and Jordan. BRIT. OR MULE: 1, Earl (Goldfinch); 2, vhc, hc, c, Warwick (Mule) (Goldfinch Mule) (Linnet and Goldfinch); 3, Lupton and Jordan (Greenfinch). All members present took part in the judging competition, Mr. Jordan winning with the greatest number of points. Amongst those present we noticed Messrs. Earl, Sage, Murrell, Bushby, Poltifer, Lupton, Jordan, Lightfoot, Herring, Warwick, Mr. and Mrs. Denham, etc., and Summers, Hon. Sec. The cage bird section of the annual show was discussed, and it was proposed that we apply to C.B.U. for licence to hold the show under their rules. Mr. Easterling was unanimously elected to judge our annual show at the Baths, November 30th and December 1st. Altogether a very pleasant evening being spent.—W. SUMMERS, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

During the judging at the Young Bird Show, held at 65, Granger-street, Newcastle, on June 16th, a meeting was held, Mr. Davison in the chair. The following new members were proposed and accepted: Mr. W. Curry (Newcastle), Mr. J. Moss (Stanhope), Mr. Bairstowe (Langley Park). A vote of sympathy was passed with the widow of our late member, Mr. Johnstone, of Blaydon, who is the second member we have lost this year; both joined at our last annual meeting. A discussion took place as to the form the special should take for the nest feather shows. It was, however, decided to leave it over for the present, so that further subscriptions might he invited. We have about 16s. promised. Subscriptions are due and should be paid at once to ensure members' names being included in the list of members in the year hook, and to enable them to compete for the autumn specials. Will those societies who desire our patronage and have not yet applied, please do so, as we allot it in July? The following have applied: Darlington, Nov. 27th; Wallsend, November 12th and 13th; Sunderland, Nov. 19th and 20th; Gateshead, Dec. 10th and 11th; and Harrington, October 28th and 29th. The Secretary put in quotations for show cages with Yorkshire Union perches. Will those members who require cages for the coming season communicate with me? The price will not exceed 1s. 6d. each, including carriage, hut we must take at least three dozen. Over two dozen were booked at the meeting. The Sec. was also instructed to become an agent for Sandiford's Royal Red Feed, Mr. Sandiford having given a cup for competition amongst users of his food. The profits are promised to the club's funds. The next tahle show will he on July 6th, Judge Mr. W. Thompson.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Hon. Sec.

CINNAMON MARKED Y.C.C.

A committee meeting was held at Gt. Horton on June 19th. The open first feather show heing held on the same date gave the secretaries and committee an opportunity to collect a large number of subscriptions and to make new members, aud full advantage was taken of same, the secretaries not having a moment to spare from the opening to the closing of the show. About eighty new members have now been obtained, and it is hoped the hundred mark will he reached before the year hook goes to print. The President, Mr. W. Richmond, occupied the chair, and almost all the committee were present. Business done:—Decided "that an advertisement he inserted in the Yorkshire Union Book;" "that we again exchange medals with the Toronto C.B.S.;" "that we have a year book with rules and list of members' names and addresses as usual;" "that the date for accepting applications for patronage he July 17th (applications received after this date to he considered too late for allotment);" "that no exhibitor be allowed to win more than three first prizes in novice classes where our patronage is given, unless such exhibitor is competing for the club special as a member of the club."

Competitions and Specials.—In open competitions, trophy value £4 4s., for most points. Prize value £2 10s. 6d. for second most points (10/6 towards this special being given by Mr. W. H. Shackleton). Third prize left open. Fourth prize 10/6 (given hy Messrs. Garnett and Towers. In amateur competition (for members who have not won more than three first prizes previous to current season), first prize value 25/-, second value 20/-, third value 15/- (given by Mr. F. Carl, proprietor of CAGE BIRDS). In novice competition (for members who have not won a first prize in open competition), first (most points) trophy value 40/-, second value 30/-, third value 21/- (given by Mr. A. Cooper), fourth silver club medal with enamelled centre (given hy Mr. W. Crabtree). Mr. J. W. Ramsden will give a silver-plated cruet for most points in open competition, and one for most points in novice competition for birds moulted on his peppers. The Toronto medals also to he given for most points in open and novice competitions respectively. A gold medal, value 15/-, has since heen promised by Messrs. R. Sutcliffe and Sons for the novice competition. Societies intending applying for patronage will please note particularly the date when same must be in the Secretaries' hands, and intending new members should send in their names at once to ensure their appearing in year book. Advertisements in the hooks will be inserted at the usual rates, and all matter must be in by July 17th. The next meeting will be held on July 24th at the Market Tavern, Bradford.—H. H. TOWERS (of Garnett and Towers), hon. secs., 8, Colne Road, Glushurn, Crosshills, near Keighley.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Usual monthly meeting held at headquarters, the Swan and Peacock, Wolverbampton, when a very good muster, considering the weather, turned up to hear Mr. Max Jacquemin give his paper on "The Early History of the Roller Canary." But those of us who faced the stormy elements were amply repaid. Mr. Jacquemin had written a very instructive and interesting paper, chiefly drawn from many old German books dealing with the history of the Roller, which he had translated into English for our benefit. After Mr. Jacquemin had read his paper, a keen discussion ensued, in which everyone present took part. We decided that at our next monthly meeting several of us would take hirds and have a general discussion on the tours which Rollers sing. This should prove hoth instructive and interesting to all.—J. H. WILLOWS, Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

First of a series of Young Bird Shows held on June 26th. The had weather told against a large entry, many members not caring to hring their young birds out in a heavy downpour of rain. Norwich, Cinnamons, and Crests had all to be cancelled, but the remaining classes came up fairly well, and made a very nice little show. What was lacking in numbers was fully compensated for in the quality of the exhibits staged, especially the Borders, which were a very fine lot indeed. Mr. J. T. Clark (Sunderland) judged, and gave every satisfaction. A judging competition was subsequently held amongst the novices, and proved a source of great interest to them. Will members please remember that the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd birds in each class at this show are debarred from competing at the two remaining shows? Considering the weather, the show was fairly well attended, and one new member joined us, viz., Mr. R. Newcombe (Monkwearmouth). Others are cordially invited. The next show will be held at the same place (Fawcett-street Cafe) on July 10th, when we hope to have an even more successful show.

SOUTH WEST LONDON C.B.S.

Annual Young Canaries, Mules, and British Birds (any age) show was held on June 19th, at Plough Hotel, nr. Clapham Junction. Many members were unable to show owing to failure in first round. Had the show heen a fortnight later no doubt the numbers would have been greatly in excess of that which faced the judge. The quality throughout was excellent, and all hirds were shown in perfect health and condition. The attendance in the evening was good, and as is usual with this society, everything went off satisfactory.

LONDON AND COUNTIES O.S.

Fifth annual young hird show, held on June 26th, at headquarters, The Sessions House Hotel, Clerkenwell Road, E.C. Mr. J. W. Ramsden was to have judged, but was unable to officiate, so Mr. J. Dobson ably acted in his stead. The show was excellent, taking into consideration the ill luck the members have experienced with their young hirds. They were, however, to be complimented on the hirds sent in. The show was well patronised hy visitors and friends from all parts. Mr. F. W. Thorpe's Yorkshires were exceedingly good on every point, and he was well satisfied with the results, gaining 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prizes for them. Mr. R. J. Pretty was also successful with the show of Crested Norwich. Among the specials contributed, Mr. J. W. Ramsden kindly gave two tins of pepper, one for champion, and one for novice, these heing carried off hy Mr. H. Bell, and the secretary, Mr. W. Gilbert. The last-named gentleman was very highly complimented on the able way in which he carried out his duties. His goodwill in this society has earned him respect from all sides. # ORNITHOLOGICAL ODDMENTS.

A Beautiful Flycatcher.

Flycatchers of any sort are so rarely imported that any instance of such an arrival is an event of note, so that I am glad to be able to report seeing a healthy pair of the beautiful Verditer Flycatcher of India (Stoparola melanops) recently. In size and form this bird is very like our spotted or common Flycatcher, but it has a shorter bill, and instead of being one of the plainest-tinted of birds, and having the sexes alike, like that species, it is strikingly coloured, and shows a marked sex-difference. The cock is a lovely light silvery-blue, with a black patch from bill to eye, while the hen is of a subdued greenish-blue, and has not the black on the face.

This bird inhabits a large part of Eastern Asia, resorting mostly to the mountains to breed. I have seen it at Darjeeling, where the climate is like that of England, so that anyone getting this pair ought to stand a good chance of breeding from them in an outdoor aviary. The birds breed about this time of year, making a nest of moss in a hole. When observing this species in its native haunts, I found that the male had a nice song, so that his beauty is not his only recommendation. A few of these birds used in my time to be brought down to Calcutta in the winter along with other small softbills from the mountains; hut, like the Niltavas, they were never numerous in the trade.

The Species of Sugar-birds.

As these beautiful creatures have been rather to the fore of late, I will briefly run through the imported species, and mention their sex differences, as I fancy there is some confusion in many peoples' minds about these points the birds not being well known to the avicultural public at large.

1. Yellow-winged Sugar Bird.
2. Black-faced Sugar Bird.
3. Blue Sugar Bird.

The exquisite yellow-winged Sugar-bird (Coereba cyanea) is known by its long, slender, curved bill—like that of our Tree-creeper — and its red legs. The legs of the hen are not so brilliant as those of the cock, and her wings are not yellow and black, as his always are, for he retains his wing-colouring when the purple plumage gives way to the green "undress" which he wears during half the year. At this time he is much like his mate.

The Purple Sugar-bird (C. coerulea), which so far has only reached the Zoo, is in appearance very similar to the yellow-winged, but has the legs green in the hen and yellow in the cock. It never has any yellow on the wings, and the hen is distinctly streaked below.

The Black-faced Sugar-bird (Chlorophanes spiza) has the beak much shorter, and only slightly curved. The cock is sea-green, with a black cap, and the hen of a less bluish and less bright shade of green throughout, with no difference in the colour of the head. This species is very rare.

The Blue Sugar-bird (Dacnis cayana), which is about the commonest in the trade, has a straight bill, hardly longer than a hedge-sparrow's; the male is turquoise-blue and black, the hen green, with a decided blue tinge on the crown. All of the species are, for small soft-bills, easy birds to keep, and delight the eye by their graceful form of movements. The yellow-winged, at any rate, is known to be long-lived, and it can be confidently recommended to anyone who can afford to pay a good price for a bird which really is good value for money. It is important, however, to give it plenty of room and a good supply of soft, ripe fruit, and to make allowance for the spiteful temper it is unfortunately apt to exhibit to its own species.

Doves Get their Due.

When I was a boy I sometimes edified myself on Sundays by reading the footnotes in the big family Bible; I am glad to say I did not remember them so well as the text, but there was an observation which struck me so much by its unconscious humour that I have not forgotten it to this day. The worthy commentator was enlarging on that earliest and most celebrated of homers, Noah's dove, as follows:—"We should observe that the olive-branch, the symbol of peace, was not brought to the ark by the Raven, a bird of prey, nor by a gay and proud Peacock, but by a mild, humble, patient, peaceful Dove!" To anyone who has ever seen a Dove outside a Pigeon pie this is rich; but at the same time it must be admitted that the Dove, like his opposite, the lion, has suffered undue depreciation, owing to having been praised up too much, and so is rather unfairly looked down upon nowadays. Thus, I was very glad to hear the other day that classes are provided at some Scottish shows for our common tame, collared dove, which is, to my mind, the prettiest and sweetest-voiced of all Doves, and well deserves to be made a show bird.

An Easy Subject.

For one thing, it is very cheap to buy, and easy to keep and breed, while there is sufficient diversity in different individuals to make it worth while to select good ones. Some are much better in quality of feather than others, and the even delicate creamy-fawn colour of a good bird is one of the most quietly beautiful tints to be found in the bird world. These Doves are really best treated as aviary birds, and are perfectly hardy out of doors, though their wild ancestor lives in North-East Africa; but they will also do well in a large cage, which should not be less than a couple of feet every way. Two perches, of different thicknesses, are quite enough to put in, and for nesting accommodation a shallow cigar-box or strawberry basket is all that is required—they do not nest under cover like Pigeons. A few fine twigs or bits of straw should be given them as nesting material.

When rearing young they should receive some crushed biscuit and hard seed as well as their usual rations of small corn, and it is always well to give them a turf, a bit of old mortar, and a lump of rock salt to pick at. A bath should also be frequently offered, but not left constantly with them if they are kept in a cage, for fear of the water being fouled.

Breeds and Hybrids.

There is only one established variety of this Dove besides the typical cream-coloured, collared kind—the white specimens known as Java Doves. If these are crossed with the coloured ones the young follow the colour of the cock, as a rule, but I have seen pale specimens with white flights and flesh-coloured bills, which I have been told could be bred between the two varieties. These collared Doves can be crossed with our native wild Turtle-Dove, and produce a Hybrid which resembles the collared kind more than the other parent, but is much darker, and has more black on the neck. These hybrids are fertile, in some cases at all events, unlike the hybrid between the collared Dove and the tame Pigeon, which has only been known to breed again in one instance, though it is not an uncommon cross. It is always worth while to keep tame doves if one goes in for foreign species of about the same size, in order to use them as rearers, and I should be inclined to think that they might come in handy for this purpose when one is keeping the smallest and most delicate breeds of fancy Pigeons, as they are good parents.

Checking the Population.

Indeed, Doves breed so well that in most cases the difficulty is to prevent their overdoing the thing, especially as the young are not, at present at any rate, of much value; the white ones, however, fetch a higher price than the coloured breed. To check their increase it is best to destroy one of the two eggs laid, as soon as the old ones have settled down to sit; but this requires to be done with system, so as to secure an equal number of both sexes of those you do rear. The first young one hatched is usually a cock, and as this presumably issues from the egg laid first, the simplest plan would be to mark this first egg, and, if you want a cock, to let it hatch; while if a hen is wanted, the marked egg should be done away with, while the other is left for hatching. In this way one can keep the population down to a working average; but the young must always be removed soon after they feed themselves.

Is it the Death-blow of the New Insurance Scheme?

The insurance scheme recently floated by the London Federation of C.B.S. is here reviewed by a barrister-at-law, who raises considerations which may crush it out of existence.

In last week's issue the insurance scheme for birds, put into operation on June 1 last by the London Federation of C.B.S., was reviewed by an expert in insurance matters, who pointed out what, in his opinion, were serious flaws in the rules and regulations and in the scheme from a business point of view. We have since had the legal aspect of the scheme considered by a competent legal authority—a barrister-at-law—whose conclusions will be found printed below, together with comments which he has been good enough to make on the various points previously raised by the insurance expert.

The grave view taken last week of certain matters connected with the insurance scheme is as nothing when weighed against one point raised by the barrister—a point which, if it cannot be controverted, effectually removes the scheme (as at present constituted) out of the realm of practicable things. It concerns the Stamp Duty. It will be remembered that the insurance expert expressed his surprise that the bearing of the Stamp Act upon the scheme had been overlooked by the Council of the Federation. While pointing out that every "certificate of insurance" issued must certainly bear upon it an Inland Revenue stamp, he expressed the opinion that a stamp value one penny might be likely to meet the case. Even this, of course, seriously affected the scheme, entailing the premium of one penny per coupon being doubled to meet this disbursement. But our legal expert takes a different view. He reads into the clause which makes the decision of the Council final, a reference to arbitration, and under the Arbitration Act, a submission to arbitration (in this case the "certificate of insurance") must bear a sixpenny stamp; therefore, in this matter the Council have another great difficulty to face and overcome taking our barrister's view to be a correct one.

In any case, there remains this further difficulty: the stamp duty payable varies according to the amount of the insurance effected. On £5 it is sixpence. Assuming each coupon for £1 issued by the Federation to be franked by a penny stamp, on an insurance being effected for £5, this would represent only fivepence stamp duty, instead of the sum legally due, viz., sixpence.

The remainder of our legal authority's views will, we think, be readily understood.

The Legal Aspect.

By a BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

Final Decision of Council.

An "Insurance Expert's" references to the legal aspect of the arbitration clause of the scheme are a little sweeping. It is true, as he says, that an agreement to exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary court is inoperative at common law. But the Arbitration Act of 1889 makes binding on both parties to a contract any submission to arbitration which it may contain. The clause printed on the certificate of insurance to which he takes exception makes the Council an arbitrator, and it is, in my opinion, quite legal. It does not mean, "You shall pay us money to cover a certain liability, but we shall reserve to ourselves the right as to whether we discharge that liability." If it meant that, it would be illegal. It simply makes the decision of the Council a condition precedent to an action at law. If in settling the dispute the Council acted fraudulently, or contrary to evidence, the aggricved party could still sue upon the contract in the courts.

But he must sue after the decision of the Council has been given. The other point made by "An Insurance Expert" is good. The rules of insurance certainly ought to embody the reference to the decision of the Council.

New Light on the Stamp Duty.

As regards the Stamp Act, every insurance policy must bear an Inland Revenue stamp of at least 1d.; and if the matter of agreement is of the value of £5 and upwards, it must bear a sixpenny stamp, the amount of the stamp duty going up proportionately to the value of the policy. If the Federation has issued its certificates of insurance without a 1d. stamp it could not plead the provision, which makes the decision of the Council final (in an action brought by an assured), without incurring the penalties imposed by the Stamp Acts. The best course open to the Federation is that its officials should communicate immediately with the authorities at Somerset House and put the matter right by agreement with them.

A much graver question, however, remains, apart from the point raised by "An Insurance Expert." It is this. Under the Arbitration Act a submission to arbitration must bear a sixpenny stamp. No doubt the Federation intended the clause which makes the decision of the Council final to operate as a reference to arbitration. But the omission to stamp it would present a serious difficulty to the Federation in a case where it might be sued by the assured. It could not be tendered in evidence without the penalties of the Stamp Act being incurred. Moreover, the omission to stamp it would enable the other side to argue that the claim was never intended by either party to operate as a submission within the meaning of the Arbitration Act. In my opinion, therefore, every certificate of insurance issued by the Federation must bear a sixpenny stamp.

Over-Insurance.

I agree with the opinion expressed by "An Insurance Expert" in reference to over-insurance. All contracts of insurance other than life are contracts of indemnity. Indemnity is making good the loss of anything. Thus there ought to be a rule that the contract covers only the actual value of the bird lost, so as to guard against over-insurance.

The Right of Recovery.

There ought also to be a subrogation clause. The doctrine of subrogation flows logically from the legal conception of indemnity. In the language of the "man in the street," a subrogation clause puts the insurers in the shoes of the assured so far as his rights against third parties in reference to the insurance are concerned. If a bird in transit is killed through the negligence of the railway company, the insurers are enabled, by reason of the doctrine of subrogation, to sue the railway company for negligence, and in turn recover the insurance from them.

As regards average, I agree with "An Insurance Expert" in the view that the rules ought to make it clear whether the average is based on the total value of the birds.

A Cloud in the Distance.

At present there is no obligation on the part of an association carrying on the business of indemnity insurance to make any deposit as a guarantee of its ability to meet liabilities. In the case of life insurance, the statute requires a deposit of £20,000. For a long time an agitation has been on foot to extend this statutory requirement to indemnity insurance, and the new Insurance Bill, just introduced by Mr. Churchill, may provide for this. Should the Bill be passed in a form containing a retrospective clause, it would mean that the Federation must deposit a considerable sum as a guarantee of its financial stability.

Can Birds be Insured?

Finally, I think that birds are a form of property which may be covered by a policy of insurance. Once you have made an animal or bird captive it is the property of the person who has dominion over it. If it gets free, it again becomes a res nullius or feræ naturæ.

[This means that if a captive British bird regains its freedom, its former owner loses his title of property in it—the bird can be legally claimed by whoever captures it, if it be retaken. We presume this legal doctrine has no application in the case of birds bred in captivity—Canaries, for instance, would not be covered by it.—EDITOR.]

Spotted Flycatchers at Home.

The heavy rain of the last few days has made the vegetation of the countryside most luxuriant; the hedgerows are almost impenetrable, and tall rank herbage by the roadside affords excellent cover for any birds just leaving the nest. These are now plentiful everywhere. Single birds struggle across the footpath. The remainder of the brood scramble among the hawthorns. Possibly the next bush will reveal a row of sleepy youngsters, who perch contentedly upon the same branch, and sleep peacefully until the parent returns with food, which awakens them into fresh life and activity. The Spotted Flycatchers are hardly so plentiful as in former years; but still there are many in the district. They spend the long summer's day fluttering into the air from some fence rail or post, seldom flying far—just a dart outwards and a twist or two upward, and then a quick return to the starting point; or when the air is heavy, and insect life flies low, they swoop to the ground and snap their prey within a few inches of the hard roadway. The Spotted Flycatcher possibly pairs for life, for isolated spots are haunted by a pair year after year. One cannot say definitely that these birds build in any particular situation, for they are most cosmopolitan in their choice of sites, but the nest is generally in a snug nook well sheltered from the weather. Two that have come under notice this year were built, one against the rough bark of an old elm tree, where a few twigs and leaves formed a firm platform as a foundation, and the other at the top of a brick pillar, where a brick was displaced, making a cosy nook for the sitting bird and young. When last seen both these broods were doing well, and had a fair chance of escaping the attentions of meddlesome youths. One clutch of eggs were beautifully marked with reddish-brown. The tuneful Linnets are busy with their second nest, the vicinity of which is frequently disclosed by the anxiety of the crimson-breasted male bird. His plaintive calling tells the observer plainly that a nest is close by, and few bird homes can compare with the Linnet's for daintiness of construction and delicacy of colouring. The neat inner lining is of hair, generally of the lighter shades, wherein the eggs securely rest.

The Fisherman's Nightingale.

The Sedge Warbler is sometimes called the "Fisherman's Nightingale," for he sings through the night, a chattering, quivering song.

A Big Clutch.

Instances are on record of as many as twenty eggs of the Tits being found in one nest. These abnormal clutches are no doubt the produce of two hens.

Robbing the Eider.

The Eider-duck lines her nest with the down plucked from her breast, and when robbed of the eggs and lining, lays again and relines the nest. If the robbery is repeated she has to call her mate to her assistance, as her own stock of down is exhausted.

A Rare Migrant.

The pretty Dotterel nests upon the spurs of the mountains where the ground is rough and the boulders are clothed with rich green mosses. It is said that Hewitson spent many summers searching for one of these birds' breeding sites, but never found one.

A Night Singer.

All the Buntings are interesting birds, and none more so than the Reed. Just now he is in the best of colour, his rich brown back harmonising beautifully with the black and white of the remainder of his plumage. As he sways on a spray of vegetation his somewhat long tail appears to aid him to keep his balance. His nest, with the peculiarly marked eggs, characteristic of the family, is well worth finding. He is an incessant songster, and sings the whole of a hot summer's day and far into the night; even when others are asleep he will from time to time pipe out a passage or two. Is he awake, or is he only semi-conscious of the effort?

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we bond the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

Free Money-Saving Catalogue.

There you will find the best Flight Cages, Nursery Cages, Appliances of every description, Seeds of the very finest quality; in fact, everything that can be found in one dozen other places together. The cages are not an imitation lot, cribbed from somebody else's ideas, nor do they possess names that are taken from other people's catalogues; when this has to be done, it tells you plainly what the sellers and their goods must be made of, otherwise there would be no necessity to resort to such mean, dirty practices. NOTE: These imitators will in future be stopped by legal process, as libertics with my patent rights have now been taken. This Money-Saving Catalogue of mine contains more matter than all the others published put together. Every Fancier living should see it.

CAPE TOWN (S.A.) C.B.S.

Notes by the Judge, Mr. Norman Morton.

The society must be congratulated on the success of their show, held May 22nd and 24th, in the Oddfellows' Hall, Plein Street, Cape Town. The arrangements throughout were excellent. In fact, I have never judged a show that was so conveniently laid out. The exhibitiou was far ahead of those of previous years. There was a record entry, and the quality throughout, with the exception of young Crests, was far superior to last year's. I was more than gratified with the assistance I received from my stewards, Messrs. Walker and White, each working very hard, which enabled me to go through my classes in much less time than I anticipated. The Belgians were only two in number and were a nice pair. The Scotch Fancies (also only two) were a grand pair, the cock being of excellent type and having the best of shoulders; the hen was also good. They were a credit to their owner, Mr. Sloan, the Hon. Sec., who, by the way, carried out his secretarial duties admirably. The Yorkshire adult classes brought out a fine lot, Mr. Walker's ticked yellow winning the special for best adult Yorkshire. This bird is teeming with quality, of grand length, straight as a rush, A1 colour, and well up on leg. Mr. Carrick's winning yellow was an exceptionally fine specimen, beautifully drawn, of excellent colour and fine length, very straight and slim. The buffs and fouls were all good, and it was hard to find a poor one in the lot. Mr. McIntyre showed a grand team of eight greens; colour was all there, but I should like very much to see more slimness in this variety. The adult Norwich Plainheads were the pick of the show, the quality throughout being better than I have seen for some years. Colour also was a striking feature. The type is getting more each year to my liking, viz., stoutness, tightness of feather, shortness of tail, and "position." Mr. Carrick's special winning buff was a grand bird (the medal winner last year). The hird has plenty of size, is short in tail, has the best of flights, and a nice skull, and stands well over perch. Mr. Du Toit's 1st yellow was not wanting in these respects; it was chubby, had the best of chests, charming colour, and excelled in skull. The other classes, ticked and fouls, were of excellent type. Altogether, the Norwich classes made a grand and interesting display. The Crestbreds were also a good lot, some very choice specimens putting in an appearance, the principal attraction being Mr. Steven's buff variegated cock bird. He is the old champion, and excels in width of skull, has a grand entrance, with nice feather of capital length. The winning hen, Mr. Stevens's, a buff variegated, was also of grand type, with nicely rounded skull, good entrance, and was densely clothed. The Crests, with the exception of Mr. Stevens's last year's cup winner in the young bird class, were only moderate. The winner is a champion all over and will take some stopping in Cape Town. He has an immense crest, nice veiny feather of excellent length, radiating from an even centre. The winning grizzle Crest of Mr. Carrick's is rather long in body but possesscs a very good crest, just a trifle weak on the right side. Mr. Dykman also put on some very good exhibits, but they were rather weak in frontals. The Goldfinches, Bullfinches and Greenfinches were a good lot, excelling in plumage and type, Messrs. J. Sloan and A. White scoring in these classes. The Mules bred from South African birds were very strong in number. The Blackhead and Canary Mules brought out some beauties, Mrs. White winning the special with her last year's winner. South African cage birds were very noticeable for their plumage and condition, Mr. White winning nearly all before him. The old fancier, Brother McIntyre, had his usual display of South African small seed-eating birds, and a grand lot they were, sweeping the decks. The pair classes were far above last year's average, Mr. Carrick gaining the special for best pair on show—a grand green body Crest cock, with nice leafy feather, hardly dense enough, perhaps, and rather weak in centre, paired to a buff Crestbred hen with nice entrance, good lash, but wanting a little more size. The Yorkshire pairs were of extra quality, the winner being a new exhibitor, Mr. Mills. His pair consisted of a yellow cock bird and a buff cinnamon-marked hen of immense length, a trifle coarse in waist; a grand stock pair this. Mr. Dykman's pair of Dutch Frills were nicely matched and were a credit to the exhibitor. The young bird classes were all well filled, the strongest being the Yorkshires. The cup for best young bird on show went to Mr. Walker's yellow Yorkshire, a beauty of nice length, dead straight, lovely colour, but a little loose in feather. The young yellow and buff Yorks were a rare lot. The variegated class was the strongest, Mr. Carrick winning with a smart ticked hird, nicely drawn, of very fair length, shape, style, and having the best of flights. The young Plainbead Norwich were up to the standard. Many grand birds came forward, Mr. Du Toit being reserve for the cup with a buff hen, of lovely type, short behind, having a stout body, lovely neck, but showing a little lash. The young Crestbreds were only moderate this year, Mr. Stevens scoring well in these classes, closely followed by Mr. Dykman. The young Crests were very disappointing. The cup-winning cock bird, Mr. Carrick's, a clear, was sbown in rather poor condition. It has a nice dense crest with best of centres, but is a trifle weak on the right side, and fails a little at back. The Green Crests were also somewhat poor, failing chiefly in evenness of crest. A nice young Scotch Fancy was sbown by Mrs. Sloan, who won first. The ladies' classes were well filled, Mrs. Matthews winning with a grand wing-marked green-crested bird of the right quality and type; could bave won in the open class. The show on the whole was a great success, and I am pleased to see most of the winning birds are Colonial hred, which reflects great credit on the breeders.—NORMAN L. MORTON, Judge.

SALE OPEN O.S.

Annual First Feather Show held June 26th, but owing to the bad season experienced around here, the entries did not come up very well, 93 birds only being staged. A few good specimens of Yorkshires were put down. The Norwich were rather better than the Yorkshires in number. The Borders were badly supported, but one or two nice birds were shown. The British birds, as is usual in Sale, came to the rescue, and made up a very nice show. Not a few would do justice to an open show. Mr. E. Morgan's fine Greenfinch took special for best Greenfinch. Some very good birds were in the selling classes, but there were no buyers. Mr. J. W. Bancroft (Sale) judged, giving general satisfaction.

First Nest Feather Show of season held June 26th. There were 53 birds in 7 classes, some of the exhibits being birds that will be heard of in the shows later. Mr. J. Bailey (Sandy-lane) officiated as judge, and his awards gave every satisfaction. Mr. W. Hillas exhibited his cinnamon-marked bird, which was first in its class at the Great Horton open show last week. The judge remarked that it was undoubtedly one of the most typical Yorkshires he had seen this year. Mr. Hillas is only a novice of two years' standing, and he ought to be proud of having bred such a grand youngster. The selling class competition for the electro-teapot gets keener at every show, and some really good birds are being put down in these classes. Mr. L. Briggs won special for most points, Mr. W. ## GATESHEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Annnal nest feather show held July 3rd, in the Black Bull Hotel. Entries did not come quite up to expectation, owing, no doubt, to the wretched season our members have experienced; 77 hirds, however, faccd the judge, Mr. Swan, who kindly officiated in the place of Mr. Riseborough, who could not act owing to illness. What was lacking in numbers was made up for in quality. The team of Messrs. Holden and Todd came in for special attention—three slashing huffs that will no douht, with a good moult, make a name for themselves. The Borders were of high quality. A most successful smoking concert was held after the show, Mr. Almond in the chair. The Chairman proposed the health of the Society, which was loyally responded to. He stated he was pleased to see so many from a distance, as, no doubt, it showed the good feeling and harmony that prevailed between this Society and fanciers in the surrounding districts. It was also gratifying to see that we were still forging ahead, many new members having joined us this season. He then called upon Mr. Forster, who gave us a performance on the mouth-organ with great ability. Messrs. Smith, Brown, and Robinson all obliged with good songs. Mr. Mather played a selection on the piano, and sang "The Friar of Orders Grey." Mr. Weddel obliged with "The picture that was turned towards the wall." Mr. Ramshaw then gave a real old Tynesider, "A'a wish A'a was married." Mr. Gillispie sang a comic song, which was loudly applauded. Mr. Hughes sang a laughing song, and it was hard to tell who laughed the most, the artiste or the audience. Mr. Lowery proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the manager for granting us the use of the room. The Secretary then proposed a vote of thanks to the artistes for their services, which brought one of the pleasantest evenings in the annals of the club to a close.

PENDLETON AND SALFORD O.S.

Annual Nest Feather Show held at Chapel-street Hall, Salford, on June 26th. The quantity and quality of the birds were far in advance of those of previous years, although breeders have not, generally speaking, had a good season. Yorkshires and Norwich numbered 68 all told. No British birds were exhibited, although classes and specials were provided; this seems rather surprising, as at last year's show the British birds numbered 19. Mr. E. Jones, the Assistant Secretary of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S., judged the Yorkshires, and Mr. Geo. W. F. Lythgoe the Norwich and A.O.V. The 2s. 6d. special for best Yorks in show was won by Gowenlock, the 5s. special for most points Yorks, J. Holland; for 2nd most points, T. Brennan; for most points Norwich, W. E. Espley; for 2nd most points, W. N. Turner; half-dozen baths, most points A.O.V., J. Massey; quarter-dozen, 2nd most points, Gowenlock; silver medal most points in show, J. Holland; calahash pipe, 2nd most points, T. Brennan. Everything worked smoothly, and Mr. Clayton, Sec., received every assistance from the members. The judging appeared to give general satisfaction. On the whole, the society is to be congratulated on its good show and the turn-up altogether.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES O.S.

Nest Feather Show held July 3rd. The entries were rather below the average, the novice members especially having had bad luck. The quality of the birds was, however, remarkably good, some very promising Yorkshires being staged, while the Norwich were a very fine lot. Mr. Cook's team of four, which won the gold medal for best team, was particularly taking. A very nice lot of Lizards were put down, Mr. Senior's being runners-up for the medal. Mr. A. J. Smith showed a very fine team of British, and it was hard lines he did not win the medal for lack of competition. The few Foreign birds were in perfect condition and well staged, and proved very attractive. We had a particularly good gate, the new room being very light and lofty, and altogether very suitable for members' shows. The novices that ventured to compete put down a nice lot, the Yorkshires staged hy Messrs. Snape and Jones being excellent specimens, the former really open class birds. Mr. Davis's judging met with general approval.

DONCASTER.

There was a very nice array of high quality birds at the Doncaster Agricultural Society Show on July 1st. The entry, too, was considerably in excess of that of last year. The little advertisement (cost 6d.), which I sent to your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, brought me about 20 applications after my three pairs Goldfinch cocks and Bullie hens. They are all sold, or exchanged, and I have not time to reply to all who wrote, but I thank them.—J. T. STILL (Swindon)

Mr. E. Limb, of 8, Mayo Street, Cockermouth, has been appointed secretary of the Cockermouth F.S., writes Mr. G. W. Oglethorpe, the chairman of the society. The fourth nest feather show will be held on July 17th. A movement is on foot, I may mention, to provide a club-room for the society.

Those intending to join the Fife and Kinross Norwich Plainhead Club, writes Mr. A. Dickson, the sec., should do so now, to give the committee a chance to know how many members they will have It will also enable them to know how to grant specials for shows at their next meeting at the beginning of August. All societies wishing their patronage should write before that time to me at 37, Adam's Terrace, Kelty, N.B.

The Ayr and Dis. C.B.C. are holding a First Feather Show on July 24th, in the Good Templar Hall, New Bridge Street, writes Mr. C. C. Irvine, the secretary. Mr. Thos. Dolton will judge. Entries close on the morning of show. Fanciers joining now will be eligible to compete.

Our Young Stock Show, writes Mr. W. Pawley, hon. secretary of the Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S., is to be held on July 24th. A good concert has also been arranged to take place on the same evening. The breeding results have been very fair on the average here this year, some of the novices doing the best.

A booklet dealing with the art of colour-feeding has just been written and published by Mr. J. W. Ramsden (the well-known manager of the Crystal Palace Bird Shows). It contains detailed instructions for the moulting of birds to bring them out the correct rich colour essential to success on the show-bench. The price is threepence, and readers can have copies direct from the offices of CAGE BIRDS (154, Fleet Street, London), for 3½d.

The great Open Show of the Vale of Conway and Dis. F.A., held at Llandudno, on July 21st, should not be overlooked by bird-keepers, as it has an excellent reputation for good management. The full classification will be found advertised in our columns this week, and exhibitors can enter therefrom, if too late for them to get a schedule. Entries close first post, July 13th, to Mr. A. T. Johnson, secretary, Ro Wen, Talycafn, North Wales.

The Southern Yorkshire Canary Club has had a very successful season. After laying out a large sum on trophies and cash specials for competition amongst members at the shows, there remains a cash balance in hand of £2 17s. 8d., and other assets value £2 13s. The list of members is an ever-extending one, and a fine programme has been arranged for their benefit during the coming show season. Any fancier of the Yorkshire desirous of joining should communicate at once with the secretary, Mr. J. W. Renuie, Junction Hotel, Andover, Hants.

We hear that an important deal in rare Foreign and British birds has just been completed between Mr. W. Cook, the well-known exhibitor and Mr. Buntley (of Sheffield), who bought the whole of Mr. Cook's birds, many of which were well-known prize-winners of recent years. Included were 52 large stock and show cages. Birds and cages were quickly packed and forwarded to their destination by Mr. C. Roch (of 400, Edgware Road, W.), who acted as broker to the vendor. Although Mr. Cook has disposed of his fine collection, he does not intend to give up altogether his interest in, and love of, the Fancy.

"British Birds" (one shilling monthly) for July is prefaced by a lovely coloured plate of the "Chicks of the Sanderling," Mr. W. Eagle Clarke supplying the notes anent same. As was promised in the previous issue, Commander H. Lynes, R.N., M.B.O.U., commences his "Observations on the Migration of Birds in the Mediterranean." The introductory article is illustrated by five figures, and is written in a capital style which promises to make the series both highly readable and valuable. "The Peregrine Falcon on the Yorkshire cliffs," is the subject on which Mr. A. D. Sapsworth, M.B.O.U., writes, and "Notes" and "Reviews" go to complete the issue.

Sandiford's Colour-Food—the only colour-food on earth. A few orders this last few days:—Mr. Shackleton 28lbs., Messrs. Halliday and Chittenden 28lbs., J. Wilcock 28lbs., big Yorkshire winners, Mr. Baker, Cowes, 112lbs., Mr. Sam Cook, N.P.C. 1909 cup winner, 60lbs., Mr. Dormer, big Cinnamon winner, 140lbs., Messrs. Cleminson and Taylor 60lbs., Mr. Midgley 30lbs., Mr. Hodder 70lbs., Mr. Dobinson 20lbs., all 1st prize 1909 Palace winners. Mr. Spillman, big Plymouth winner, 30lbs., also Mr. Collings 20lbs., Mr. Fox 17lbs., Mr. Vardy, 1909 Palace judge, 80lbs., and thousands more. Full list of agents whom I have supplied with 6 tons already this season, will appear next week.—(ADVT.)

Bird-keepers who have not as yet seen that most wonderful sixpennyworth of birdy literature, CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1909, have a splendid chance of acquiring a bargain this week. All the ordinary issue has been sold right out, with the exception of a few score copies which have the covers either soiled or a little torn (condition otherwise good), and those we offer to readers of CAGE BIRDS at the reduced price of 5d. per copy, post free. Orders should be sent at once to our Manager, at 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., as, of course, they can only be filled for so long as the limited supply lasts. The ANNUAL contains a lovely coloured plate of an exhibition Linnet, which alone is worth the cost, and much grand information on bird-keeping and breeding (both Canaries, Hybrids and Foreign).

Unsolicited testimonials to Ramsden's Pure Peppers. Messrs. J. Haigh and Son write:—"Send us 45lbs. of your Tasteless Pepper. We did very well with our birds last season: they were fed entirely on your feed. We won the Open Norwich Plainhead Club Competition very easy." Mr. J. F. Dewar, the well-known judge, writes:—"Samples duly to hand. I consider them a marvellous colour and quite equal, if not better, than last season's, which produced such a dense rich level colour. Send me 100lbs." Don't be gulled by advertising bluff. Buy Ramsden's Peppers, and you have the best it is possible to procure. Absolutely pure, and backed with a full guarantee under the Merchandise Act and Food and Drug Adulteration Act. The only Peppers advertised with such a complete guarantee. Ramsden's booklet on "Colour-Feeding" 3d., from any bookseller. Wholesale trade agent for booklet, F. Carl, 154, Fleet Street, London.—(ADVT.)

We hear from Mr. L. Harris, the valuer, that Mr. W. Dell's claim in respect of the recent fire at Bromley, Kent, involving the loss of a large number of his birds (reported in our issue of June 26th), has been promptly settled to Mr. Dell's satisfaction.

Southern Yorks. C.C.

Will societies who intend soliciting the above club's support make application for same at once, with dates and judges?—J. W. RENNIE, hon. secretary, The Junction Hotel, Andover.

Not Like Mother.

A Selkirk gentleman tells of a rather interesting case. There nests in his garden a Blackbird which is more white than black. At first it was speckled, but it has grown whiter with the years. This year the gentleman had, as usual, this bird as a visitant, and has watched it keenly. A brood of young birds has been hatched, but they are quite ordinary birds, with the exception of a few white feathers in their wings.

Losses of a Canary Breeder.

Mr. A. A. Pool, St. Jude's, Bristol. grease refiner, stated in the Bristol Bankruptcy Court on July 2, that he began business 33 years ago, and had been a breeder of Canaries for about 30 years. He had never failed before. The failure now was partly due to depression in the tallow trade and to illness. He estimated his losses through the deaths of 195 prize-bred Canaries (poisoned) at about £180. He sometimes got as much as £15 for a pair of Canaries, and he once sold four pairs for £48.

A Wash to a Finish.

A bird-washing match will be held at the headquarters of the South Manchester C.B.S., writes Mr. J. C. Spilsbury, the secretary, on July 12th, to commence at 9 p.m. prompt, between Mr. F. Washbourne (president of the South Manchester C.B.S.), and Mr. F. Parker (of the M. and N. C.O.S.). Will all members please attend. The ordinary meeting will commence at 8 o'clock, and the business is very important. All subscriptions are now due. A very handsome flower vase will be presented to the winner of the match.

London and Provincial O.S.

Kindly allow me to make public through the columns of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. H. E. Tringham, hon. secretary of the L. and P.O.S., the announcement that the details of the Great Combined Show of the L. and P.O.S. and the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. are nearly all arranged, and that we have secured the splendid Princes Hall of the Lambeth Public Baths, for the dates fixed, viz., November 4th and 5th. This is one of the very finest halls in London, and is most centrally situated, and our contract covers the day prior to and the day following the show.

Welsh C.B.C.

Will all societies desirous of having the patronage of the above club communicate with me prior to July 24th, as I shall be placing all applications before my committee at an early date for their consideration? I here give a cordial welcome to the numerous fanciers in Wales to join the club which has done a great deal in the past towards improving the Fancy in the "Land of Song," but could do infinitely better in the future if all the fanciers in Wales helped to wave its banner, thus making it a strong and growing society. Nothing will give me greater pleasure than to receive applications for membership, and all information required would be gladly furnished. "Gymry cofiwch am y Gymdeithas Hon."—G. T. JONES, hon. secretary, Hrfon House, 18, Castle Street, Brecon.

On Building Up a Strain.

Now, to build up a strain of Yorkshires—or, for that matter, any variety—it is not the work of a season or two. When I speak of a strain I mean birds that one is able to send out, knowing he will meet with a fair amount of success in keen competition on the show bench. You may perchance purchase a few good pairs of birds, and probably breed winners from them and from their progeny the first two or three seasons; but if you do not pay most careful attention to the various points of your stock you will not be able to continue getting that coveted first and special. If you are possessed of a long purse, and do not mind paying big figures for your stock, you may be able to reach the top of the ladder much quicker—but the difficulty is to remain there. Many novices breed a good bird and receive a tempting offer and part with same, but this is a mistake, for you will find it is only by keeping and selecting the best of your stock that you can expect to reach that high pyramid of fame which most of us are trying to attain; therefore, if you are fortunate enough to breed a good bird, stick to it.

The Discussion.

What is a gutted back? someone asked.—Ans.: Neither of the birds here has this defect, so I cannot show it. A bird with a gutted back generally has a drop from the shoulder right down the centre of the back.

Mr. Forse: I think you said that we have to look to hens for type. Take, for instance, the big yellow cock bird you spoke of in your paper. That instance proved the opposite to be the case?—That was exceptional.—The reason I asked, said Mr. Forse, was because I consider it best to look to the hen for type; but it is not always reliable. The head of the cock bird shows more in the young.—In my paper I pointed out that the cock bird had a bad head. We all like to see nice heads in Yorkshires, and hens with good heads are most difficult to obtain. Once bad points do get in it is a very difficult matter to get rid of them.

A Member: We don't hear so much about "frills" now?—No, said someone in reply; they know how to wash them out. Perhaps Mr. Sweetman could tell us how it is done?—Mr. Sweetman, however, said that he could not.

Mr. Penton: If you paired a bird having a good forehead with a bird having a flat head, would they produce good round-headed birds?—I don't think so. By pairing the progeny having round heads it might be done, say, in a couple of seasons.

Mr. Forse: Do you believe in pairing birds at sight or by pedigree?—I would pair birds from what I could see by my own eyes.—Would you pair a bird with a good-looking head without considering what the parents were like?—No, I should certainly like to know that the parents had good heads.

Good and Bad Wing Carriage.

Somebody here called attention to the fact that one of the birds present had crossed wings.—Mr. Sweetman explained that the bird in question had bad wing carriage naturally. In some cases bad wing carriage was caused by nervousness.—Mr. Tringham: How do you suggest improving bad wing carriage?—By discarding those having bad wing carriage and breeding only with those having good wing carriage.—Mr. Penton: Wouldn't a loose-winged bird serve the purpose—paired to a bird with crossed wings?—Quite likely, said Mr. Tringham.—Mr. Sweetman: Sometimes in your stock you get an open-winged bird. Such would be good for crossing with a bird having a tendency to cross. I would prefer it on the hen's side.

Mr. Morris: Is drop wing carriage natural? Isn't it sometimes caused through the bird not having enough flight?—Mr. Harper: I have a hen which has been in flight cage for five months, and its wings still droop.—Mr. Penton said he did not think the flight improved it at all.

Mr. Tringham: I have been given to understand that Belgian blood was introduced in order to do away with bad wing carriage.—No doubt the Belgian is a valuable asset. Most Belgians' tails are close right to wing tips. Not having used Belgian blood direct, I am unable to say whether or not it would do away with bad wing carriage, but I should think it would rectify it to a large extent.

Mr. Tringham: A large percentage of Yorkshires from the north are Belgian blooded.—The Belgian is no doubt very useful to a man having from 10 to 12 pairs of birds, as it is very easy for him to sell the young, especially the hens.

Someone here asked: What is breed?—In my opinion, said Mr. Sweetman, "breed" is that which, when you handle a bird, makes it continuously on the move. "Swagger" is another name. The more of it in the Yorkshire bird the better.—Mr. Tringham: But a bird may stand still and yet show "breed."—Mr. Penton: That depends a good deal on training.—Not necessarily.—Mr. Penton: But you can train the bird to show itself.

Mr. Cook: Do you recommend a novice to use a Belgian?—I should say yes, but with great care. I should not recommend a raw novice to do so without knowing the essential points of a Yorkshire first.—Mr. Cook: Mr. Mundell says that a flat head can be remedied by using the bath very frequently and giving plenty of water when the hen is sitting.—Mr. Tringham: I think Mr. Mundell was rather over-reaching the mark.

Mr. Hale: Do you put young birds in flight when they are moulting?—Space does not permit me to allow the majority of my stock to be put into flight cages. I usually put the young birds in small flights from 3 to 4 ft. long. If fortunate enough to breed a good bird I do not put it into a flight cage, as I find great difficulty then in steadying the birds for show.

Un-Evenly Marked Yellow Norwich.

Winner of First Prizes at Sunderland and Bristol, and other Honours, for Mr. W. E. Seed (Rishton).

Mr. Tringham: I should say it was rather difficult to pick out the good youngsters before they have moulted.—I find that when a bird is from 8 to 10 weeks old I am usually able to tell whether it is a good bird.

Mr. Cook (discussing birds on table): Are not square shoulders recommended?—The judges like nice round shoulders; the square shoulders are from Belgians.—Questioner: What is an ideal stock pair—in regard to size?—Get them as big as possible, the cock, say, 7ins., and the hen, say, 6½ins. But you will be fortunate if you get the hen of this size with good properties.

Mr. Morris: Would you use a bird with drop tail?—Mr. Forse: Certainly, if I had a bird to pair it to that did not drop its tail.

Mr. Tringham: How would Mr. Sweetman advise a beginner to commence getting Cinnamon Marked. What kind of birds would he recommend?—I am unable to answer, as I have not studied Cinnamon markings, so I cannot give any advice on the subject.—Mr. Penton: Cinnamon has a tendency to loose feather. Is it possible to breed Cinnamons from two dark-eyed birds?—Mr. Tringham: I don't think so. One of the birds must be pink-eyed. Some 75 per cent. of the Yorkshires to-day have Cinnamon blood in them.—Mr. Sweetman: That accounts for my breeding so many pink-eyed hens.—Mr. Penton: Is it a freak?—Mr. Tringham: I am unable to say. Many of us get surprises.

Someone asked: Are Cinnamons derived from Greens?—Mr. Penton said that Cinnamons have a tendency to go over the perch a great deal.—Mr. Tringham: That would not be so if you studied type when pairing.

Mr. Tringham: Returning to the subject of young stock, how do you feed the young birds?

In the following manner: One hard-boiled egg and an equal quantity of H and P tea biscuits. I press the egg through a piece of perforated zinc with a knife, crush the biscuits very fine, and add a teaspoonful of maw seed. Feed the birds at 8 a.m., at midday, and at from 5 to 6 o'clock—perhaps later. I find the birds do very well on the above-named mixture. I use watercress, very little groundsel, and occasionally boiled rape. When taking the young birds from their parents I continue the egg food and give plenty of crushed hemp seed up to about the time when they are six weeks old. When the birds are about 18 days old I put them in a nursery cage until they are able to do for themselves—that is when they are able to take the egg food without the help of their parents.

Mr. Forse: Is it advisable to be very careful and sparing with hemp seed when young birds are able to do for themselves?—I allow about a teaspoonful for each nest. I don't crush the seed for the old birds.—I don't give so much hemp, said Mr. Forse.

Mr. Morris: I do not think it is possible to get size without the use of boiled rape-seed. I boil the rape for about three minutes and then rub it in a cloth and mix it with biscuit powder. I do not give the young birds water, as the food is moist enough. Boiled rape seed helps to make bone, and you cannot do better.

Mr. Harper: Southend breeders give the youngsters lime water; it seems very successful, and prevents their going light.—Mr. Morris: The great thing is to keep the bird eating.—Do you use milksop? someone asked.—No, replied the lecturer, except when the bird goes light, when I give a little with a thick layer of maw seed. My experience is that they only pick it over, and make a nasty mess of themselves.

Mr. Penton: Sop is alright; it is a fine scourer.—Sop plus mawseed.—Mr. Tringham: I can endorse that; it is an excellent medicine.—Mr. Forse: I never use anything else as a medicine. As to feeding young birds on it, I think it is too scouring, and makes the birds look so thin.

Mr. Tringham: They have in some places in Yorkshire what is known as a "Green Pot," which is nothing more than sour milksop, which has a layer of green mildew on the top. If a bird has indications of being ill it is given a dose from the "Green Pot" as the first medicine.

Mr. Morris: The bread in Yorkshire is quite different from London bread. The taste is altogether different.—Mr. Harper: A Yorkshireman sells his whole stock, and buys a bird here and there, and then breeds winners. How is it done?—Mr. Tringham: That is what is called breeding by sight, and not by pedigree.—Mr. Morris: I don't agree. They are using another man's experience.

As the time was getting late the discussion was adjourned till a later date, when Mr. Morris was to give a lecture on the Norwich Canary. Mr. Tringham proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Sweetman for his excellent lecture. He (Mr. Tringham) had come to the meeting, he said, with the expectation of hearing Mr. Crisp, but was not disappointed, as Mr. Sweetman had given a most interesting lecture. Mr. Sweetman duly responded. With this the meeting closed.

The Bullfinch: Its Habits and Management.

By L. J. Bettison.

The Bullfinch is about 5ins. in length, with a black cap on its head. The back of the cock bird is of a bluish grey, and its rump is white (which easily marks the bird when in flight). Its throat and breast are of a deep orange red, its tail is black and its legs are rather short and of a light brown. The wings are also short, being bluish grey on the top with the other big wing feathers black, and a small bar almost white across the middle of the wing.

In the hen bird the head is black, the breast a purplish brown, and the back a bluish grey. The wings, tail and legs are the same as in the cock bird; the bill is short and curved and rather broad.

Mr. Bettison's Seed-Hopper.

Bullie's Habitations and Food.

These birds inhabit the woods chiefly in the summer, and in the winter they visit our orchards and hedge-rows. Their food in summer consists chiefly of fruit such as raspberries, strawberries and blackberries (it is not the fleshy part of the fruit they care for so much as the small seeds). In the winter they live chiefly upon dock seeds, privet berries, shepherd's purse, groundsel, and the seeds of the sowthistle and dandelion, etc.

The Bullfinch makes its nest in a thick bush, and rather low down. The nest consists chiefly of moss and hair, and the bird lays four or five eggs of a bluish colour, spotted with dark brown. The brood always remain all the winter through together, and separate in the following spring, when they mate with other birds. The call note of the Bullfinch is a very mournful sort of piping noise, and can be heard at a great distance.

Easily Kept Birds.

Bullfinches are very easy to keep in confinement. They should be caught when over their first moult—in the autumn and winter. If they are caught in the summer they nearly always pine away and die, because they have in all probability got young somewhere.

To catch these birds it is best to get a good couple of decoy traps, of a dark-green colour, and have a cock bird in one and a hen in the other (the call birds need not be tame birds, because the wild ones will call as soon as you are out of their sight). In feeding wild Bullfinches you should start by giving them their natural food, if possible, such as I have mentioned above, with a little seed, such as hemp, Canary, and rape; but do not give too much hemp, as it makes their feathers liable to drop off, or turn a very bad colour. You should gradually get them on to seed, and always give them a bath once a day, as these birds will sometimes bathe the day after they are caught, and it greatly helps one to keep them strong and healthy.

The cages for keeping the wild ones in should be the common box-cage, and you should cover the wires of the bottom part of the cage with a piece of muslin or with some sort of cloth, so that it comes half way up the cage, for if you expose the birds too much to view at first, they will only bang about and do more harm than good to themselves. Put plenty of sand in the bottom of the cage, and bird grit should be given if possible, as they require a great deal. Always, if possible, put two or more birds together at first, and separate them when they get tamer and more used to the cage.

The best seed trough for the wild birds is a small wooden one, made in the shape of a long pig-trough, as per illustration. The two pieces of wood at the top and the bottom are for stopping the birds from knocking the seed out. I have tried this trough and it answers very well. It is very easily made out of thin wood.

The Breeding & Management of the Green Canary.

By S. HADWIN.

A lecture given before the Sale O.S. on April 26th.

Influence of the Male.

Before commencing to pair up it is advisable to take into consideration the influence each side of the compact has on the possible progeny. It is now generally recognised that the chief influences of the cock bird are size and colour, so that in selecting the stock cocks these two characteristics should be borne clearly in mind, especially in regard to the Yorkshire and Norwich varieties. With Borders, size is not a consideration to the same extent. Whilst it is possible to have Borders too small and skimpy, the main difficulty is to keep them small enough to come into line with the standard.

Size in a Yorkshire is length, but it must be length well filled in and proportionate. Size in a Norwich is bulk, but it must be cobby bulk; the back should be broad and round, and the chest broad and round and well carried up to the chin. There is nothing so objectionable in the Norwich as the chest carried betwixt the legs. The head should be full and well rounded, and proportionate to the body; you don't want a big head on a small body, or a small head on a big body, the whole must be in unison.

These two points, size and colour, must, therefore, be the first consideration in Yorkshires and in Norwich. If you can get quality as well, good, very good, in fact. But get size and colour first.

Influence of the Hen.

The chief characteristics to be looked for in the hen are type and quality. Hens compared with cocks have practically no colour; hence it is of no use to look to them for colour. But the majority of them have quality, and on this a good colour can be placed by the cock.

Hens also, being smaller, carry a much better type than the cock birds do. Scientists tell us that the whole of the germ of life is contained in the seed of the male, the hen supplying the food and the incubation. Looking at the question from this point of view, it is difficult to understand the very great influence hens have on these two points, type and quality.

The influence seems to me to be a food influence. I take it the yolk of the egg which is the food of the chick in its embryonic state, is the essence of the blood of the hen. If this is so, then the matter becomes clear, because the hen by transmitting her very blood to the life germ supplied by the cock bird, transmits her characteristics at the same time. This theory is borne out by pedigree breeders, who rely almost entirely on the hens for carrying on a strain. They don't mind introducing strange cock birds, but they like to know everything there is to know about the hens.

Selecting Stock.

If it is intended to go in for all the three varieties of the Green a large stock would have to be kept, as it is always advisable to keep at least one pair of each variety for stock bird breeding. In the case of the Yorkshire and Norwich, both birds should be as large as possible. The cock, in addition to size, should have colour very deeply ingrained in him. He should be so full of colour as to be almost black. And the best mate for him would be a large, stylish variegated hen, one bred from an even-marked strain, if possible, these even marks usually carrying markings of a very distinct character.

From this cross the majority of the young will be fouls and variegateds, and they will be found excellent for crossing with the selfs from the other pairs, either for lightening the colour or for keeping up size. Leaving size out of the question, a similar pair of stock Borders could be put up.

The best pair for show breeding would be a Self Buff cock and a Self Yellow hen, the cock to be of good size and colour, and the hen of good type, quality and style. If the cock bird is well filled in all round, a little raciness in the hen, that is a bird showing a bit of shoulder like a Belgian, would be desirable; if the cock is slim, with plenty of style and swagger, the proper mate for him would be a hen rather heavily moulded.

The second best pair would be a self yellow cock and a self buff hen, mated as in the case of the previous pair as regards type, style, and colour. This pairing, of course, applies to Yorkshire Greens, and I am assuming that the cock birds are not too deep in colour as to be too dark. If they are too dark it is better to use a foul or heavily-variegated hen, such a hen as would be bred from the stock pairs.

The above remarks will apply equally to the Norwich Greens, except that the difference in type must be taken into consideration. One of the principal things to avoid in connection with the Norwich is a sluggish, crouchy style of carriage. Whilst the Norwich should have short legs, they must, at the same time, be free from too much thick feather, commonly called "breeches." They should be clean cut away towards the vent, and have a free easy carriage in passing from perch to perch.

The pairing of Borders is slightly different to that adopted in the cases of the other two varieties of the Green. Size not being an outstanding consideration, birds of a more level kind can be paired together. In this variety two good show birds would be likely to make the best match. Of course, if the hen is a little thin in neck, a cock bird in this point must be used; but it is better to breed with birds nicely moulded on both sides. The colour points are the same as in the other varieties.

The Use of Cinnamon Blood.

I promised earlier to point out how the good in Cinnamon blood could be used, and these remarks will apply to all three varieties.

Should you have cock birds good in all respects except that they have a superabundance of feather, and should you not be able to get Green hens fine enough in feather to correct this, then a Cinnamon hen should be used, but used for feather production only. The cock birds from this cross must be left severely out of the Greens, and only the hens should be used for future crossing with the Greens. You will then take what is good in the Cinnamon without any of its bad points.

There are one or two fallacies in connection with Cinnamon blood that I should like to point out. It is frequently remarked that the Cinnamon creates bronziness. This is entirely wrong. Cinnamon creates fine quality, and I have yet to see bronze on a fine quality specimen. Bronze is only seen on harsh, metallic feather, and always suggests coarseness.

Another remark one often hears is: "Oh! look at the bronze on that bird's wings; there must be a lot of Cinnamon in it." As a matter of fact, there has more than likely not been a particle of Cinnamon near the bird. The colour referred to is the brown of the nest feather, which shows on the two rows of wing coverts and the outer edge of the flight feathers, and is not seen after the adult moult. This brown colour in the young birds I like to see, and plenty of it; it is the surest sign that the bird will eventually be of a grand colour, far superior in this respect to those specimens that do not show this browning.

The Green Canary is a variety very easily managed. It is very hardy, and must not be colour fed. If kept in proper condition it does not require washing for show, so that it is essentially a novice's bird, and suitable for the fancier with very little time on his hands.

How to Moult the Green.

After the breeding season is over the purely stock birds should be put into the flights. They will moult and keep in good condition there, and be out of the way. This will leave the breeding cages free for the show birds.

These I like to moult in couples. They bathe more freely, and take anything it is thought advisable to give them in the food line better than if they are kept in single cages. During moult the colour can be very much improved by the use of the following mixtures: 6d. saffron, 1oz. tincture of gentian, 1oz. dandelion juice, 1oz. glycerine, made up to one pint, with either rum or good port wine given in soft food on alternate days during the first half of moult—that is till the birds have only the head and neck to finish. When this stage is reached the saffron must be stopped, and 1oz. ammoniated citrate of iron substituted, the other ingredients being the same, as also is the method of administering.

The Construction & Furnishing of an Outdoor Aviary.

By MISS F. M. McLEOD.

In the following article it is my aim and object to make three things clear, namely, (1) how to arrange a suitable aviary; (2) what birds to get; and (3) where to put them. My first piece of advice to anyone who intends keeping either British or foreign birds, is that they should take in CAGE BIRDS, which comes out weekly, costs one penny, and contains a lot of valuable information. A greater advantage still is the correspondence column. Before building your aviary it is as well to have some idea of the birds you are going to keep in it. Nothing is so disappointing to a beginner as a series of birdy deaths. Therefore, I shall chiefly describe those birds which may be kept in an outdoor aviary all the year round.

A Suitable Aviary.

For the birds I shall presently describe, a wooden shed, with an open wire run attached, is all that is absolutely necessary. The shed, however, should have a door at the side and should be large enough for anyone to enter. A small span roof or lean-to greenhouse, with a wooden roof covered with waterproof felt, makes an excellent and more elaborate aviary. A window might be let into the roof to give more light; but do not have too much glass, or if it stands in a sunny spot, your aviary will be too hot in the summer. As a protection from mice and damp, raise your aviary about ½ft. from the ground. This will be found a great advantage.

The wire run should be of ½in. mesh, with a frame-work of wood or iron; and the floor should be of grass if possible. Have a good, thick, wooden floor to the house, and as a further protection against mice, a band of zinc, a foot wide, should be put round the outside of the house where the sides join the floor. A small door or window should connect the aviary and the run, so that the birds may be shut in at night, or shut out in the run while anything is being done to the house.

As regards fittings, dead branches, of varied thicknesses, make the best and cheapest perches. Cocoanut shells, sawn in halves, small holes bored in the sides and hung up with wire, are capital receptacles for seed and water, being inexpensive and ornamental. For Budgerigars, hang up plenty of cocoanut husks for nesting purposes. Husks may be bought, wired by the dozen for about half-a-crown.

Some Suitable Birds.

I know of no bird more lively, hardy, and profitable than the Budgerigar. The green variety is so well known as the little bird who "tells your fortune for a penny," that I need not describe him. The yellow variety, however, is not so common, and is more expensive, though just as hardy. It is a bright yellow all over, shading to green on the back over the tail. On the cheeks is a pale blue patch, and the bird has the faint markings of the original green-bird all over him.

Both varieties breed very freely, even in the coldest weather, and do not give their owner any trouble. The price of the green varies from 4s. 6d. to 6s. 6d., and the yellow from 8s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. Young birds, of course, may be bought for less, but then these are no use for breeding purposes.

It is not easy to distinguish the sexes of these birds until after the first moult. The cere or skin close the beak then becomes bright blue in the cock and pale buff or brown in the hen.

The hen lays from 4 to 9 eggs, which are hatched in about three weeks. The young stay about six weeks in the nest, and peep out of it some days before they leave it for good. They come out every other day as a rule. Then hens are rather quarrelsome, and sometimes kill one another or throw out one another's eggs. If the offender be detected, it is best to get rid of her. The food is Canary, millet, spray millet, oats (when there are young to feed), and plenty of grass (in flower is best) and water. These birds are best kept only with other members of the Parrot tribe capable of defending themselves.

The Madagascar Lovebird or Grey-headed Lovebird is one of the cheapest birds imported. I have paid as little as 2s. a pair for them. The cock bird has a grey head, and a green body, and is a handsome little fellow. The hen is all green, paler on the breast, and darker on the back. They have bred in captivity, but as a rule are rather wild. These birds are very hardy.

The Passerine or Blue-winged Lovebird is about the same size as the Madagascar. The cock is bright yellowish green, with bright royal blue wings, and a patch of the same colour on the back above the tail. The hen is all green. They are not as hardy as the Greyheaded, and unless they are thoroughly acclimatized it would not be safe to keep them in an outdoor aviary during a severe winter. Six shillings a pair is about the usual price of these birds.

The Red-faced Lovebird is a more expensive bird than either of the two preceding species, and is seldom advertised for sale. It is a larger bird and handsomer. The cock is green, with a red face and beak. On the back above the tail is a patch of bright blue. The tail is red with a bar of black, and the bird spreads it out, fan-shaped, when angry. The hen is similar, but the red on her face is paler. These birds do not breed in captivity, but are perfectly hardy. I paid 12s. 6d. for the pair I have.

The Peach-faced Lovebird is a still more expensive species, and very difficult to get. However, they breed freely in confinement, and though noisy, are well worth getting. As yet I have not been able to obtain a pair, so cannot say anything about them from personal experience. All these Lovebirds that I have described may be fed the same as the Budgerigars.

Almost any kind of Parrakeet could be kept with Budgerigars and Lovebirds, but the hardiest and one of the best breeders is the Cockatiel. These birds are pretty, quiet, and very frugal caters. The price varies from 9s. to 14s. 6d. a pair.

(Our Invaluable "Breeding Room Register.")

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

(inch mesh). Spread the netting over the box. The band removed from the lid is to be placed over the netting (as shown in sketch). This keeps the netting tightly stretched; at the same time it is easy to remove for cleaning purposes. The young are fed through the netting, always being within easy reach of the feeder. They can be kept in the box until well able to feed themselves. The box should be not quite half full of soft hay.—A. M. REES.

When changing the nest about the 10th day I cut out a round piece of perforated zinc (about three inches across) and put same under the felt lining, which raises the nest, gives more room, and prevents the hen lying too close on the young; also it provides ventilation underneath.—W. ### LLANELLY AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held in Centre Hotel, June 26th. I am sorry to say that our last show resulted in a loss of £6 9s. to the Society, but I am in hopes of getting some of it back again at our next show. The election of officers for this year was proceeded with. Our worthy Chairman (Mr. D. R. Jones) once again agreed to preside, with Mr. E. H. Williams as Vice-Chairman. Our next show will be open to all comers. It is to be held on January 11th, 1910.—DANIEL JOHN, Sec.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Monthly meeting at Lockhart's on July 3rd, Mr. Farrer in the chair. There was a nice attendance, and during the meeting four new members were elected. The main business was to arrange for young bird show, to be held on July 10th, at St. Luke's Schools, Skinner-lane. Judge, Mr. Matt Broadley. This being one of our cup shows, we are expecting some keen competition. After the business, "Questions and Answers" claimed our attention, and a very interesting and instructive discussion took place on moulting and other seasonable topics.—J. CHAMBERS, Hon. Sec.

GATESHEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held June 30th, at headquarters, Mr. Almond in the chair. Owing to the holidays, the meeting was held a week later. Correspondence was read from several specialist societies, but it was agreed to let the letters stand over. The ramble to be held on August Bank Holiday was next considered. Several places of interest were mentioned, and it was finally agreed to go to Corbridge. So, members, don't forget to bring your wives and children with you. All are welcome. Mr. Mackenzie informed us that it is an ideal place to go to. At our next meeting we expect to see the members in full strength to hear Mr. A. Brown give his lecture on Colour Feeding.—G. BUCK AND H. JOHNSON.

CANARY QUERIES.

Young Seiferts Ailing.

M.N.—Your feeding is undoubtedly the cause. Put the young birds at once on a diet of plain Canary only as a staple, and give separately a little summer rape daily—about half a teaspoonful per bird. Every second day give a small piece of bread scalded with milk, pressed nearly dry, and sprinkled with a little maw seed, and on the alternate days a few half ripe plantain stalks, or a little chickweed, or flower heads of groundsel. Two or three times a week give half a teaspoonful of hemp per bird. Discontinue all other seeds and foods. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in each two tablespoonfuls daily for three days, and every alternate day for the rest of the week, and on the alternate days at this stage twelve drops of chemical food and four of tincture of gentian in the same quantity of water. After a week of this treatment, or as soon as the birds have recovered some appetite, you may vary the bread and milk occasionally with a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake or egg-food. Keep cages strewn with nice clean gritty sand.

Cold and Hoarseness.

T. Butler.—The first thing to do is to remove the cause. See the bird is not exposed to any draughts or extreme fluctuations of temperature, such as it would be subject to by hanging near a fire, or burning lamp or gas jet. At the same time do not overheat it. Aim rather at maintaining a fresh, pure, and equable temperature than a warm one. Feed on a staple mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and three times a week give a small piece of bread scalded with milk, pressed nearly dry, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped on it, and sprinkled with a little soft sugar. On each of the days when bread and milk are not given for the first week, give the following decoction in place of pure water for drinking. Put a small teaspoonful of linseed, a piece of Spanish liquorice the size of a large pea, and half a chlorate of potash lozenge in a teacup, fill three-fourths with boiling water, stir until all is dissolved, allow to stand until cold, strain, and give in place of pure water for drinking, on the days named, adding to the drinker also five drops of oxymel of squills.

Not Mating.

Very Anxious.—It is probable the hen was a late hatched one, and perhaps did not moult very well last time, in consequence of which she has not really been in good breeding condition all this season, which has, so far, been anything but an ideal one for such hens. I do not think she will do anything at all this year now, as the chances are all in favour of her dropping into moult very quickly, especially if we get a spell of hot weather. Therefore, I think you would be best advised to relegate her to the flight cage at once and feed her on a staple diet of plain Canary only, with a liberal supply of green food, a little egg or biscuit food, with about half full strength of colour food added, two or three times a week, and a pinch of maw on each of the other days. This should help her to break into moult early, and thus go a long way towards making her fit for doing good work next season. For two or three days give her a pinch of Epsom salts in the drinking water. Of course, as soon as she breaks into moult you must begin to give the colour food regularly in full strength daily if you wish to colour feed her. Stop all other foods but those mentioned here.

Fore-toes Deformed.

D. Brooks.—You have neglected the toes rather too long, I am afraid. All such deformities should be attended to as soon as possible after the birds leave the nest. Leave the rubber bands on the hind toes three or four weeks, and when you remove them put in rather thin and almost round perches, about the size of an ordinary lead pencil. As regards the front toes, I read your letter to mean that only the outer toe or toes are deformed, and that the central toes on each foot are unaffected. If this is correct the best remedy is to tie the deformed toes alongside the central ones with fine mending wool. Tie each one separately, and near the end of the shorter toe: make the knot rather firm, but not too tight, underneath the foot, and touch each knot at once with a drop of warmed beeswax to prevent it slipping out. The central toe will then prevent the deformed one curling under. I have found this method quite successful, and of so little hindrance to the bird that if the deformity should prove incurable there can be no objection to the bird wearing the ligature permanently. Get someone to hold the bird whilst you put them on. If I have misunderstood your letter and the central toes are also deformed, look up an "Illustrated Idea" (it appeared some time ago) which consisted of an arrangement of wire to hold out the toe; and the illustration is needful to make it understandable.

Sweating Hens.

"Try Again."—Your hens are affected with the trouble usually termed sweating, and as I see little wrong with your feeding, except the green stuff you use, which I do not care for at this time of year for hens that are breeding. See that the ventilation is efficient, and that the air is pure and fresh, free from damp or moisture, and the place not subject to any great drop in temperature at night. Give instead of the greenfood you are using either young and tender flower heads of groundsel or chickweed, and begin to give it on the third or fourth day after hatching. See that your egg food is perfectly fresh every day, and only give sufficient at a time to last about a third part or half the day, and in mixing it add two arrowroot biscuits and four Osborne, instead of six of the latter. Also see your eggs are new laid, and from healthy fowls, preferably roaming at liberty. If you get your eggs now from stock that is not quite above suspicion in health and hygienic surroundings, you would be well advised to change your source of supply. Do not begin to give hemp until the young are a week or up to ten days old, and if you notice any signs of flagging in a hen, about the fourth or sixth day especially, at once give her a bath in which a teaspoonful of common salt has been dissolved, and repeat it each day for two or three days. I presume you add about a fourth part of summer rape to the staple diet when young are being fed; if not, begin to do so at once.

Further Particulars.

Nengebanor.—The reply to your first letter was duly sent away, and should have been in your hands before your second letter reached us. If you follow directions as to diet and treatment given in last reply carefully, you should soon find a great improvement in the condition of your birds. One thing, however, of which your second letter strongly convinces me is that your cages must be terribly infested with red mites, and this to a great extent is the cause of the young birds doing so badly. Thoroughly overhaul the cages inside and outside, and also the place where they stand or hang. Put the birds in clean temporary cages, scrape and clean as well as possible the dirty cages, saturate them with paraffin, working it well into all joints with a small brush, place outdoors to dry, and repeat the operation once or twice with intervals of a day or two between each, and then repaint or distemper the insides, and stain or paint and revarnish the outsides. Whilst this is being done, encourage the birds to bathe freely, and add a crystal or two of permanganate of potash to the bathing water. See the place occupied by the cages is freed from all traces of mites before replacing them. Of the seeds sent, No. 2 is the best, and a very fair sample. No. 1 is poor, and probably a mixture.

A Mopy Lizard.

"Planet."—I would advise you, first of all, to thoroughly examine the cage and see if it is infested with insects, and, if this is the case, take steps to eradicate them. As a staple mixture give three parts Canary to one part summer rape, not as you have been giving. Give only a few grains of hemp twice a week, and every second day for a week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with a little maw seed. Give no egg-food, nor any other seeds during this time, but give a free supply of chickweed, groundsel, plantain stalks, or watercress, daily. Allow free access to a bath, and keep cage quite clean and well strewn with gritty sand. A piece of cuttlefish would also be beneficial, or a cube of common table salt might be stuck in the wires for it to peck at. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and six drops of syrup of rhubarb every second day for a week, and after this give six drops of dandelion juice, and four each of tincture of gentian and aromatic sulphuric acid, every second day for another week. After the first week reduce the soft food to twice a week, and you may, if you wish, again give egg food instead of sponge cake. Very glad to hear previous advice was so successful.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Forecasting a Menu.

Paradox.—There should be little difficulty in providing for the proper feeding during your two weeks' absence, even though your substitute is totally ignorant of the subject. In place of the staple of plain Canary, mix together a sufficient quantity to last during your absence, of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. Put this in one stock vessel and label it staple mixture for every-day use. Leave a supply of hemp, not cracked, in another vessel marked so many teaspoonfuls to be given, say two spoonfuls to each group of three birds, every third day. Then mix two parts, in bulk, of the soft food you use with one part of maw in a dry state; shake well together and put into another vessel and mark the quantity that should be given every third day, first made crumbly moist by adding a very few drops of water. On each of the other days you should instruct your friend to give a few green plantain stalks, or a spray of chickweed or groundsel, taking care to see that he or she knew the identity of these plants. By taking the precaution to mark on the extra item of food the days on which they should be given, no mistake should be made. If time allows, give a pinch of Epsom salts in the water every other day for a week before leaving, and drop the medicine you have been giving altogether.

Brevities.

Another Deformed Claw (Roller).—See reply to D. Brooks, and tie the claw to its neighbour as therein described, and it will fully meet your case. Be careful not to tie too tightly, and use the very thin kind of mending wool. The ligature need to be just tight enough not to slip, but must not cause any strangulation of the claws.

Lump on Leg (Amateur).—Am sorry you do not give sufficient particulars to enable me to form a definite opinion of the nature of it. If it is as large as a grape it must be a considerable hindrance to the bird in its movements. On what part of the leg is it—high up near the body or anywhere near the foot or shank? Is it hard or soft, and what colour is it, and what came from it when you pricked it? The answers to these questions would help me. Try painting with a camel-hair pencil dipped in tincture of iodine. Apply sparingly, only just moistening the skin over the substance, and apply it every fourth day for a fortnight. If the substance is not then absorbed, or materially reduced, write again, and give the information asked for.

Black for Cages (A.S.T.P.).—It is very much a matter of taste what you use to black the cages with. Two thin coats of ebony stain, which can be bought at almost any oil or paint shop at 4½d. per bottle, followed by a coat of copal or carriage varnish, would give them a very smart and high-class appearance. Brunswick Black or Black Lacquer obtainable in the same way and applied in two or three thin coats would come next in appearance, and be of good wearing. Black paint, also applied in several thin coats, rather than one thick coat, followed by a coat of copal varnish, would do very well, but not give so good a finish as either of the others. Brunswick Black or Black Lacquer would also do to paint over the wires, but see they are clean and free from grease before applying it.

Making a Birdroom (Grit.).—You should be able to make a very serviceable birdroom of the building, but I do not quite understand your object in putting a wooden roof inside, when you have a tiled roof over it. If the tiled roof is in good condition and waterproof, it is as good as any roof you could have. The partition also on which you say this roof could rest I should like to know more about. If you will send me a rough sketch, showing the various measurements, and the position of the door, and windows, if there are any, and the partition you speak of, I will then give you a definite plan as to what is the best method of converting it into a good birdroom.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Two Goldfinches.

E.E.M., Wimbledon.—It is hard to say, without seeing the bird, but is is quite likely that the Goldfinch is moulting. The natural moulting season is close at hand, anyway. A teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food (from chemist) in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water is a very good tonic for birds finishing their moult. Give it on alternate days. He would, of course, look very much improved in plumage as a result of the new feathers growing. Dirty water and poor food would, of course, tend to bring down a bird into low condition, but under your treatment he should soon recover. No doubt a month after the moult is over will find him as sprightly as you can wish, and on song. Let him have all the ripe thistle heads you can gather. The extent of the blaze is a good guide as to the sex. If the red under the beak extends back right to the edge of the eye (the outer edge, as it were), then you can safely reckon you have a male. If it goes back past the eye, the bird is a certain cock.

A Bramble: and Others.

Thanks.—The breast of a show Bramblefinch should not be pale orange, but a deep orange-red, the richer the better. Most exhibition specimens get a little colour-food given them. It is sprinkled amongst their seed (the "neat" pepper), and sometimes the latter is lightly cracked. As your own bird apparently eats soft food with relish, then you should give the sweet pepper in this. It is possible to judge by a bird's excreta if it is taking a sufficient quantity of colour-food; it should be stained a decided red. The seed mixture you mention is a good one, and will no doubt answer quite well. The bird should be offered a feed of green-food (such as seeding chickweed or shepherd's-purse) every day, and a couple of mealworms, while it should be allowed to bathe freely, or be lightly sprayed. Keep it out of strong light. As regards the other matter, most people who keep singing Linnets won't have any other song bird near them. But an old bird does not very readily pick up the notes of other species—at least, not sufficient to "spoil" its own song (except, perhaps, to the ears of a keeper of contest birds). You could safely venture to keep a singing Mule with your Linnets, or a Goldfinch, or Siskin, or Canary; they would give you plenty of song.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Collecting Ants' Eggs.

Initials.—I don't know how "large collectors" gather their live ants' eggs, but the plan I always followed is to stretch a sheet of newspaper on the ground by the ant hill, weighting down the ends, if necessary, with stones, etc. Then drive a spade into the hill, turning the nest completely over, exposing the eggs, etc. Retire very quickly, and go to another nest (if desired) and repeat the operation. On going back to the first nest, after a fair period of time has elapsed, it will be found that the ants have carried their eggs under the paper for shelter—quite clean and free from earth, etc. Scoop them up with something suitable into stout linen bags (or tins; the former are more easily carried) tying them up tightly, for some ants are bound to go in with them. When a nest is disturbed, the commotion amongst the inmates is something wonderful. Care must be taken to keep the ants from running up one's arms and understandings, or trouble may ensue. Pull your socks outside your trousers, and put on stout old boots which can be well greased round the uppers. I have used a mixture of soft soap and garden insecticide. It was very effectual. Cleaning is unnecessary if gathered as above, though bits of stick, etc., should be picked out after drying is over. To dry mine, I put tin and contents into a just moderately hot oven for some fifteen to twenty minutes, sufficient to destroy all life. The eggs do not want to be browned or shrivelled up. But the heat is easily tested by the hand, and the oven door should not be closed quite to. When suitably dried just store away the eggs in tins in a cool place for future use. Everything depends on how the eggs are gathered—if clean and free (practically) from ants, they could simply be turned out on to an oven shelf covered with grease-proof paper or, better still, hot bird-sand; or to be dried on hot sand in a frying-pan.

Thistle Heads and Seed.

Beginner.—I don't know of any implement which is used to get the seeds out of thistle heads—one's fingers usually, and a nice job it is if you are tender skinned! If the heads are ripe, and open, the seeds can be shaken out in a good strong paper bag; or in a bucket. My own method of storing thistle-heads, hardheads (or knap weed), and the like is very simple. I take care to gather all I want to store for winter use during a spell of fine weather; gathered when wet, or damp, the heads are almost sure to turn musty. I choose those which are thoroughly ripe, i.e., are on the point of opening (or "blowing"). I lay the heads on the floor of a dry room, until they themselves become dry; then cut away the "fluff" close down to the seeds; then throw the heads into a coarse (not closely woven) sack. The latter I keep in a dry place (hang it up in a suitable spot, if you like), and take out the heads as wanted. Some seed is sure to fall to the bottom of the sack, and this loose seed should not be overlooked. The "fluff" I burn; it is not necessary to cut it off, but the heads make less litter when in use if this be done. Don't burn it in the fire-grate unless the chimney has been well swept, and the house is well insured. By the way, don't overlook "rotten" heads when out after thistles, etc., for these on being broken open will be found full of maggots, white and red—splendid things for moulting Finches. All Greypates are the better for a little wild seed when being got on to the ordinary seeds. Most will eat the various thistle seeds, ripe grasses (such as knot-grass, rye grass, etc.), cornflower seed, seedling groundsel, sometimes chickweed, and shepherd's purse.

Moulting a Bullfinch.

J. H.—Some fanciers say that it is not necessary to colour-feed a Bullfinch to have him a good enough colour to exhibit, providing one gets bold of the right coloured bird to start with. But I fancy many of the owners of show Bullies give them a little sweet pepper. It can be given amongst their seed (note reply to "Thanks" this week) if the bird won't eat soft food. If natural colouring agents be used, Bullies should have a free daily supply of all the fruits and berries with colour in them, especially blackberries and privet berries; in addition to these you have straw, rasp, elder, mountain ash, dew and other berries, black currants, and cherries, etc., to say nothing of the wild seeding plants, I am so frequently recommending, such as ripe plantain, dock, thistles, heather tops (where possible), shepherd's-purse, chickweed, etc. That Bullie is a great bud and fruit-eating bird one look at his bill should convince anyone; try him with any fruit you think suitable. Let your bird bathe freely. A most important point in the production of gloss on the plumage is a free use of the bath. A bird which is not a free bather never comes out so polished as one that revels in cold water. If your Bullie is lax in this respect, he must be lightly sprayed every day with a fine sprayer (such as barbers use for bay rhum, etc.), which may be bought from most fanciers' specialists advertising in our columns. Never drench the bird. The stock seed mixture should be canary three parts, teazle two parts, linseed, summer rape and charlock one part each, by measure. Sunflower and safflower seeds should be offered fairly liberally, cracked, if necessary. Don't give hemp.

A Small Aviary.

Yellowhammer.—I suppose your aviary, 54 inches long by 34 wide by 24 high, is an all-wire one. If so, then I do not consider this type very suitable for British birds, unless steady specimens are put into it. Newly-caught birds, or birds which are not thoroughly domesticated, dash about wildly in such a place when anyone goes near, and this generally minimises whatever pleasure the owner feels in keeping them. I think a small all-wire aviary is much better stocked with a collection of the small, common Foreign seed-eaters, which are practically fearless, so far as onlookers are concerned. However, that is a matter for you to decide for yourself. If you stick to Britishers, then any of the small Finches and Buntings could go to make up its inmates. It would hold 12 or 14 birds fairly comfortably, and I should advise you to stick to cocks only. You could select from Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Chaffinch, Linnet, Redpoll (Mealy and Lesser), Twite, Bramblefinch, Greenfinch, Siskin, with the Yellow, Reed, Cirl, and Snow Buntings. Some of these may turn out quarrelsome in the spring, when they come into breeding condition. Some Greenfinches are brutes at that time of the year; others, however, are just the opposite. I advise you to have one only; likewise only one Chaffinch and one Bramblefinch, and these two may fight during summer. Offenders have to be removed (if really vicious) until they begin to moult.

Brevities.

Hen Mule Laying Eggs (Wheeler).—It is not at all a rare thing for a hen Mule to lay eggs—quite common, in fact. They never seem to lay fertile eggs, however, though they will hatch out fertile eggs (if given them to sit on) and rear the young.

Buying a Young Mule (Anxious).—In choosing from young dark Mules, go for the biggest, best-coloured bird, one with a wide skull, and you should make sure there are no white feathers on the bird. There are no other points to guide one with birds which are in nest feather.

Sexing Young Skylarks (Skylarks.)—There are no certain guides to the sex of Skylarks in nestling plumage. You will be fairly safe, however, if you select the two biggest, boldest birds, which do not keep erecting their "crests," and which seem to stand highest on their legs (more erect).

Snow Bunting "Gaping" (W. B.).—The Snow Bunting "gapes" (or opens its mouth) when you go near the cage, because it is nervous. He will get over that as he becomes used to you. Snow Buntings should not be colour-fed—unless you can colour-feed them on a snow-white pepper, or whitewash. The whiter they are, the better they be for exhibition purposes.

Soft-shelled Eggs (G.H.).—It is very annoying, and I should think there must be something constitutionally wrong with the hen to lay soft-shelled eggs so persistently. You seem to have done everything in your power to help. I can only suggest that you stir a teaspoonful of lime water (from chemist) into her drinking water. I should continue with the green food, by all means.

Feathers Falling Out (G. J. M.).—You say your Thrush's feathers are falling out "something terrible." Well, you can shake hands with yourself over it, for it is now the moulting season for Softbills, and your own bird is evidently setting about it very successfully. You need not worry. You are feeding him very well. Keep him out of draughts, and he will look fine in a few weeks' time.

Colour-feeding Softbills (A. Jackson).—It is not really necessary to colour-feed a Sedge or a Willow, or a Garden or a Blackcap Warbler; but I have never found that just a little pure sweet pepper given in their food does any harm. The Yellow Wagtail, however, should be fed as rich as possible. I commence my own with a tiny pinch, and gradually increase the quantity of pepper to about one in five of food. You should commence at once.

Wild Seeds (Weeders).—For the information you require on wild seeds, you should consult the book published by CAGE BIRDS (price 1s., post free 1s. 2d.) which describes them, and gives illustrations. Of the three you send, the long one is plantain, the one with the seeds crowded together is dock, and the other is shepherd's purse. Ripe plantain will keep if stored in a dry place; you should knock out the seed from the shepherd's purse when ripe. You can't store it for winter use in the green state.

Two Softbills (Bunyip).—It is quite possible for a Blackbird to be troubled with worms in the intestines; but I don't think it was these that you saw in the cage. It is also common for birds to go a little "bald" during the summer, and I don't think it is worth your while to endeavour to treat the Starling. It is very near moulting time now, when the missing plumage of the head will be reproduced. If otherwise, then try anointing the place twice daily with a little sulphur ointment.

House Moulting (In Haste).—You will have to explain what you mean by "how to house-moult." Birds, of course, commence to moult (normally) about the end of July, and all that is needed to ensure their getting successfully through it, is correct feeding. If you want detailed information about the feeding of Bramblefinches and Greenfinches, you should consult a book such as Mr. Norman's "British Bird Manual" (published by CAGE BIRDS). In these columns, of course, we can only briefly answer questions. If in doubt about any particular point, I shall be pleased to help you.

Feeding a Jackdaw (Feathered Lover).—Any good brand of dog meal (such as Spratt's or Clarke's "Melox") makes an excellent stock food for such birds as Jackdaws, Magpies, etc. It should be scalded with hot water, and then reduced to a crumbly consistency by the addition of a little packet Thrush or Lark food. Also give table scraps, including meat and greens, dead mice, sparrows etc.; a raw egg now and again is a great treat. They are easy to feed; very accommodating.

Two Weeks and a Goldfinch (Paradox).—I don't see any reason why you should change the present stock food while away on your fortnight's holiday. If it has kept the Goldfinch in good health before, it will continue to do so, whereas a change might upset him. It should be quite easy for the party looking after him to give a little of the special mixture twice weekly, the same as you have been doing yourself. It is sometimes possible to buy chickweed at bird shops.

A Hatching Trouble (A Novice).—Absence of moisture may have been the cause. Did the hen have a bath when sitting? I always let my hens have a few baths after they have been sitting a week; or I spray them. Some fanciers lightly spray the eggs about the ninth and twelfth days with warm water; but I have never found this necessary. Still, any thick-shelled, "chalky" looking Hybrid eggs I always immerse in warm water the day before they are due to hatch. It is not always easy, remember, to detect a "pin-holed" egg; the tiniest puncture would spoil it.

Linnet Mules (F.S.J.).—A coloured plate of an exhibition dark Linnet Mule is sure to have been published by CAGE BIRDS. You should send for a copy of it. A dark Mule must have no light feathers on it. The Canary hen may have finished breeding for this season. Odd birds will stop of their own accord, especially aged hens. I gave a long reply upon the feeding of young Mules only a week or so ago; did you not see it? You have certainly been fortunate in your Linnet.

Treating a Thrush (J. S., of Leeds).—I should be glad if you would explain the points you want hints upon. In this column we can only give brief information; you should consult a book, such as the "British Bird Manual," for full details as to the management of any bird. A healthy Thrush requires no special treatment during the moult. He should be allowed to bathe whenever the day is hot and sunny; should be given as much live food (snails, mealworms, small garden worms, beetles, gentles, etc.), as possible; and should be kept out of draughts.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. M.B.N.H.S., etc.

Concerning Grey Parrots.

G.L.H.—You will find the advice you refer to is not contradicted by facts. I certainly do maintain that tea, coffee, and milk slops, table scraps, and animal food are little better than poison to all greys, and many others, and for every one that continues apparently well, over a period of years, there are a score or more that are killed, made miserable dyspeptics, and become confirmed feather pullers, by such a diet. Even of those, such as yours, which survive such mal-treatment for a time, the large majority become dyspeptic and miserable objects in the end. This is confirmed not merely by the expert's few specimens, but by the evidence of a bulky correspondence, describing the woes of Parrots which had been so fed. When the taste is pleased, Parrots have no more sense than human beings, and will take an unnatural, harmful, but pleasant-tasting diet to the neglect of wholesome food. Many a Parrot will take a piece of bread and dip it in its drinking water; several of my own birds do this, and some of them (one at a time) come to table on the shoulder of some member of the family; but they get no tea or milk slops; something wholesome is to hand, and they get this from time to time, and nothing else. The Parrot owner who puts a cup containing tea in Polly's cage for it to sop its bread therein, is most certainly not entitled to any sympathy when a valuable bird goes suddenly wrong, but the poor victim deserves our pity.

About a Parrot.

C. Berry.—Your bird is the Roseate or Rose-breasted Cockatoo; some few make decent talkers, many do not; but as yours already utters a word or two indistinctly, I should say it would at any rate talk a little. As a rule, they are comic and companionable birds. Keep it where it will bear plenty of conversation, and also teach it, by talking to it (constant repetition, etc.); when it is quiet and restful, pet it, and give it from your fingers such items as you learn by observation, which it considers "titbits." Spray the bird weekly with quassia solution and rub into its plumage when dry, under the wings, round nape of neck, etc., pyrethrum powder, as there are possibly parrasites causing some irritation. So long as its voidings are not watery, add to each ounce of the drinking water, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia, every third day. Diet: Its staple diet should be the seed mixture, canary, millet, wheat, oats, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds, in about equal parts. Also supply liberally such ripe fruit as it fancies, plain biscuits, nuts, and green food. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish hanging in the cage. Do not on any account give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps or any kind of animal food. If the feather picking continues after an interval of two or three weeks, repeat query with full particulars.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Birds Dying.

Shotwick.—There is a possibility the birds were infected when you obtained them; on the other hand, glass-house temperature, from one extreme to the other, during such weather as we had through June, would be very trying to birds coming straight from the, too often, hot and close bird shop. There are two things, which even the hardiest of species cannot stand, viz., draught and damp. I always insist when replying to correspondents desirous of keeping birds in conservatories, etc., that such is possible if they can keep down the damp—ventilation must be thorough, and without creating a draught. Again, newly-purchased birds unless coming from an outdoor aviary, must be hardened off, like plants, as it were. You have an outrageous mixture. It is quite possible some have died by violence; some certainly from damp and extremes of temperature; and others were contaminated when they came into your possession. You certainly ought not to keep either Budgerigars or Moustache Parrakeets with Finches, and I advise you to rig up some place outside for these, and add to your indoor stock, pairs of Zebra Finches, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins, Zebra Waxbills, common and green Avadavats. Re an outside place, any erection similar to a fowl-house and run, covered with half-inch mesh netting, providing the house is draught and rain proof, will answer admirably, and the birds will do well therein, once they have settled down. The Pope Cardinal also should be kept with the Budgerigars, etc., you could also keep a pair of Rosella Parrakeets with them. Supply also green food, lettuce, grass in flower (seeding grass), chickweed, etc., also cuttlefish and a little fruit, apple, orange, etc.; note which they prefer. Every third day for a fortnight, add Dinneford's magnesia to the drinking water—one tablespoonful of the magnesia to each ounce of water. I cannot recommend any special firm in these columns, consult Aviary Appliance advertisement column, and write for lists.

Brevities.

Grey Parrot with Film Over Eyes ("Polly's Eyes").—I fear your bird has a cataract over the one eye, and that one is rapidly forming over the other; if so, it will ultimately become quite blind. But as you have had it some time, and keep the food vessels, I presume, continually in the same position, it will find its way about, and not starve. However, to make sure, either show it to a vet., or foment its eyes with a zinc and rose-water eye solution (from your chemist). If such gives no relief, I fear nothing can be done save an operation; a vet. should be able to tell you if there was any prospect of this proving successful.

A Grey or an Amazon (Mrs. B.).—I, The grey is the better talker, but very difficult to acclimatise and often there are several losses before this is accomplished. Many Blue-fronts are very intelligent; some are inclined to scream a little more than a grey, many are very capable talkers and mimics. They are much easier to acclimatise than greys. Yes, if you can get a true pair, but sexes are very difficult to determine, while the birds are young (that is immature). 2, Yes. 3, I cannot give dealers' names here. 4, A square cage is the more commodious, and one 22 to 24 inches square by 30 to 36 inches high, should meet your requirements. 5, See reply to No. 1. 6, No, but hope to do so in the near future. Hope you will have luck with the birds.

What Bird? (Recipitant).—I have come to the conclusion that your birds are Tovi Parrakeets. Their colouration will alter slightly when fully mature, but not materially. Their approximate value is from 40/- to 60/-, according to condition. Diet: Canary, and white millet in equal parts, ripe fruit, such as they fancy, plain biscuits (these can be just dipped in water, but not saturated), as they are evidently young birds, and not yet fully accustomed to an entirely dry seed diet. Cuttlefish, grit and water should be continually in cage. If they are still in your possession, when they have passed through the moult, I should be interested if you would send in a description again, so that I may either confirm or correct the above name.

Mongoose as Pet.

K. Blair.—Yes, a Mongoose is a teachable and amusing pet; at any rate, if you get a tame, hand-reared one; but you must remember that it has much of the nature of a ferret, and that one thing you are not likely to be able to teach it is to control its desire to massacre anything that its sharp teeth and great activity enable it to master—so look out for your birds or poultry if you keep any.

Identification of Bird.

In a Fix.—From your description the bird evidently is a Turtle Dove—our wild British species; the "Turtle Dove" which you say it resembles in head and size, is presumably the tame collared kind. You can mate it with one of these if you like, and breed Mules. You should give it other small corn and seed besides hemp seed (not too much of the latter) and a turf,, and some rock salt and old mortar to pick at.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Two Canaries (Anxious).—Your birds undoubtedly died of bird fever. It is an unfortunate occurrence, but you have the satisfaction of knowing it is not the result of foul play, as you suspected.

Canary (E. Higginson).—Inflammation of liver, lungs and spleen, ending with apoplexy, all the symptoms of bird fever.

Canary (W. H. Shoobert).—Chronic softening of liver and acute inflammation, owing to egg-laying.

Canary (J. W. B.).—Unmistakable bird fever.

Canary (D. McCrone).—Bird fever, for which there is no cure, but disinfection with burning sulphur, and washing all cages with boric acid solution (one teaspoonful to pint of hot water) may exterminate it.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Strange Nesting Sites (C. Burrows).—Many thanks. We will deal with this next week.

Suggested Article (Member B.R.C.C.).—Thanks for the suggestion, which we will endeavour to put into practice.

An Offer of Help (B. Wharton).—We very much appreciate your kind offer to help in forwarding the circulation of our paper, and shall be glad to have some attractive show-cards sent to you to be displayed in your bird-room, and in any other likely places in which they will be seen by callers or passers-by.

Two Matters (W. C. McIntosh).—We thank you for bringing these matters to our notice, and trust you will have better fortune in future.

Two Ideas (W. H. Smith).—The idea you send for trapping redmite is the subject of a patent, and consequently cannot be dealt with in our columns. The device for preventing hens sweating their young we have already utilised in the illustrated ideas column.

Bird Lime (Dozey).—There is no law which prevents bird-lime being used for the catching of birds.

Two Perches (A. Hook).—We could not print the letter you send as the idea for the red mite trap is already patented, and anyone making imitations can be proceeded against.

First annual young bird show, held at the Nutclough Tavern, June 26th. The show received a liberal patronage from the general public. Entries, owing to the bad season, were hardly up to expectation, but the quality was good. Mr. Cundall (Halifax) officiated as judge, and he complimented the members on the fine class of young birds.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

Members' show of Canaries in their first feather held on July 3rd, at Park Chapel Schools, when Mr. S. Dean (Gt. Horton) officiated as judge. The entries came up very well, and 71 exhibits were staged in 15 classes. All points gained at these shows count towards the Society's special prizes, the four highest birds of each competitor to count for points. Some very nice exhibits were on view, and no doubt many of them will be heard of again when they have moulted. The following were the winners of most points at this show: Champion section, L. Briggs, J. Farrar, and W. Laycock. Novice section, E. Dinsdale, F. Gelder, C. Walker, and Baldwin Bros. Extra novice section, W. Walker. The judge gave every satisfaction.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Annual Nest Feather Show held on June 26th, in the Oldham Hall. The entries came up well, there being 209, and both type and quality were represented. In the Yorkshire classes (Clears and Greens) the competition was very keen; the Clear and Green Norwich were a success, and the competition in these classes was keen. The Borders came out well and looked "in the pink." British birds came up nicely. A good number of fanciers and visitors attended. Mr. A. Wellings (Prescot) judged, and gave every satisfaction.

MEDWAY C.B.S.

Held at Chatham on June 23rd. There was a high class collection of Norwich which seem to be in great favour in this district. The society has not long been started, but seems to be making rapid headway, and the greatest enthusiasm, and good will are evinced by all. With such fanciers in its ranks as Messrs. G. A. Acland, H. Casemore, Wickham, Wade, Hunt, and others, it is not to be wondered at that the society is going prosperously forward. As we have noted, the Norwich made a fine show, breeders hereabouts having made a distinctive features of shape and quality. The Novice Section came up well, Mr. Hunt putting down a fine team. There was a very nice collection of Britishers. The true spirit of fancierlike rivalry was shown all round, and everybody worked for success. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged, and his awards appeared to give satisfaction.

BATTERSEA OPEN C.B.A.

Annual show of young birds, held at the Duchess of Devonshire, on June 30th. Although the number of exhibitors was not quite so large as in previous years (through the bad results of breeding this year) their quality was very good. The British birds were a very good lot, all in fine condition; also the Foreigners were a very attractive feature. Messrs. Easterling and Allen carried out their duties as joint secretaries with every attention. Mr. J. Robson judged.

LEICESTER C.B.S.

One of the most successful Nest Feather Shows since the society first started was held at headquarters, Saracen's Head Hotel, Market-place, July 3rd. Some wonderful youngsters were staged, competition being very keen. All the classes were well filled, with the exception of the Cinnamons, Borders, and A.O.V. classes in the open section, the breeders of these varieties finding that their birds had gone too far in moult to be staged. The awards were fairly well split up, no member taking an undue share of the prizes, which speaks well for the competitions later on. Mr. McCarty, in the Canary section, and Mr. Heighton, in the British bird section, were very painstaking in the placing of the awards.

The New Cage Bird Society for Doncaster and Dist.

SIR,—There will be a meeting of cage bird fanciers held on Tuesday, July 13th, at 8 p.m., at the Albany Temperance Hotel, Baxter Gate, when we hope to advance the preliminary stages of the society for Doncaster and District. Will all interested bird fanciers please attend, so that we can get to business straight away?

A Competition to Aid a Fancier.

The Barwell Benefit Fund.

SIR,—Allow me to acknowledge through your columns a 5s. donation from Mrs. Douglas Bennett (Bombay, India). Also will those fanciers who intend to send entries for the Gift Class (for the benefit of Mr. Barwell) kindly do so per return, as the show is to be held on Saturday next, July 10th. Up to now I have received only four entries. Will fanciers kindly look up something for such a deserving case?

More Twins.

SIR,—I have been a reader of your paper CAGE BIRDS for over two years, and have noticed from time to time reports of cases of two birds coming from one egg; but unfortunately all have been dead, until the case referred to in your issue of June 26. I beg to inform you that at the present time I have two birds which came out of one egg. The hen was sitting on four eggs. Like your correspondent, I tested the eggs on the Saturday. On the Sunday there were three young ones out, and one egg which did not hatch until Monday morning. Result: five young birds from four eggs. All are alive and doing well.

Linnet Singing in the West of England,

SIR,—While reading the correspondence on Linnet singing North and South, I noticed that no one had written about Linnet singing in the West. I should like, therefore, to give your readers in the North an idea of the way in which our birds sing in Bristol. Two birds are hung together back to back for fifteen minutes. We score our birds by the changes in their song. Each bird must do three changes, which count one song. The following are the principal songs:—"Tolic, hic, hic, wey,"; "tolic, luc, luc, see"; "tolic, cluck, heart, ser, wet"; "tolic, ger, ger Joey"; "tolic, Joey"; and "tolic, tuck wisy." It will give you some idea of the class of birds we keep when I say we have had Linnets do nine score twelve songs, a score being twenty songs. Therefore, this bird sang 192 songs in 15 minutes. We sing three kinds of birds—the Goldfinch, the Linnet, and the Goldfinch mule.

A Very Rare Foreigner Arrives in England.

SIR,—I am always interested in CAGE BIRDS. "Ornithological Oddments," by that great authority, Mr. Frank Finn, F.Z.S., finds great favour with me. Reading last week his notes on "A Beautiful Flycatcher," I thought it might interest Mr. Finn to know that I have at present in my bird-room a fine specimen of that extremely rare bird, the Orange Pericrocotus, or Flycatcher (Pericrocotus flammeus), the only one of its kind known in Europe. It is an exceedingly charming little fellow, its head and back being of a brilliant glossy black, whilst the underparts and wings are of a bright orange scarlet, if I may so term it. Delightfully pretty, and with a sweet call note, it is a fine acquisiton to any bird-room or collection of birds.

Linnet Singing at Leeds.

Unvarnished Reports versus Bluff and Bounce.

SIR,—Allow me again a short space in your valuable paper re "Bluff and Bounce." I am glad to notice that "A Visitor" has climbed down a great deal since his first letter. Here let me give a flat denial that he came to the "King's Head" with his bird, and was not allowed to hang it, being a club contest. This statement is not true but grossly misleading to intending visitors to our contests, which are run every Saturday and Sunday throughout the year. To meet the wishes of fanciers coming from a distance, contests have been commenced much later than the advertised time. In proof of this I would refer "A Visitor" to Mr. Topping (Blackburn), Mr. Davis (Pontefract), Mr. Clegg (Dewsbury), Mr. Bisley (Sheffield), and many others, who will all testify to the courteous welcome they receive when visiting Leeds. In the second part of his letter he alludes again to the 15s. 6d. and the 6s. given by some other club, which we have nothing to do with. Let him say what he means, instead of trying to make little of our annual Whit-Monday contest, and the manner in which the prizes and prize money were allotted. It was advertised as the All-England open contest, and £20 was given (less the cost of Secretary's salary, payment of judges and advertising), the remainder going to the 28 competitors. If "A Visitor" has an idea that more should be given to first, second and third winners, let him join our club and give expression to his opinion. If he can get a majority, then the minority will have to give way to him. In conclusion, I would ask him not to be so personal in attacking certain members of the fancy and their birds; if he has anything better, let him bring it out, as everyone would be glad to hear it, and then give honour where honour is due.

Insect Trouble in an Aviary.

SIR,—I am writing to ask if any fancier can suggest a remedy for the following. I am an old fancier of considerably more than a quarter of a century, but have never experienced it before. It is a little brown bug about the size of the red mite, but a little larger, and, unlike the former, it remains on the birds all day. If you catch a bird and hold it in your hand for a few seconds, you will find a quarter of a hundred running all over your palm. I have thoroughly washed the birds in a bucket of water containing a strong solution of quassia, and also dusted them with Keating's powder, but all to no effect, as they are just as bad a day or two after. The birds are in a large aviary, and are kept perfectly clean.

LIVELY.

[We are at a loss to understand what the "little brown bug" can be, but our correspondent's best plan is obviously to cleanse his birds by washing them, and transfer them to fresh quarters while the aviary (its immediate surroundings, too, if necessary) is very thoroughly disinfected with something effectual, such as a solution of carbolic acid, and by fumigating, if possible.—EDITOR.]

When Does an Even-mark become an Uneven-mark?

SIR,—I noticed the letter in your last issue by "Interested," under the above heading, and although the heading is a little mixed, I, like "Interested," would like to have those points freely discussed through "C.B." both by breeders and judges. If there is a thing I dislike it is to disqualify a bird by wrong classing it; and I find it mostly occurs in the staging by amateurs, and it must be a great trial for them to see their champion's cage label marked "W.C." Knowing such, I gladly give my views. The technical points spoken of by "Interested" I take to mean only both eyes and both wings equally balanced; but if we look at the largest number of evenly-marked birds, we find them marked more or less at the thighs, and if we were to debar all birds so marked from being entered in Even Classes, there would be few left, although the ideal is to get them as clear there as possible. But another point which is very similar, and, to my knowledge, causes more misunderstanding, is the bird marked at rump or vent. This bird I think ought to be considered five-pointed. If the mark is on the top of head, the bird decidedly is uneven-marked and five pointed; and when the eye-marking on one side, or both, is split by a few light feathers, it is also uneven. The great difficulty is to really find where the eye markings are separated. If the eye of the bird alone separates the marks, then it can only be termed even-marked, but where divided by a few light feathers, either down the cheek or otherwise, then it is uneven marked. In the case of the former, I find that the markings are not extended either above or below the eye. I trust to see a friendly discussion on those points.

The L. and P.O.S. and the "Weaker" Society.

SIR,—Allow me to thank your three correspondents for their respective replies re the amalgamated show of the L.P.O.S. and D. and P.C.B.S. Not one, however, gave the reason, but instead wrote epistles full of mere sentiment. Coming as they do from three members of the "Weaker" Society, I draw my own conclusions. I should have preferred a business-like statement from an official of the L. and P.O.S., who is not a member of the D. and P.C.B.S. (or the views of the members, likewise). Perhaps they would be good enough to answer the following questions:—1. Why was the proposal considered necessary? 2. Has the scheme the approval of the majority of the L. and P.O.S. members? 3. When was the meeting called to discuss and settle this important matter? 4. Have the members been circularised, as was the case when obtaining a decision re a members' or open show? If not, why not? Should the above questions be answered satisfactorily, then I will bow to what appears at present to be the inevitable. As I do not seek notoriety, I again beg to sign myself,

Are Fanciers Thoughtless?

A Plea for the Prohibition of Smoking at Shows.

SIR,—I was much struck and interested with the letter from J. W. Cutmore in issue of July 3rd. I have often thought the same as he, but being a non-smoker, thought it perhaps hardly fair, as I might be taken up as prejudiced against the practice on principle. Now, sir, it is a well-known fact that in a room, or, say, a railway carriage, where there is a liberal supply of tobacco smoke, to one who is not smoking the sensation is at least unpleasant, and has a great tendency to give one a bad headache. Our feathered friends can't smoke: what must their feelings be in such a poisonous atmosphere? It is, as Mr. Cutmore says, bad enough for ladies who might only remain at a show for an hour or two. How much more for the little songster who has to remain for perhaps 48 hours or more? I am a lover of birds for their own sake more than for "points," and I know that many little victims suffer much at the hand of man to reach those "points." I would not believe this is done intentionally, as it is often for want of a little thought. What we want are more lovers of birds. Let fanciers study the comfort, health and happiness of their birds first, and then try for "points." I have a large aviary erected in my back yard (I have no garden). I have Canaries and foreigners flying together. Many an hour I spend sitting among them. What more delightful sight than to see them building their nests, making love, etc. Let anyone who doubts the pleasure, try it. I guarantee there will be less cages and more outside aviaries. Then again, as regards shows, a little more time will be needed in training the birds to the show cage after the semi-liberty of the aviary. But what matters a few days longer when compared to the pleasure the aviary life gives to the aviarist and the birds?

EBENEZER G. CORNWELL.

Song Thrushes which Breed in a Cage.

SIR,—I cannot describe the amount of pleasure and surprise we experienced on opening our weekly CAGE BIRDS to read Messrs. Lloyd and Pearson's chatty letters respecting our pair of Thrushes. I may say candidly that we have had several very disagreeable incidents in connection with the nesting of the Thrushes in captivity, and those from a quarter from which one would have least expected them, and I may give you chapter and verse later on. But I must say that 99 out of every 100 Fanciers (a capital letter for Fanciers here, Mr. Printer, for they deserve it), have wished us luck with our venture; but I am sorry to say it has proved another case of success in sight but not in hand, with failure at the end. The eggs were due to hatch out on Wednesday, June 23rd, and you will no doubt remember that was the day of dreadful thunderstorms in this part of the country. One young Thrush made a hole in the side of the shell preparatory, I suppose, to stepping out into the world at large, but it must have been frightened by the wet and shocked to death at the noise of the storm, for it never got any further into the world than its peep-hole. Mr. Steel came along on the Friday, and my wife explained the circumstances to him, so he took the egg out of the nest and broke away a further portion of the shell, but the poor little thing was dead. The other three eggs, though they appeared full, did not hatch out. Unfortunately I was away from home on business from the Monday until late on the Saturday night, so you may guess I was greatly disappointed when I did get home. The Blackbird laid three more eggs, so I tried her with two in the nest; but instead of sitting on them she had a tea party instead, and now she is sitting very closely on a pot egg. It would suit our plans better if she would go ahead and lay another clutch of eggs, for which she would have our thanks. Then we would take them to a gentleman's estate a few miles out of Manchester and put them under either a Blackbird or a Thrush in the open, to hatch and rear. Each time we have had eggs it has been my lot to be away from home on business; in fact, if it was not for the lady I formerly went a-courting, and now court at home when my duties allow me to do so, I could not keep birds for a week; she is as fond of them as I am, and we intend to persevere with our Softbills until success crowns our efforts. Then when we have done that we intend mating a young Thrush with the young Hybrid Blackbird-Thrush. These birds will be kin to each other to begin with. Then we will try and get them to breed with each other, and so test Professor Darwin's theory of "the origin or extension of species." The Blackbird and Thrush are comparatively speaking of the same family, and so it ought to be an easy matter to breed Hybrids from them. Then, if there is any truth in Darwin's theory, it ought to be possible to get the Hybrid to breed with the blood related Thrush as already suggested. Then there are a number of other birds very closely related to Blackbird and Thrush that the second cross might be mated to in due course, and so we may test the theory further. But, eh, mister! this is a big handful to try for in a back yard. I am biting off more than I am likely to be able to chew in one mouthful. Personally, it would delight me to hear that one of our British bird lovers, with a good outside aviary, and time at home and to spare to experiment somewhat on the lines I have mentioned, had succeeded. I fancy they would find it a most fascinating and interesting study, and for the first cross, viz., Blackbird-Thrush, I do not for one moment doubt that success could easily be brought about under favourable conditions. We would then soon have a new species of Hybrid sweeping the decks at our shows, for I have every confidence that such a Hybrid would prove a handsome fellow, with crocus beak and eyeceres, light, bronzy brown in colour, with darker spots, and the proud sweep of the tail like the Blackbird; he would be bad to beat on the bench, a delightful home pet, and quite a Caruso on the perch. I thank all fanciers who have called in response to my invitation. Mr. Lloyd was rather out of it in his dimensions of the cage. The length really is 4ft. 3½ inches, but owing to the cock also being an egg shifter, I am forced to run him out of cage entirely if both hens are going to lay on the same day. This I do by opening a glass slide at the end of the breeder and running him into a small compartment of the aviary I was making when the decision was come to about our change of residence. My invitation to fanciers to come and judge for themselves still holds good; they can get my address from my last letter.

The Golden Oriole in Scotland.

SIR,—A fine specimen of a (to us) rare bird—the Golden Oriole (Oriolus galbula)—was very recently obtained in Renfrewshire (Scotland) in beautiful plumage. The last known record of such an extremely rare visitor was in 1803. The Orioles are chiefly to be found in the warmer parts of Asia and Africa, and this one species migrates every year into Europe, and occasionally visits Britain. It is of about the size of the Blackbird, but is of a more tapered make, and of more elegant appearance; the colour of the plumage is a rich lemon yellow, nicely relieved by black on the wing coverts and tail. Our last visitor is a male, or cock bird, and of lovely sheen. It had been seen flying about for several days in Port Glasgow, where it was obtained, and is now to be seen for a few days in the window of Mr. Horton, Tackle Maker, Buchanan Street, Glasgow.

The Insurance Scheme of the London Federation of C.B.S.

SIR,—As one of those who were responsible for the Federation Insurance scheme, I am indebted to you for your friendly criticism. Your views appear to convey the impression that the Federation is taking too many risks. Time alone can determine this. In any case, it is gratifying to know that the books are being freely ordered; over thirty orders, in fact, were taken at quite a small meeting the other night. The Committee is fully aware of the existence of vulnerable spots, but seeing that the scheme is more or less of a friendly nature (for all those taking out books will be known to members of the Federation), it is of opinion that its interests are sufficiently safeguarded by the Declaration form, which must be signed by the owner, and by the pathologist's report showing the cause of death; the Federation also reserves for itself the right to refuse any member a subsequent insurance. For the present I am sanguine enough to believe that fanciers are not going to stoop to mean, contemptible frauds to rob the Federation of its funds, but will view the scheme in a loftier frame of mind, and try to promote its best interests by building up a fund to help their unfortunate brother fanciers. Any fancier who has fratricidal intentions must, after a little reflection, come to the conclusion that they are really suicidal, since all funds that accrue to the Federation are the property of its members, and in the event of the insurance scheme being dropped, they will lose what is intended to safeguard their interests. Under the Federation Insurance they are enabled to save 33 per cent. on railway insurance rates, and, in addition, they do not have to prove negligence if the bird dies, as is required by railway companies, even when insured. They are, too, enabled to insure their birds on their return journeys from shows (hitherto almost impossible), as well as during the show itself. Protection against fire on the fancier's own premises is also provided. When these advantages are offered even the naturally fraudulent fancier (and I trust there are none in London), is not going to stoop to mean and petty trickery. If I may be allowed to say so, I feel sure that you are quite in accord with the spirit of the scheme, and from your reference to the Bill which is now before Parliament dealing with insurance companies, and the funds they ought to have, I deduce that you consider it necessary that the Federation should start with a fund. Personally, I am quite in agreement with this opinion. It has been suggested that a levy of 1s. on all the members would meet the case, but at this early stage this seems to me to be hardly a wise procedure. To accomplish this object, therefore, I will subscribe £5, and undertake to get guarantors for another £5, if you will subscribe a like amount. This would start the scheme with a fund. Now, if I may, I should like to review briefly some of the points raised in your criticism, from a fancier's standpoint only. Firstly, you refer to the proposal that the decision of the Committee should be final. In my humble opinion a person who has once signed the certificate would be bound by the rules; and who, may I ask, could better interpret the rules than those who framed them? This, I have no hesitation in saying, would be done firmly, fearlessly and impartially, the benefit of the doubt always being given. Secondly, you say that there is no provision to prevent over-insurance. As a matter of fact, there is the £5 limit. But, even if a man did insure a bird beyond its real value, it would not matter to the Federation (provided no dishonesty is practised), because he would have to pay a proportionately higher premium, which would entitle him to receive his money in full. Surely you do not seriously mean to tell the Fancy that Lloyds' would not pay the full amount of the insurance on the death of a horse! The man is not born who can estimate the live value of a horse after death, and Lloyds certainly do not value them at the time the policy is taken out! And do not railway companies pay the full insurance (when they do pay) irrespective of the real value of the bird at the time of insurance? Your third point deals with the average clause. My opinion is that the object of the clause is to prevent a single, perhaps a delicate, specimen being insured while its fellows are at owner's risk. If this plan is not followed, when more than one bird is being sent, complications as to the bird's identity might follow if it were possible to ensure a single bird. Consequently, whatever amount of cover is paid for will be averaged over the number of birds dispatched by rail, or belonging to the same owner at a show, as the case may be. Lastly, I am not, at present, in a position to combat your remarks about the stamp duty; but one thing I should like to point out, and that is, that I have never yet received a stamped insurance receipt from any railway company. May I ask if they are liable? I can quite understand that before an insurance certificate would be admitted as evidence it would have to be stamped; but surely this could be done at any time? To my mind the consummation of this scheme will be reached when the Committee is in a position to afford temporary relief to distressed widows of fanciers. As a part of my letter might be taken for an advertisement of myself were I to sign my name, I enclose my card, and subscribe myself,

OPTIMIST.

(Our correspondent is quite correct in assuming that we are "in accord with the spirit" of the London Federation's insurance scheme. But in using such phrases as "you say," and "you refer," he is not correct, as we ourselves have passed no opinions upon the scheme—we make no pretence to either expert insurance or legal knowledge. As regards the formation of a "Fund," we shall be most happy to subscribe to this, providing that an insurance scheme can be formulated which, in the eyes of our insurance and legal experts, shall be workable and sound, and that it be universal in its application, and not restricted to any locality.—EDITOR.)

SIR,—May I be permitted to supplement my previous remarks in regard to your criticism on the above. In connection with your "over-insurance" point, I omitted to ask how would it be practicable to pay on the actual value of a bird? It would be extremely difficult to find two persons of the same opinion as to the value of a live bird, and to estimate the live value of a dead one would be absolutely impossible. Would you suggest that every member should take each consignment to the secretary of the Federation for valuation, or would you suggest that the secretary should visit all those dispatching birds? To leave it to members to make their own valuation cannot be any improvement on the present system. You have also referred to subrogation. This simply means transferring from the consignor to the Council of the Federation the power to recover the 5s. from the railway companies, the amount they state they are liable for, and then only when negligence has been admitted. The correspondence, time and cost involved would not make the game worth the candle, besides increasing the already onerous duties of the secretary. If, on the other hand, a consignor insured his bird with a railway company, he alone is entitled to the amount of his cover. Why should be subrogate his claim to the Federation, seeing they would have no moral or legal right to it? Lastly, am I to understand you to say that the stamp duty on a £5 insurance is sixpence? If so, I respectfully submit you are wrong. At the present moment I have a dozen policies before me, none of which are stamped for a larger amount than 1d., and are these not contracts as well? Do members of slate clubs have a stamped policy or certificate? I think not. The Federation's insurance is much on the same lines. Some of your critic's suggestions would not only encumber the working of the insurance, but are calculated to bring about bickerings and complications. In suggesting something about a "death blow," you really cannot be serious. If you are, I am inclined to think you are too much carried away by your own criticisms. There is nothing in them, as far as I can see, to give the insurance its benediction. One might conclude from such a suggestion that the delegates are a weak-kneed invertebrate body of the jelly-fish order; but if I know them, you are reckoning without your host. Seeing that they have once put their hands to the plough, I have every confidence in them not to turn back or even aside; they are not "ploughing the sands of the sea shore" either. What has been said should simply stimulate them to surmount all difficulties that become manifest. The idea that they are going to be frightened by hypothetical ones is grotesque. At a future date I feel quite sure the Federation would be prepared to consider a better scheme of insurance if you are prepared to draw one up (if necessary under legal and expert guidance), as at the present juncture the Federation is not in a position to expend sums of money in legal opinions on a friendly insurance. In conclusion, I should like to ask if there has ever been a perfect Act of Parliament, even when all the legal luminaries have a hand in it? OPTIMIST.

(Our footnote above, pointing out that the opinions published have been those of experts, and not our own, applies equally to this letter. We regret our correspondent should feel annoyed at anything they may have said. It is, of course, open to the Council of the L.F. of C.B.S. to satisfy themselves that our own expert's views are wrong by consulting experts of equal standing. Why our correspondent should imagine that we think the fanciers comprising the Council "weak-kneed invertebrates of the jelly-fish order," we are at a loss to understand. If we can help the Council (it is not, we hope, improbable), we most certainly shall.—EDITOR.)

SIR,—Kindly allow space for publication of enclosed copy of requisition (original posted by me to-day, July 5th, to Mr. Hyland, hon. sec. pro tem. Y.C.C. of I.), and circular letter sent subscribers thereto. I may mention that Sligo are solid for reform in the affairs of the Y.C.C. of Ireland (and of course Cork will follow Sligo's lead), and that any decision come to by the aggrieved Dublin members who form the majority of the members residing in Dublin, at the extraordinary general meeting (or subsequently) in the interests of the Irish Fancy, will be acquiesced in by the fanciers of the south and west, by several of the most influential of the Dundalk members, and by Mr. Fleming, of Belfast, all of whom have written to that effect.

J. P. ROONEY,
Ex-Hon. Sec. Y.C.C. of I.

[COPY OF CIRCULAR LETTER.]

DEAR SIR,—As may be inferred from enclosed Requisition, an acute crisis exists in the Y.C.C. of Ireland. There seems to a number of the most influential members in Dublin and the Provinces no possible hope of getting things to run smoothly, owing to the prevailing discord, wire-pulling, and absolute lack of efficient management which characterise the inner working of the club, and it may come to pass that, unless the extraordinary general meeting faces the situation that has arisen fearlessly, and unless the committee remove the cause of all the trouble and turmoil of the last few years, the Dublin members, with the co-operation of the leading members and clubs of the country, may be forced, in the interests of the Irish Fancy, to form a Cage-Bird Union of Ireland in the near future. The Y.C.C. of I. is, we regret to have to state (and we speak with a knowledge of the facts that the members generally do not possess), is in an absolutely rotten condition just now; it is greatly in debt, though through no fault of last year's committee, all of whom were kept in the dark by the officers of the club, and, in addition, is thoroughly discredited among the country members. It is our intention to send a copy of the Requisition to the Fancy Press.

J. P. ROONEY, ex-hon. sec.
(For Subscribers).

[COPY OF REQUISITION.]

To Mr. J. Hyland, hon. secretary pro tem, Yorkshire Canary Club of Ireland.

DEAR SIR,—We, the undersigned members of the Y.C.C. of Ireland, request you to convene within fourteen days from this date an extraordinary general meeting of the members of the club.

I.—For the purpose of deciding whether the election of officers, etc., at the annual general meeting held on March 17th, 1909, was legal.

II. To consider the present financial condition of the club.

III.—To consider, and if approved of, adopt a resolution: That this extraordinary general meeting directs the chairman, officers, and committee of the club to give effect within seven days to the resolutions passed at the meeting of committee, held June 3rd, 1909, and which were as follows:—

(a) That the funds of the club be lodged in the Munster and Leinster Bank, in the names of the chairman, hon. secretary, and hon. treasurer.

(b) That as it has been alleged that certain sums amounting in the aggregate to about £6 were set out in the balance-sheet of the club for 1908-9 as paid, when said sums were at the time due to the club's creditors, it is hereby resolved that Messrs. C. A. O'Reilly and J. Dowling be appointed to audit last year's accounts; and, further, that they be instructed to report to committee.

(c) That the hon. secretary be instructed to write to all exhibitors who won money prizes or specials at the last show for an acknowledgment of receipt of same.

Signed, *J. P. Rooney, *Joseph Dowling, Daniel Carroll *Patrick McDonnell, *Peter Gillen, M. Fleming, jun., Jas. Devins, Edward J. Tighe, Chas. J. Mulligan, Michael J. Mulligan, Joseph McQuade.

*Members (Dublin) of committee, 1908.

(We have had, owing to pressure of space, to considerably condense the above communication.—EDITOR.)

---

SIR,—I have never had any desire to write to the Fancy Press on matters pertaining to club differences—or rather petty jealousies—which are, I consider, best left to the committee elected by the members to deal with. But you hold a letter from Mr. J. P. Rooney in reference to which I should like to say a word. It does not say much—rather it speaks volumes—for his intelligence to acknowledge attendance at committee meetings, and yet not know the business of the club. The statements of accounts sent out were, and are, correct; they were prepared by our then secretary, and signed by our chairman. In order to avoid holding our annual meeting later in the year, as in previous years, it was arranged to send out a statement of our income and expenditure, and to hold the annual meeting in March. At that time over £6 was in the bank to the credit of the club; and the advertising money had not then been collected, and remained so until last month, when the statement was checked with vouchers and receipts by our chairman, and Mr. C. O'Reilly (anyone knowing the latter gentleman will accept any statement of accounts bearing his signature). When the versatile provider of "Tit-Bits" can point to something done in the interest of the Fancy other than his puerile ebullitions ("A little learning is a dangerous thing") perhaps he may then succeed in having me expelled from the Y.C.C. of Ireland. This explanation is given in deference to the members, and not to answer the "whys" of "J. P. R."

RICHARD F. DUIGENAN.
Hon. Treas. Y.C.C. of Ireland.

A Lament from Llanelly.

SIR,—At our last meeting at the Centre Hotel, on June 26th, there was only a fair attendance of members. I may say that I am situated as regards attendance at meetings the same as my brother secretary at Morriston. Things should now be put in order for the carrying on of the society, and we should now be preparing for our next show, and yet I cannot get a good muster of members at all until it is time to put the schedule in the printer's hands, and then things that have been done they will want to have altered. And so the poor secretary comes in for more work than he should have. The secretary of a society has as much as he can do to get his house in order.

DANIEL JOHN,
Secretary of the Llanelly and Dis. C.B.S.

What is Sufficient Payment for a Borrowed Bird?

SIR,—Permit me a small space in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to give Mr. A. Bond my opinion on the above subject. I borrowed a muling cock Siskin from a neighbour of mine about two months ago, to try and breed some mules. I had the luck to get four full eggs, but only two young hatched, and they both died at three weeks old; likewise their father, the cock Siskin, a fortnight later. I went and told my neighbour what had happened, and showed him his dead cock Siskin. I asked him what was due to him by reason of his Siskin dying, when with me. He told me nothing was due, as I could not help the bird dying. Mr. Bond will see the difference between his friend and mine. But if he gives his friend the pick of the first nest, his friend can't look for any more. But seeing that A. Bond is having such good luck, he could spare his friend another, and then the latter would have no room to grumble. But to ask for half of the youngsters is out of the question altogether. For my part, if I were to get two youngsters I would be thinking that I was well paid for the loan of a bird.

Harry —— had a Jackdaw, which was in the habit of hiding thimbles and buttons in its nest. One day a bright shilling was left on the table, and the Jackdaw seeing it, took and hid it in his nest, unbeknown to anybody. Some days after, while Harry's father was cleaning out the toolhouse he found many curious things hidden, and also the bright shilling in the Jackdaw's nest.—Taken from a story-book, and sent by E. ### *Nest Near a Dog Kennel.

A pair of birds built their nest in a pump next to a dog kennel. The dog did not like the birds in his domain, and the birds left their quarters, and prepared another nest in a chestnut tree near by. One of the birds entered the pump despite the violent protestations of the dog, and brought out one of its eggs in its beak. On a second attempt it got worried by the dog, and two eggs still remain in the pump.—Copied from a daily paper, and sent by L. Smithurst (age 14), School Lane, Underwood, near Jackdale.

Bird Thoughts.

I lived first in a little house,
And lived there very well;
I thought the world was small and round,
And made of pale, blue shell.

I lived next in a little nest,
Nor needed any other;
I thought the world was made of straw,
And nestled by my mother.

One day I fluttered from the nest
To see what I could find;
I said, "The world is made of leaves,
I have been very blind."

At length I flew beyond the tree,
Quite fit for grown-up labours.
I don't know how the world is made,
And neither do my neighbours.

BRADFORD City O.S. members and friends had a most enjoyable ramble on Saturday last, no less than 60 congregating at Nab Wood tram terminus, the Bradford contingent meeting in Forster Square, and proceeding by car to that place, where they were met by a good number of their Bingley friends. Leaving the road just before reaching Cottingley Bridge, the party proceeded joyously on their way to Harden, then round the country to Bingley, tea being provided for them at the Co-op. Cafe, and as they did not reach the tea rooms until 7 o'clock, doubtless they did justice to the spread, and the 53 of them no doubt carried a little "grub" out of Bingley. I guess, too, they wouldn't have much bonus out the birdy men at 8d. each.

THE Manningham Society had Mr. R. Halliday booked for a lecture on the "Yorkshire Canary" last Saturday evening, and a good muster assembled in anticipation of a pleasant and instructive time, and they were not disappointed. The discussion afterwards was very interesting, Mr. H. being plied with questions very numerous and on every conceivable subject. He answered them all in a very masterly manner. Amongst those present was a fancier from Melbourne, Australia, who was very enthusiastic, and who greatly enjoyed the many subjects brought forward in the discussion. He will probably take back with him very pleasant memories of the time spent amongst fanciers in the old country.

MEMBERS' Shows were the chief events of many societies on Saturday last, Bradford East as usual having a good turn up, some very nice birds being staged. The novice classes compared very favourably with the open. Shipley also had a nice show. Here the Cinnamon Marks, I hear, were exceptionally good, and would delight the heart of the judge, Mr. E. B. Denton, who is great on Cinnamon Marks. Several other societies also held good shows, and it is the opinion of many that a lot of nice, alround birds are out this year.

THE C.M.Y.C.C. is still progressing, several new members having been enrolled in the ranks, principally novices. It would doubtless be of interest if the rule passed at the last meeting in regard to the novice classes were explained, viz., "that no exhibitor be allowed to win more than three first prizes in novice classes where our patronage is given, unless such exhibitor is competing for the club specials as a member of the club." What struck the committee was this, that a novice not a member of the club could go on for an indefinite period showing as a novice in these classes, if some rule concerning him was not brought forward, and it was deemed advisable in the interests of the members to draw the line at three firsts.

A SENSATION FROM SCOTLAND.

EXTRAORDINARY DEVELOPMENTS IN THE McQUISTON AFFAIR.

The Dreyfus Case Outrivalled. Astounding Allegations of Conspiracy Against Prominent Fanciers. English Club Exonerates McQuiston From All Blame!

BUT WHERE IS THE ELUSIVE GEMMELL? AND WHY NO AFFIDAVIT?

In January last, Mr. Peter McQuiston, of Ayr, a very well-known Scottish exhibitor and judge, had a British Bullfinch which he was exhibiting at Bathgate Show disqualified for being stained on the breast. Mr. McQuiston, while not denying the presence of colouring matter, denied that he put it there, or knew that it was there. The case was duly considered by the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club, and Mr. McQuiston received a severe sentence. Now he states that he is in a position to prove his innocence; that the person who sold him the Bullfinch admits being responsible for the staining; further, that the jealousy of certain other Scottish fanciers prevented him getting an impartial trial.

On the other hand, the fanciers implicated by Mr. McQuiston ridicule his story as a "cook and bull (finch) affair." They say that in their opinion the bird disqualified at Bathgate was the same bird that Mr. McQuiston had been winning with throughout the season (notably, 1st at Glasgow City and Glasgow W. of S. shows, and 2nd at the Scottish National show), and that the statement about the purchase of a Bullfinch is a collusive arrangement between Mr. D. Smith's friend Mr. Gemmell, and Mr. McQuiston.

Appended are details of what promises to develop into a highly sensational affair.

Some fourteen days ago—on June 26, to be precise—a communication reached us which seemed to show that more or less extraordinary developments were impending in the case of a well-known Scottish fancier who had been sentenced for exhibiting a stained bird at one of the last season fixtures in Scotland. So curious were the statements made—implicating, in one way or another, many of the leading fanciers of the day in the "land o' cakes"—that we at once despatched a representative to the spot to see what confirmation or otherwise of the said-to-be facts could be obtained. The same day, therefore, and three succeeding days, saw him in Scotland, gleaning first-hand information on what seems likely to prove one of the most sensational cases in the history of the Cage Bird Fancy.

Some Plain Facts.

Let us first of all, however, outline the circumstances—the undisputed circumstances. At Bathgate Show, held on January 16th last, a British Bullfinch was disqualified by the judge, Mr. John Brown (of Edinburgh), for being artificially coloured on the breast. The colouring matter was removed in plenty in the presence of the other judges and the officials of the show. The bird was found to be the property of Mr. P. McQuiston (of Ayr), a fancier very well known as both an exhibitor and judge of Hybrids and British birds. Mr. McQuiston (who was at the show), did not deny that the Bullfinch was stained, but stated that he himself knew nothing of the colouring matter being on the bird. The disqualification entailed one serious loss (among others, of course) to Mr. McQuiston, this being the loss of the new £7 7s. trophy shield, which was being offered that season for competition for the first time by the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club, and for which, up to the holding of Bathgate Show, he was leading in number of points scored.

The case was considered by the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club at a committee meeting held in Edinburgh on March 6th. Here Mr. McQuiston repeated that he was not personally guilty of "faking" the Bullfinch, and alleged that it must have been stained by the man from whom he bought it two days before the date of Bathgate Show. A letter, however, which came from this man, and which was read to the meeting, contained a denial of the allegation that he was the one who "got up" the bird, and said, further, that the bird was not stained when it was sold by him to Mr. McQuiston.

The committee sentenced Mr. McQuiston to expulsion from the club, and embodied in the resolution also that they would not grant their patronage to any society which should either engage him as a judge at its shows, or permit him to exhibit thereat. Here is the account of the committee's finding as sent by Mr. A. W. Watson, the S.B.B. and M.C. secretary, to the Press:—

"The case of Mr. P. McQuiston (Ayr), was concerning a Bullfinch cock, which had been disqualified for alleged painting at Bathgate Show. Mr. Jno. Brown, the judge, who disqualified the Bullfinch, was present, and he ably stated his case, and informed the meeting that he took four pads of wool running thick with stain off the bird in the presence of some of the officials of Bathgate Show. He also produced the signatures of the following, who saw the stain taken off the bird, namely, Messrs. T. R. Barkhouse, Wm. Sharp, R. Bald. Wm. Flood, and S. Ward, the other judge officiating. Mr. McQuiston admitted the bird was stained, but said that he only bought it a few days before the show. He handed in a letter to that effect from the seller, in which the latter confirmed selling the bird, and denied having stained the bird. Messrs. Brown and McQuiston then retired, and the matter having been fully discussed, it was unanimously agreed that Mr. McQuiston be expelled the club. It was also agreed after a vote that they (i.e., a Mr. Craig, who had also been expelled the club) be presented with what medals, etc., they won previous to the time of the shows concerned. It was also agreed after a vote, and almost unanimously, that all societies asking for patronage be not granted if entries be accepted from Messrs. McQuiston and Craig, or if either of the two be officiating as judges."

Under-currents.

Above, readers have been given the facts of the matter as they appear on the surface, and which are common property. It is subsequent events which have lent the case its sensational character, and which promise to make it something more than the proverbial "nine days wonder."

Being a member of the National British Bird and Mule Club, Mr. McQuiston had his case brought to the notice of the committee of that body, and at their next meeting in London they called upon him to supply an answer to the charge. He replied in similar terms to those used before the committee of the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club, adding words to the effect that he had not done with the person who sold the bird to him, but that he purposed carrying matters further against that said person. He explained that his own winning Bullfinch had knocked out some of its flight feathers, so he tried to buy Mr. Gemmell's bird, which he had previously placed 2nd at a local show. As he had then failed to detect any stain, he had no suspicion of the bird when it reached him.

The N.B.B. and M.C. Committee on this passed the following resolution (vide report published in the Press):—

"That this committee has heard no evidence that justifies it in giving a decision contrary to that arrived at by the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club respecting Mr. P. McQuiston and the exhibiting of a stained Bullfinch at Bathgate Show, but suspends its judgment for four months to enable Mr. McQuiston to take further action in the case elsewhere, if he so chooses."

The next move is made by Mr. D. Smith, a fancier residing in Edinburgh, and well known as the late secretary of the Scottish National Cage Bird Society. Mr. Smith writes concerning the McQuiston case to the chairman of the National B.B. and M.C., Mr. John Robson, with whom he is on terms of intimate personal friendship. Eventually, Mr. Smith forwards to Mr. Robson a letter which has been received by him from the person of whom Mr. McQuiston stated he bought the Bullfinch—a Mr. William Gemmell, of Dalmellington, a village some 16 or 18 miles from Ayr.

A Sensation!

This letter, sent by Mr. Gemmell to Mr. Smith, commenced, "Dear Mr. Smith," and was signed 'Your old pal, William Gemmell." It went on to say that the writer acknowledged that the Bullfinch he sold to Mr. McQuiston just before Bathgate Show was stained by him, unknown to the buyer, and that therefore Mr. McQuiston was not in any way guilty in the matter. Further, the writer stated that Mr. McQuiston had wanted to buy the bird after Ayr show (held November 21), at which he (Mr. McQuiston) had judged and awarded it second prize, but that the writer declined to sell it to him for the reason that he had "faked" it for the purpose of being exhibited at that (Ayr) show and did not want to get found out. Afterwards, when Mr. McQuiston again approached him to sell the Bullfinch, he consented, stained it again, and sent it along to the unwitting purchaser. Mr. Gemmell also expressed regret that he did not "own up" in the first place instead of writing the letter denying that he had done the staining. He said that the latter letter was actually drawn up by some fancier, not named, who was an enemy of Mr. McQuiston. This same "close friend" had also advised him to sell the bird. This letter is dated May 16.

Here was something like a sensation. The effect the reading of this letter had upon the committee can, perhaps, be imagined. Eventually it was decided that the secretary should address a request to Mr. Gemmell, in a registered envelope, asking him to confirm, or otherwise, the authenticity of the letter sent by Mr. Smith, in which he (Mr. Gemmell) admitted full responsibility for the "faking" of the Bullfinch—a crime against the laws of the Fancy for which Mr. McQuiston had been an innocent sufferer.

Exonerated by the N.B.B. and M.C.

Mr. Gemmell has replied to this letter sent by the secretary of the N.B.B. and M.C., taking the guilt wholly upon his own shoulders, and acknowledging that he wrote the letter to Mr. D. Smith which had been read to the committee of the club. He states: "The Bullfinch was stained by me and sold to Mr McQuiston." He expresses regret for the injury he has done Mr. McQuiston, and for allowing himself to be "had upon a bit of string" by others. This letter is dated June 28.

At the committee meeting of the N.B.B. and M.C., held on Wednesday last, July 7, a resolution exonerating Mr. McQuiston was unanimously carried by the members present on the evidence before them. The terms of the resolution are:—

"On the receipt of the signed acknowledgment of Mr. Gemmell, stating that he had stained the Bullfinch sold to Mr. McQuiston, and shown at Bathgate Show, this committee decide to exonerate Mr. McQuiston from all blame."

What Mr. McQuiston Has to Say.

Our representative, who spent three days in the "Land of the Thistle," gathered some remarkable information concerning the case. He saw Mr. McQuiston at his home in Ayr. He was nothing loath to give his views of the matter, and if his statements can be substantiated then they become indeed highly sensational facts.

It is alleged that he, Mr. McQuiston, a fancier of long standing, was pitched out of the Fancy—given a savage sentence—for a first offence, and an offence which was all along strongly denied. That other well-known fanciers in Scotland allowed feelings of jealousy to overcome their judgment; that they strove to remove him—a too successful man—from their path by every means which lay in their power; that having got this offence against him, they were not anxious to give credence to anything which told in his favour—in short, he could not get a fair trial.

Mr. McQuiston's story of the transaction was very simple. He said that after the Scottish National Show three of his most successful prize-winners turned "queer." They were his Twite (1st prize), Bullfinch (2nd prize), and dark yellow Goldfinch Mule (1st prize). Eventually all of them died, and the trouble he ascribed to the change from his own unheated room to that of the heated show-room, the weather being very severe at the time. Having entered a team of birds for Bathgate Show, he bethought himself of a Bullfinch he had judged at Ayr Show back in November, and given second prize—a bird which favourably impressed him, and which he had then tried to buy, but the owner declined to sell. At this time of asking, however, the owner, Mr. Gemmell, consented to part with the bird. He, Mr. McQuiston, received it on the Thursday evening before Bathgate Show, took it to Bathgate with the rest of his birds first thing on the Saturday morning, when Mr. Brown, the judge, disqualified it. He at once wrote to Mr. Gemmell asking for an explanation, and also to see him. The reply he got was a denial that the bird was "faked" when it left Dalmellington.

Mr. McQuiston spoke very bitterly as to the treatment meted out to him in this case, and said that he had been persecuted through the whole of the show season. In his opinion it was due to the jealousy of fanciers from Edinburgh and the east side of Scotland at the success he was achieving on the show-bench, and the good progress he was making in the competition for the challenge trophy of the S.B.B. and M.C., which, he said, they had made up their minds was going their way, one prominent fancier in particular having expressed his intention of winning it, and laid out a lot of money in birds for that purpose. Mr. McQuiston said it had come to his ears that certain Edinburgh fanciers were freely stating that he was winning with "faked" birds—i.e., artificially coloured—and that several judges, friends of theirs, had been urged to test them. Mr. John Brown he knew had said at the City of Glasgow show that he should "have a go at" his Bullfinch (which won 1st there) if it were shown under him. Being aware of this, asked Mr. McQuiston, should I be fool enough to knowingly put a stained Bullfinch under him at Bathgate (assuming that I had a "faked" bird), especially seeing that I had nothing to gain and everything to lose by so doing, for I only wanted to secure even one or two commendation cards to make my victory in the shield competition certain? Further, he said that some of his birds had actually been tested previously, once by a Glasgow judge, and once by Mr. Cochrane (of Edinburgh) at Dundee show, but in neither case could anything wrong be found with them.

Why Bathgate?

Again, his winning Bullfinch had been fearlessly shown all over Scotland, and stood second at the Scottish National show, held in Edinburgh only a fortnight before the date of Bathgate show. Why, he asked, was not the bird tested then, when the Edinburgh fanciers had it practically in their possession? How did it come to pass that they waited for him until Bathgate show? It seemed to him that the circumstances bore out Gemmell's story, that someone interested in his downfall had knowledge of the fact that he had had the misfortune to buy a stained bird, and that good care was then taken to see that the chance of getting him disqualified was not lost. Certain fanciers, he said, openly expressed at Bathgate their satisfaction that he had been "caught," and indulged in sundry rejoicings; he was also threatened with being "thrown out of the hall"—in fact, members of the committee had to intervene. Then, too, the committee of the Scottish B.B. and M.C. gave him no time in which to clear himself, although he put the facts, as now given, before them—they at once brought him in guilty. The affair had been a very serious blow to him, for it had put him under a highly unpleasant cloud, and lost him, among other things, all his judging engagements, for while last season he officiated at a good number of shows, he had naturally had no applications for his services for next season. He was so downhearted at one time that he was on the verge of selling out all his birds—Mr. McQuiston has a large and very fine collection—but friends who believed in him, and that all would come right in the end, persuaded him otherwise.

Mr. McQuiston acknowledged that he knew of the existence of the letter which Mr. Gemmell had written to Mr. Smith, and which the latter gentleman had forwarded to Mr. Robson. Asked why he had not at once taken steps to clear himself in the eyes of the whole Fancy by publishing the correspondence in the Fancy press, he said that he had not known what steps to take for the best—he had no one to advise him—and that he knew the matter was safe in the hands of the two gentlemen named above. He further said that he was now convinced that it would be to his best interests to have the facts brought to the light of day, and a rough draft of the case was written out by our representative and left with Mr. McQuiston, who expressed his intention of embodying in a letter, which he would send to the Press for publication, the statements of his therein set down. This letter, we may say, has not up to the present reached this office.

Our representative also ventured to point out to Mr. McQuiston that the word of Mr. Gemmell might be questioned in some quarters, seeing how unsatisfactorily he confessed to behaving — acknowledging to having "faked" a bird, and penned a gross lie. To put Mr. McQuiston in a thoroughly sound position, it was suggested that Mr. Gemmell ought to depose on oath, by means of an affidavit, that his latest version of the affair was the correct one—swear that he was guilty, and that Mr. McQuiston was innocent. To give Mr. McQuiston unanswerable proof was the least he could do, seeing the grievous injury he had wrought him. Mr. McQuiston agreed that this was so, and expressed his intention of at once compelling Mr. Gemmell to make a declaration on oath. A letter by itself, it must be remembered, would not be accepted as evidence in any court of law.

Where is the Elusive Gemmel?

Our representative left Ayr on the Monday morning, and on the afternoon of that day Mr. McQuiston went in search of the man who had done him so serious a wrong. At least, he wrote under date June 28th:

"Have just arrived back from Dalmellington, where I have spent the day in endeavouring to see Gemmell, but have had to come by last train without seeing him. This is his busiest day of the week. I cannot get away to-morrow, as that is our market day here. I left word with his wife that I had something important to say to him, and that he was to come down and see me on Wednesday. This is a day I understand that he has a bit of spare time, and I fully expect he will come. Of course, that is too late to get an affidavit for this week's paper, so we had better let the matter escape this week. I don't think there is anything to lose by letting the matter run for another week, and I will let you have the missive in good time."

P. McQUISTON.

Seven days having passed without any further word from Mr. McQuiston, our representative telegraphed to him on July 6th:

"Have letter and affidavit been sent?"

In reply to this came the following wire, dated July 6th:

"Gemmell not at home since I saw you; will write.—McQUISTON."

At time of going to press, however, no letter has come to hand. What has become of Mr. Gemmell? That he was able to receive the letter sent by the secretary of the N.B.B. and M.C., and to send a reply, seems certain. If he has vanished since then, whither has he flown? And why? If the contrition he has expressed is genuine, then surely the least he can do to wipe out the past is to place it in the power of Mr. McQuiston to uphold, beyond cavil, his innocence of the offence for which he was condemned. Further, we think it is Mr. McQuiston's duty to place such an affidavit before the Fancy—assuming the facts as given to be true he has a sure legal hold upon Mr. Gemmell, and should compel him to make this restitution. It seems to us the least Mr. McQuiston can do, seeing that this man stands self-convicted as a liar, and that on the truth of his after statements seem to depend the reputations of other fanciers. We have no hesitation in calling upon Mr. McQuiston to produce this affidavit.

Who is the Snake in the Grass?

Another important point remains: Who is the Mephistophelian plotter—the snake in the grass who got Gemmell in his toils and incited him to the ruin of McQuiston? Just as the receiver is looked upon as worse than the thief, so, we think, will the majority of fanciers consider the man or men who (according to the story) connived at the downfall of Mr. McQuiston as more deserving of being held up to public opprobrium—failing other punishment—than the man of whom they made a tool. The identity of this person or persons has not been revealed. We understand from Mr. McQuiston that he himself is (or was) "in the dark" as to who Mr. Gemmell referred to as the one who had urged him to sell the Bullfinch, and then drawn up the letter sent subsequently which denied the staining. This is surely a matter which ought to be bottomed. A person who could be guilty of such despicable scheming should not be screened. Let us have the full facts, and the whole truth, stated fearlessly, now that the case has come to its present pass. We understand that Mr. D. Smith expresses the determination to bring the alleged guilty parties to book, stating also that they are "a slippery lot." It would seem, anyway, that evidence against them ought not to be difficult to obtain. Therefore, let us have names, and not merely veiled allusions.

In the space at our command this week we have not been able to go fully into all the strange details of this interesting case. But in our next issue we shall give what we may perhaps be allowed to term the "other side." We have hinted above that certain of the fanciers concerned do not accept as correct some of the statements put forward by Mr. McQuiston. For one thing they state that, according to the published reports, no British Bullfinch was exhibited by any "Mr. Gemmell" at the Ayr show held on November 21st last, at which Mr. McQuiston judged. We have turned up the report published in CAGE BIRDS, and find the account of this particular class reads as follows:—

BULLFINCH BRIT. (8): 1, Dunsmuir, grand dense colour throughout, lovely crimson breast, nice cap, good wings, very steady; 2, Wilson, grand breast colour, good cap, fine positon, field moulted; 3, Gow, grand shaped Finch, lovely cap, back and bars; 4, Murphy; 5, Lindsay; 6, Sanderson; 7, McKay.

But space is now at an end, and we must postpone consideration of these matters.

Wild Bird Life.

Destruction of Young Birds.

It is pleasant to see the sunshine again after the cold dripping days of June. A wet summer month plays havoc among wild bird life, and the last one has been no exception to the general rule. Broods of delicate Warblers are just leaving the nest, venturing into a world of doubt and trouble; they are only partly fledged, and have little idea of danger. They need all the warmth and sunshine one expects at the time if they are to keep up their health and strength, and develop feather, bone, and sinews. So bad were the climatic conditions that many parent birds deserted the half-grown young, no doubt needing all the energy and warmth of their own bodies to sustain life. Many broods of Swallows and Martins perished, and now old birds have commenced another venture, and are again using the old nest. The young have been thrown out during the general clear up and re-lining. These young have been found in all stages of development from the tiny chick, a few days old, to the bird with pen feathers, requiring only a few days more of parental care before being able to launch out into the world. The state of affairs that causes old birds to desert their young must be quite exceptional. We know from experience that a brood of birds may be frequently visited, inspected, and even handled without the parent birds failing to attend to their wants, and how they will continue to do so even under the most trying circumstances. With a clutch of eggs it is somewhat different in many cases to frighten the bird off, and peep into the nest is sufficient to cause desertion, and to displace the contents or disarrange the rim of the structure will often spoil the hatch. It is possible an early disturbance of the nest is sufficient sign to the sitting bird that privacy is at an end, that if the brooding was continued the eggs and newly-hatched young would be always in danger. Of course we have exceptions to this rule, but these cases generally occur where the birds have been in daily contact with human beings, and to them a large garden is quite as private as the wood or plantation. As proof of this, note how quickly a bird detects the presence of a stranger, although the usual frequenters of the premises may pass and re-pass the brooding bird without more than a stare of wonder. When near hatching time birds sit closer than usual, and I once lifted a Lesser Whitethroat off the nest, replacing her upon the emerging young.

A Bird Problem.

Many sea birds build on high cliffs and rocks facing the sea, and the young ones may be seen swimming and diving before they are able to fly. In many cases the nests are so high up and situated in such peculiar places, that the young would be killed if they fell from the nest. It seems impossible for them to reach the water without assistance from the old birds. But in what way is this managed?

Clever Fliers.

However closely we may watch a flock of birds, either Gulls, Pigeons, Starlings, or others of fair size, we never see any collision between them. This is little short of the marvellous, when one considers the speed at which they fly. For although they are not at times so crowded as human beings, their speed is considerably greater. But it is possible their brains act equally quick. An instance of this is noticeable in the way in which a bird will instantly alter its flight when detecting danger.

Treatment of Young Birds.

The young of both the Kingfisher and the Dipper are driven from the vicinity of the nest as soon as they are able to fare for themselves. Both like to have a stretch of the stream for their own especial benefit, and never more than a pair are found along a river reach. The Dipper is double brooded, but the Kingfisher only rears a single brood, so that they do not drive the young away to make room for another family.
